NOTES

31. George Smith (1774–1826)

Some family sources indicate that George Smith spelled his surname "Smyth", but this seems to be a contrivance by some later family members to conceal the fact that his daughter, Mary, married his nephew, John Smith. (However, in that day and place, marriages between first cousins was not uncommon.) The names in George Smith's own Bible are spelled "Smith". (The Bible entries are transcribed below.) His own birth date varies between sources, but this seems to have been the result of misreading the date as written in his Bible. The date is 30 March, but the year has been variously given as 1774 or 1777. When my wife and I read this date from the Bible, we took it to be 1774, possibly 1776.[83]

The order of marriages as given above is undetermined, although it seems that the order as presented here may be correct.

Rebecca (Price) Smith (1777–1819)
(wife of George Smith)

Rebecca Price's birth date is taken from the George Smith Bible.

She is said to have been a descendant of Thomas Price who emigrated to Maryland in 1634 aboard the ships Ark and Dove of Maryland settlement history.[84] However, family historians have yet to ascertain a direct lineage from Thomas Price to Rebecca; gaps are in the lineage thus far determined, and accordingly the lineage is omitted here.

A worksheet page from Lathrop Mack provided scant understanding of the ancestors of Rebecca (Price) Smith, as follows:[85]

> WE ARE SEEKING through living PRATTS AND PRICES for information regarding REBECCA PRICE who married Thomas Pratt and later married George Smith as set out on the reverse side of this page. She was possibly related to the SKINNERS. We hope to learn the names of her parents, her brothers and sisters, and also hope to find BIBLE records and dates for these persons. This is a search for her ancestry, and any suggestions or clues which can be offerred [sic] by any one who sees this sheet will be very gratefully received [by] her descendants.
> This has been a very long and difficult search, because it has been started so late, and we know no other way to proceed. None of these persons, nor the other descendants or relatives so far located, are to be found n the printed Genealogies.

[83] As read from the Bible of George Smith.

[84] The Ark and Dove sailed from England on 22 Nov 1633, bound for what would become Maryland, carrying an estimated 130-150 colonists. On 20 Jun 1632, Charles I had granted a charter for the Province of Maryland to Caecilius (Cecil) Calvert, Baron of Baltimore. The Ark arrived in Barbadoes on 3 Jan 1633/34; the Dove arrived three weeks later. Together they disembarked from the West Indies and arrived at Point Comfort, Virginia Colony, 27 Feb 1633/34, where they resupplied and received additional passengers. Then the ships sailed north in Chesapeake Bay, arriving at the mouth of the Potomac River by 3 Mar 1633/34; the Dove sailed on to Piscataway, then returned to The Ark. They sailed again together, arriving at St. Clement's Island, in present-day St. Mary's County, establishing a colony there. A contemporary record of the voyage is "A Briefe Relation of the Voyage Unto Maryland, by Father Andrew White, 1634", printed in Clayton Colman Hall (ed.), Narratives of Early Maryland, 1633-1684 (Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, 1910). Documented lists of the passengers who sailed aboard the ships are doubtlessly incomplete, but a "Partial Passenger List", deemed authoritative even for individuals putatively aboard one of the ships, is maintained by The Society of The Ark and The Dove, in which membership is selective (http://www.thearkandthedove.com). information regarding his father's family. My father and his brothers had passed away some time before. My father, Mordecai was a farmer and business man who gave much time to public affairs. I remember hearing him speak of cousin Tom Pratt and of Rebecca Price. She must have been a daughter of my father's uncle. I have no record of it. I remember my father say that Rev. Jack Smith (John Edward Smith, grandson of Rebecca Price-Pratt-Smith)[86] was a relative, and I personally remember Jack well. The parents of my father, (Mordecai Price) were Basil and Elizabeth (Skinner) Price."

Mrs. Thomas R.L. Price, Centreville, wrote– ["]Our family were originally O'Price, Our great grandfather was Basil Price, who with his brothers served in the Revolutionary War. One Basic Price, and his brothers, served in the Revolutionary War, and we are informed by his descendants were paid inland that is now within the City limits of Baltimore, Md. We are told that one of Basil Price's brothers was the father of Rebecca (Price) Smith who had a sister Sallie Price, and possibly other brothers and sisters.

Rebecca (Price) Smith was born a Price of the Queen Annes County, Md. Prices, and had cousins William S., John S., Robert, and Mordecai Price who were children of Basil and Elizabeth (Skinner) Price. Mordecai Price, born 1817, was the youngest of a large family, lived at, or near Centreville, Md., was a farmer and merchant, and interested in public affairs. He had at least two children– Harry L Price, and Mrs. Mollie Price Tucker.

Rebecca Price was born Oct. 5, 1777, and apparently was the relict of Thomas Pratt and the mother of Bennett, Tom, and Ann Pratt (born, 1800, 1802, 1805) at the time she married George Smith (or Smyth), on January 28, 2808. She died (near Centreville?) on Oct. 11, 1819.

We have the record copied form her daughter's Bible, which gives these dates, and the births of her Smith children etc.

Elizabeth Mack Munger's genealogical correspondence includes the comment,

> Believe Rebecca Price was dau. of Mordecai Price, b 28 Nov, 1733 and wife Rachel Moore, b 17 May 1741 who were married at Gunpowder M[d]. 27d, 12 mo, 1759.[87]

A day earlier, Elizabeth Munger had written to another genealogical contact, with an outline of her understanding of the incomplete lineage. Unfortunately, the matter remains just as unresolved. The letter is as follows:[88]

Thank you so much for your helpful letter about the Price line. Just after I received it, I went to Cleveland to attend the Great Lakes Shakespeare Festival. My hostess took me down to New Philadelphia, O., to see 'Trumpet in the Land.'[89]

I notice that your grandparents were married in that very interesting town.

Some of my mother's Price ancestors were from Baltimore, as yours were. I made a sort of chart from the notes I have. I cannot be sure if I have all the generations, because it seems I should have 10 or 11 instead of eight. What I need is to study a Price genealogy. Perhaps the Fort Wayne library will have the 1913 volume that you spoke of. I can see the McKenzie volume of Colonial Families at Valparaiso Library. My mother's line includes Davis, Manlove, Price, Smith and Smyth (same family[)], and Moore. Some of them were Quakers.

Perhaps her first Mordecai was a brother of your Thomas, son of the immigrant. This is what I seem to come up with:

1. Thomas Price of The Ark & The Dove

2 Mordecai ["Thomas" is written in above this name] Price of West River, Md. mar. Mary Parsons

3. Mordecai Price A.A.Co. (Baltimore) mar. 28 Feb/ 1727 (I believe one or two generations must have been left out before this because on your chart the 3rd generation the Mordecai of West River married Mary Parsons in 1685! I just noticed that as I was typing it. So there we have the common ancestor! Maybe now I will be able to find wills and marriage records to carry things on forward.

5. Mordecai Price 28 Nov. 1733 mar. 17 Dec 1759 Rachel Moore 17 May 1741 They were Quakers and I believe I found the marriage record 5 June 1822 I will look through my papers to check on this.

Hurray! This has given me hope! I have 109 typed pages of family history done by my uncle[90], but a lot needs to be documented.

So far I have not had good results form trying to get a lineage researcher in the Eastern Shore regions of Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, and New Jersey. In New Jersey I have to search for Wells, Sharp, and Sevil families. If you know of somebody in that region who does good work at a reasonable price, I would like to have the name. Now that I have this start I can do a lot on my own. Thanks a million.

[89] "Trumpet In the Land" is the performance written by Pulitzer prize-winning playwright Paul Green, and performed at an outdoor theater in southeastern New Philadelphia, Ohio. The performance, Ohio's first outdoor theater, had newly begun when seen by Munger in 1977. It is still being performed today at the Schoebruun Amphitheatre, where also other theatrical performances are presented. "Trumpet In the Land" relates to the history of Ohio's first settlement, Schoenbruun, where Moravian missionary David Zeisberger founded an American Indian settlement on the Ohio frontier in 1772. [90] Edward Seville Smith's "Smith Genealogy".

Some sources show that Mordecai and Rachel Moore Price had a son, Levi, born 6 November 1777.

Rebecca Price, George Smith's first or second wife, was also the wife of Thomas Pratt (see Pratt Family collateral genealogy, below); she may have been a sister or cousin to Rachel Price, the other of George Smith's wives.

The following excerpt about the Pratt and Price connections is from Edward S. Smith's "Smith Genealogy", which still reflects the understanding of these putative family relations with which later Elizabeth Munger had worked, inconclusively:[91]

> Rebecca Pratt Smith, nee Price, was the relict of Thomas Pratt and their children were: Bennett Pratt, born December 4, 1800; Thomas Pratt, born September 15, 1802; and Ann Pratt, born March 10, 1805. These three Pratt children were step-children of her husband, George Smith, and half-brothers and sisters as to the children of George Smith and Rebecca Pratt Smith, nee Price. The Prices and Pratts were early settlers in Queen Anne's County, especially in the area of Queenstown and to the south-east of Centreville, and owners of much land there.
> Mrs. Mary F. Price, wife of William Tucker, said that her father was Mordicai Price, born in 1817, who married Mary C. Turner, and that she was one of six children of that marriage. The parents of her father were Basil Price and Elizabeth Skinner, his wife, and their children were: William S. Price, John S. Price, Thomas Price, who went to Indiana, and the said Mordicai Price. The above William S. Price had a son, R. M. Price, Centreville.
> Mrs. Mary Price Tucker said that her father Mordicai Price was a local farmer near Centreville and active in public affairs. He often spoke of his cousin Tom Pratt and of Rebecca Price, born 1777; she remembered Jack Smith[92] well and that he was the grandson of Rebecca Pratt Smith, nee Price. The[y] thought Rebecca Price must have been the daughter of an uncle.
> The Progenitor of the Price family was Thomas Price of England who came on the "Art [sic] and Dove" [two ships, the Ark and the Dove]. He married Elizabeth Phillips of Calvert County; they had (with others) Mordicai Price of West River, who married Mary Parsons; they had Mordicai Price of Ann Arundel County, Baltimore, who married on February 28, 1727, Elizabeth White; and they had Mordicai Price, born November 28, 1733, and married on December 17, 1759 Rachel Moore, who was born May 17, 1741 and died June 5, 1822, Quakers. It has been suggested that our Rachel Price is the daughter of this Mordicai Price and Rachel Moore Price, his wife.
> Mordicai Price appears frequently in the line and when Baltimore was laid out in 1729-30, lot No. 55 was assigned to Mordicai Price.
> Basil Price and his brothers were in the Revolutionary War and Census of 1820 in Queen Anne's County.
> Cousin Julia Ann Baynard Martin wrote to Roberta [Smith Mack] in 1924 that Roberta's grandmother and her great aunt, Mary Smith, was the daughter of George Smith and Rachel Price

[91] "Smith Genealogy", pp. 27-29. After the death of Edward Smith, Elizabeth Mack Munger also seems to have pursued the problem of the family's Price lineage, but so far as is known she found no substantial leads toward resolving the matter before her death in 1990. Also see the preface to the Smith family genealogy, in which is transcribed the status of understanding of this problem, in a letter from J. Lathrop Mack in 1934, some thirty years earlier than Edward S. Smith's narrative.

and was a cousin of William B., John S. and Mordicai Price, and that Rachel Price was of a Queen Anne's County family. Aunt Sallie Smith Taylor's name was Sarah Rebecca Price Smith.

About 10 miles from Centreville and just beyond Ruthsburg is the old Pratt Mansion, later a County Alms House. The Pratt lands were extensive and it was said they could drive 7 miles toward Centreville without getting off their lands. The Pratts were patriots and contributed largely of their means to further the Revolutionary War.

In 1860, George Moore Smith, son of George and Rebecca Pratt Smith (nee Price) with John S. Price and Mordicai Price, signed Guardianship Bonds for the orphaned children of his sister, Mary Smith Smith, Queen Anne's County, Maryland.

These Pratt and Price landholdings were in the general area of those of George and Rebecca Pratt Smith, nee Price, Queenstown and Centreville area.

Bennett Pratt lived at Sudlersville in 1937.

48. Nancy Smith

She moved West to Ohio in 1810 with her uncle, Robert Smith [No. 32], and his family (see under James Smith, No. 24). Nothing more is known of her or Robert Smith's family.

50. Rachel Smith (1810–after 1860)

She never married. She made her home with John Covington, in Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; he was the second husband of her cousin, Katherine Smith Covington [No. 47].

Family Records in the Bible of George Smith (1777–1826)

The Bible owned by George Smith is a handsome volume published by Matthew Carey, Philadelphia, 1808. It was rebound and further annotated by George Moore Smith (born 1812), son of George Smith.

The following transcriptions were made by Jane Anderson and Earle Spamer, 26 September 2004. At the time, the Bible was in the possession of Nadia (Smith) Synnestvedt, 3rd great-granddaughter of George Smith's brother, James; she had received it from Helen (Montgomery) McCarraher, 2nd great-granddaughter of James Smith. As of 2007, the Bible remains with Synnestvedt.

Smith Family genealogy continues after the following collateral genealogy

Pratt Family
Collateral Genealogy
(7 descendants)

The genealogy of the Pratt family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Henry Pratt

Generation No. 1

1. Henry[1] Pratt died between 05-14 November 1751 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. He married Elizabeth. She died before November 1751.

Children of Henry Pratt and Elizabeth are:

	2	i.	Robert[2] Pratt.
+	3	ii.	Thomas Pratt, born 1743; died 1806.
	4	iii.	Henry Pratt, born about 1745.
	5	iv.	John Pratt, born 1746.
	6	v.	Benjamin Pratt, born 1748.
	7	vi.	Rebecca Pratt, born 1750.

NOTES

The will of Henry Pratt (–1751) [No. 1] is dated 5 November 1751; probate 14 November 1751.[94] The will does not mention his wife, thus she is assumed to be deceased.

Generation No. 2

3. Thomas[2] Pratt (Henry[1]) was born 1743, and died 1806. He married Rebecca Price 1799. She was born 05 October 1777 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died 11 October 1819 in Baltimore, Maryland.

[Rebecca Price also married George Smith; see the entry in the main Smith genealogy, No. 31.]

NOTES

The 1790 U.S. census for Maryland lists one head-of-family Thomas Pratt; he is living in Queen Anne's Co. In this household are itemized four white males at least 16 years of age, three white males under 16, three white females, and four slaves. This is likely to be Thomas Pratt the subject here, and possibly he had a first wife and family.

Also of note on the same page of the 1790 census are the following, all listed within ten lines (households) of each other in the right-hand column:

[format: number of white males 16 or over / white males under 16 / white females / slaves]

Thomas Price (2 / 2 / 4 / 1), perhaps a relation to Rebecca Price, Thomas Pratt's wife
Elizabeth Pratt (1 / 0 / 3 / 0), perhaps Thomas's mother, thus indicating his father, Henry, is deceased
Elizabeth Price (0 / 0 / 3 / 0), perhaps a relation to Rebecca Price
Henry Price (1 / 3 / 2 / 3), perhaps a relation to Rebecca Price
William Price (1 / 1 / 3 / 0), perhaps a relation to Rebecca Price
William Pratt (1 / 0 / 2 / 3), perhaps a relation to Thomas Pratt

[94] Maryland Prerogative Court (Wills), Liber 28, folio 212.

> The 1800 census for Maryland lists two Thomas Pratts as head of family, one living in Queen Anne's Co. But this household includes only two males, both under the age of 26. As the census is listed in approximately alphabetical order, the geographical distribution of associated names within the county is not readily discerned. Also listed in this census of Queen Anne's Co., as heads of households, are: R. James Pratt, Nathaniel(?) Pratt, Philemon Pratt, William Pratt, and Henry Pratt Esq.; and (among Prices) Thomas Price, John Price, Elizabeth Price (two separate households), William Price (three households), William Price Jr., James Price, Mary Price, Christopher Price, Thomas Price, M. Elizabeth Price, and James Price.

34. Joseph Moore[5] Smith (James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 22 January 1782, and died 10 April 1863. He married (1) Rachel Spry 01 December 1804 in Kent Co., Maryland. She was born about 1786. He married (2) Elizabeth Lavine 21 November 1816. He married (3) Frances Rollingson 05 September 1826. She died 26 February 1829. He married (4) Elizabeth T. Wilkinson 17 April 1829 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, daughter of Christopher Wilkinson and Sarah DeRochbrune. She was born about 1810, and died 18 October 1836. He married (5) Jane Sparks 14 April 1838. She was born 26 July 1816, and died 29 April 1848.

See below for collateral genealogical sketches of the Wilkinson and DeRochbrune families.

Children of Joseph Smith and Rachel Spry are:

54 i. Sarah Ann[6] Smith, born 09 August 1808; died 18 February 1830.
55 ii. Louisa Smith, born 17 June 1810; died 01 April 1832.
\+ 56 iii. James Smith, born 01 December 1811; died 23 May 1844.

Children of Joseph Smith and Elizabeth Lavine are:

57 i. Martha Jane[6] Smith, born 15 September 1816; died 04 September 1856. She married Joseph Mann 23 February 1837.
58 ii. Francis Ann Smith, born 23 January 1821 in Maryland; died 25 May 1853. She married Nathaniel Sparks. He was born about 1829 in Maryland.

Children of Joseph Smith and Elizabeth Wilkinson are:

\+ 59 i. Joseph Edmund[6] Smith, born 01 September 1830 in Maryland; died 1910.
\+ 60 ii. George Washington Smith, born 22 February 1833 in Maryland; died 28 September 1908.

Children of Joseph Smith and Jane Sparks are:

61 i. Susan Ann[6] Smith, born 11 September 1840; died after 1919. She married James Dixon Carville 24 May 1859; born about 1835 in Maryland.
62 ii. Helen Smith, born 20 January 1842; died 02 September 1853.
\+ 63 iii. Wilhelmina Elmina Smith, born 16 September 1842; died 08 August 1934.
64 iv. Rachel Kent Smith, born 10 February 1845; died 30 May 1873.
65 v. Enoch George Smith, born 14 January 1847; died 07 September 1866.

NOTES

34. Joseph Moore Smith (1782–1863)
"Joey"

Family historical notes record that Joseph Moore Smith rented Masey's farm in Kent Co. He appears in the U.S. censuses for Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, beginning in 1810. Those censuses, in which only the grouped ages of household members are indicated, appear to show his various marriages and growing families. However, given that we do not know who all of these people were, nor do we know whether the numbers include children who were never known to the family history, these early censuses through 1840 only suggest that they record the family of interest here.

Joseph Moore Smith was a slave-holder until his death. The slave schedule for the 1850 U.S. census for the 2nd District, Queen Anne's Co., lists "Joseph H. Smith" as holding eight slaves. The 1850 census of "free" people lists Joseph M. Smith next to Martin Tschudy [the correct spelling], and the accompanying slave schedule for the census lists "Joseph H. Smith" next to "Martin Schuddy" [incorrect spelling], which satisfactorily demonstrates that the two Smith entries do refer to the same person. The 1850 slave schedule lists Smith as holding eight people, five males, ages 8 to 28, and three females, ages 11 to 26. The slave schedule for the 1860 census, 2nd District, Queen Anne's Co., lists Joseph M. Smith holding 23 slaves; eleven males, ages 1 to 36, and twelve females, ages 1 to 24.

It seems that Joseph M. Smith could have been the "Joseph Smith" who was selected to a committee on resolutions that was established at a January 1846 slave-holders meeting in Centreville. Frederic Emory took note of this in his history of Queen Anne's Co.: [95]

> The resolutions affirmed the right of property in slaves, and declared that "the frequent instances of the abduction of our slaves by undue and unlawful means, by the aid of ill-designing and wicked men, require that effectual steps be taken to arrest the growing evil."

In the 1850 and 1860 U.S. censuses, Joseph M. Smith is listed as a farmer.

Residences of Joseph M. Smith (from U.S. censuses):
1840: 1st/2nd District, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland
1850, 1860: 2nd District, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland

Joseph Moore Smith is buried in Church Hill Cemetery, Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Rachel (Spry) Smith (ca. 1786–)
(wife of Joseph Moore Smith)

Rachel Spry was the sister of David Spry (about whom there is no further information at hand for this genealogy).

Elizabeth (Lavine) Smith
(wife of Joseph Moore Smith)

On the genealogical scroll by Edward S. Smith, which accompanies the "Smith Genealogy", Elizabeth Lavine's surname appears to be spelled "Sevine", but this might be an artifact of Smith's handwriting.

Frances (Rollingson) Smith (–1829)
(wife of Joseph Moore Smith)

Another possible date of marriage for Joseph Smith and Frances Rollingson is 25 September 1826.

Elizabeth (Wilkinson) Smith (ca. 1810–1836)
(wife of Joseph Moore Smith)
"Betty"

Regarding Joseph Smith's marriage to Elizabeth T. Wilkinson, the Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, Marriage Records, 1817-1858, provide a 17 August date for the marriage of "Joseph K. Smith" [sic] and "Elizabeth T. Wilkenson" [sic], officiated by "Rev. Cuff"; whether this refers to the Smith–Wilkinson marriage that is the subject here is undetermined. A family record gives the date of marriage as 17 April 1829. The family of Elizabeth Wilkinson has its own very extended relationships, one group of which is outlined below only for its historical interest.

Jane (Sparks) Smith (1816–1848)
(wife of Joseph Moore Smith)

Another possible date of marriage between Joseph Smith and Jane Sparks is 3 April 1838. The date of death for Jane Sparks Smith from her grave marker[96] is given as 29 April 1846, and her age as 31 years, 9 months, 3 days (which if correct yields a birth date of 1814). However, since there is only a discrepancy between 1846 and 1848, the marker reading may have been in error. She is buried in the Church Hill Cemetery, Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Children of Joseph and Rachel (Spry) Smith

Sarah Ann Smith (1808–1830) [No. 54] and Louisa Smith (1810–1832) [No. 55] never married.

Children of Joseph and Elizabeth (Levine) Smith

Martha Jane (Smith) (1816–1856) [No. 57] and her husband, Joseph Mann, resided in Kent Co., Maryland. One Joseph Mann has been located in the 1840 U.S. census, listed in the 2nd District, Kent Co. There are listed for this household four males, two in age group 30-39, and one each for age groups 5-9 and under 10; and three females, one each in age groups 20-29, 15-19, and 5-9. Given that Martha was about 24 years of age at the time of this census, and that the household included several young children, is a fair indication that this registration records the household for our family members.

At the time of the 1850 U.S. census, Francis Ann (Smith) Sparks (1821–1853) [No. 58] and her husband, Nathaniel Sparks, resided in the 3rd District, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. He was a farmer. At that time they apparently had no children. They are listed on the same census sheet with Capt. John Smith's family and Joseph William Wesley Watson. Nathaniel Sparks has not been located in subsequent censuses.

Children of Joseph and Jane (Sparks) Smith

Susan Ann (Smith) Carville (1840–after 1919) [No. 61], known as "Susie", and her husband, James D. Carville, lived on the east side of Kent Island, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. In the 1860, 1870, 1880, and 1900 U.S. censuses, they are listed in the 4th District; in the 1860 and 1870 censuses under the Broad Creek post office. He was a farmer. James and Susan Carville did not have children of their own, as confirmed by information reported by her in the 1900 census.

At the time of the 1870 census, residing in the Carville household other than domestic servants and farm laborers was "Allis B. Wilby", aged 7, whose identity is clarified in the 1880 census as a child taken in. At the time of the 1880 census, James and Susan Carville have in their household two girls who are accompanied by the notation, "took to raise": "Allay B. Welby", aged 17, and Carrie K. Ringgold, aged 10. Whether they were taken in or formally adopted, and the circumstances under which they were taken in, are not known. At the time of the 1900 census, Susan and James Carville resided by themselves, with two domestic servants each listed as "Chambermaid": Sadie M. Clark, aged 14; and Irene Justice, aged 9(!).

Helen Smith (1842–1853) [No. 62] is listed in the "Smith Genealogy" with dates 23 February 1839 to 7 December 1853. She is buried in Church Hill Cemetery, Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Rachel Kent Smith (1845–1873) [No. 64] never married. At the time of the 1870 census, she resided with her sister and brother-in-law, Susan and James Carville. Rachel is buried in Church Hill Cemetery, Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Enoch George Smith (1847–1866) [No. 65] is buried in Church Hill Cemetery, Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

The Perry Relations to the Wilkinsons: Historical Note

The grand-nephew of Elizabeth T. (Wilkinson) Smith, John Wilkinson (1808-1889) married Elizabeth DeRochbrune (1826-1902). Their daughter, Adeline Maria Wilkinson (1860-1895) married John Mackey Perry (1857-1923), which introduced these respective families to another interesting, but very extended, family relationship of historical interest. Inasmuch as the connection is so far removed from the present Smith genealogy, it is mentioned here because one may wonder what family stories were told during these times, relating to "distant cousins", or perhaps wrongly accrued to closer relatives. Accordingly, the following is presented only in narrative form since the genealogy has no real bearing on our immediate family. This is yet another example of how, through just a few connecting marriages, interesting historical assets are accommodted in the family.[97]

The Perrys were a family of seafarers, and one of their granddaughters married into the wealthy and accomplished Belmont family, as noted farther below. Capt. Christopher Raymond Perry (1761-1818) was born and died in Newport, Rhode Island. He married Sarah Alexander (1768-1830) in the home of Dr. Benjamin Rush, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; she was born in Newry, County Down, Ireland. They had eight children, including two who attained the rank of Commodore in the U.S. Navy. Capt. Perry was a privateer who was appointed to the U.S. Navy in 1799, retiring in 1801. He commanded the General Green, on which his son, Oliver Hazard Perry, also served.

Commo. Oliver Hazard Perry (1785-1819) was commissioned as Midshipman on 7 April 1799 and first served under his father who commanded the frigate General Greene during cruises to the West Indies and Louisiana. O. H. Perry also served aboard the ships Adams, Constellation, Constitution, and Essex, notable in their own rights, and served twice during the Tripolitan War. He was promoted to Lieutenant on 15 January 1807 and was, later, acquitted of charges related to the loss of the Revenge off Watch Hill, Rhode Island, on 8 January 1811. He commanded naval elements in Lake Erie during the War of 1812, including the brig Niagara for which his most well known. He was appointed master-commandant of the Brooklyn Navy Yard on 7 January 1833, where he served for ten years.

Oliver Hazard Perry married Elizabeth Champlin Mason on 5 May 1811. They had two children. Commo. Perry died aboard the U.S. schooner Nonesuch on 23 August 1819, on the Orinoco River near Angostura, Venezuela. He was buried originally in Port Spain, Island of Trinidad, was removed briefly to the Old Common Burial Ground in Newport, Rhode Island, and finally later removed to Island Cemetery, in Newport.

Matthew Calbraith Perry (1794-1858), brother of Oliver Hazard, is most well known for having commanded the U.S. naval fleet that visited Japan in 1854, which at last opened the Japanese empire to outside trade and diplomatic communication. He married Jane Slidell; they had four children, including a son, Matthew junior, who continued the family's naval tradition. Matthew Perry (senior) was buried in Island Cemetery, Newport, Rhode Island.

Following for a moment another collateral line, one of Matthew Calbraith Perry's children, Sarah C. Perry, married Col. Robert Smith Rodgers. His father was Commo. John Rodgers (1771–1838), who removed to Philadelphia and served in the U.S. Navy 1798-1838, was First Lieutenant aboard the U.S.S. Constellation during her maiden voyage, was instrumental in the defense of Baltimore during the War of 1812, was President of the Board of Navy Commissioners (1815-1824 and 1827-1837), was for two weeks in 1923 Acting Secretary of the Navy, and the father-in-law of Gen. Montgomery C. Meigs, of another prominent Philadelphia family. Commo. John Rodgers' father was Col. John Rodgers (1728–1791), who during the Revolutionary War raised and commanded a company of Maryland Militia, and who in 1781 purchased what became known as Rodgers Tavern in Perryville, Cecil Co., Maryland, positioned on the Post Road between Philadelphia and Baltimore at the Lower Ferry Crossing on the Susquehanna River, which was used by Gen. Washington during the campaign against Cornwallis at Yorktown (the tavern is a historic site today). [98]

The tavern is also known as "Stevenson's Tavern", located at Broad Street and River Road in Perryville. It is listed on the National Register of Historic Places and has been described in the survey of historic sites by the Maryland Historical Trust. The tavern is a two-story stone structure with a raised porch on its south façade. The Maryland Historical Trust notes: "Rodgers Tavern is of national importance due to the frequent visits of George Washington between the years 1755 and 1798. Colonel John Rodgers (1728-1791), the owner during most of Washington's visits, was the progenitor of the Rodgers family which distinguished itself in the formation and growth of the United States Navy. Also, the visits of other distinguished persons, namely Martha Washington, Lafayette, Matthew Calbraith Perry (junior) (about 1821–1873) was appointed Midshipman on 1 June 1835 and first served aboard the frigate Potomac. He later was acting master of the brig Somers during its first cruise and its famous mutiny. He later joined the U.S. Army and served on the staff of Gen. Robert Patterson. In the service of the U.S. Navy again he was promoted to Lieutenant on 3 April 1840 and served seven years in the U.S. Coast Survey. On 4 April 1867 he was promoted to Captain.

Another son of the progenitor, Christopher Raymond Perry, was Nathaniel Hazard Perry, who was an officer in the U.S. Navy. His son, James Alexander Perry, graduated form the U.S. Military Academy at West Point in 1851 and first served in operations against the Seminoles. He was appointed Assistant Professor of Mathematics at West Point, 1852-1857; later appointed Captain in the Quartermaster's Department, serving during the Civil War as Chief Quartermaster in the Department of Florida. On 20 April 1862 he was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel of Volunteers, in 1864 to Colonel in the Quartermaster's Department, Bvt. Brigadier General for service in the Quartermaster's Department; commissioned Major 29 July 1866, Lieutenant Colonel 3 March 1875. In 1888 he was Assistant Quartermaster-General for the Division of the Pacific.

Jane Tweedy Perry, a daughter of progenitor Christopher Raymond Perry, married Dr. William Butler, a U.S. Navy physician. Their son, Matthew Calbraith Butler, went on to become a U.S. Senator from South Carolina.

Christopher Grant Perry (1812-1854), a son of Oliver Hazard Perry, married Frances Sergeant in 1838; she was the daughter of Thomas Sergeant and Sarah Bache (1817-1903, about whom see in the Franklin connections in Appendix 2 of the present genealogy).

Caroline Slidell Perry (1829-1892), a daughter of Matthew Calbraith Perry (senior), married August Belmont (1816-1890) in 1849, son of Simon and Frederika (Elsass) Belmont.[99] August Belmont, born in Alzey, France, became the U.S. Charge d'Affaires to the Netherlands, 1853-1854; U.S. Minister to the Netherlands 1854-1857; and was chairman of the Democratic National Committee during 1860-1868. He was occupied in banking and used his considerable influence during the Civil War to gain the support of English and French merchants for the Union cause. August Belmont had a love for horse racing and established the Belmont Stakes, which first ran in 1867 and today is one of the Triple Crown races. August and Caroline (Perry) Belmont had three children.

Perry Belmont (1851-1947), a son of August and Caroline Belmont, became a U.S. Representative from New York, 1881-1888, from which position he resigned. He was U.S. Minister to Spain, 1888-1890. He served at the rank of Major during the Spanish-American War.

August Belmont (junior) (1853-1924), a son of August and Caroline Belmont, was a well known financier and sportsman in the New York community. Under his direction the Interborough subway system of New York was completed in 1904, and the Cape Cod Canal, which officially opened to traffic on 29 July 1914. He married, first, Elizabeth Hamilton Morgan in 1881 (died 1898), and, second, Eleanor Elise Robson in 1910. Eleanor Robson Belmont was an actress and writer who gave up those occupations when she married; but she went on to become the first woman on the board of directors of the Metropolitan Opera Association, in 1933, and she founded the Metropolitan Opera Guild in 1935.

Oliver Hazard Perry Belmont (1858-1908), another son of August Belmont (senior), continued the family tradition of public service but especially had a taste for the high life, bringing into the family some difficult relations. He had been admitted to the U.S. Naval Academy but was dismissed in his difficulties with the strict regimen; but with political influence through the family's long and historic naval traditions, he was readmitted and graduated in 1880. He served at the rank of Ensign on a ship in China, then resigned from the Navy in 1882. Later that year he married socialite Sarah Swan Whiting against the objections of his parents (politely covered over for the sake of high society); but their honeymoon ended in separation and divorce due to his alcoholism and perhaps the accompaniment of his mother-in-law and two sisters-in-law. A daughter born of the marriage, after the divorce, was raised as Natica Rives, her stepfather's name. In 1896, Oliver married Alva Erskine Smith [no family relation] (1853-1933). Oliver H. P. Belmont became a U.S. Representative for New York, 1901-1903. He built the mammoth "cottage" of Belcourt Castle, in Newport, Rhode Island, which was owned by Alva Belmont until her death, bequeathed to Oliver's grand-nephew, August Belmont IV, then by Perry Belmont until his death in 1940, and which then remained unoccupied until its sale in 1956. In 2006, Belmont Castle remained a private residence of the Tinney family, opened as a public museum of art and architecture. After the death of Oliver H. P. Belmont, Alva Belmont became involved in the women's suffrage movement. She died in her Paris home, a historic castle given by King Charles VII to Jacques Coeur ca. 1425.

He married Mahalah Chipley 04 July 1843 in Burrisville, Caroline Co., Maryland, daughter of Joshua Chipley and Sarah Hayward. She was born about 10 November 1810, and died 26 May 1904 in Hillsboro, Caroline Co., Maryland.

Children of William Wilkinson and Mahalah Chipley are:

\+ 65 i. Anne DeRochbrune[10] Wilkinson, born 11 April 1844; died 13 May 1931.
\+ 66 ii. William James Wilkinson, born 30 June 1846; died 25 April 1918.
67 iii. Sarah Elizabeth Wilkinson, born 19 January 1849; died 12 June 1849.
\+ 68 iv. John Marion Wilkinson, born 04 October 1850; died 22 August 1898.
69 v. J. Tillotson Wilkinson, born 26 May 1854; died 30 May 1854.
70 vi. Lizzie Ellen Wilkinson, born 11 March 1857; died 03 June 1858.
\+ 71 vii. Marietta Wilkinson, born 30 November 1859; died 1925.

NOTES

William Wilkinson (1818–1880) [No. 51] and his wife, Mahalah (Chipley) Wilkinson (1810–1904) are buried in the cemetery of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, St. John's Parish, Church St., Hillsboro, Caroline Co., Maryland. William's grave marker lists his date of birth as 8 April 1819, and Mahalah's marker lists her date of birth as 20 November 1820.[101]

52. Sarah Anne[9] Wilkinson (Christopher[8], Nathan[7], Thomas[6], Christopher[5], John[4], John[3], Christopher[2], Christopher[1]) was born 04 March 1823 in Jumptown, Caroline Co., Maryland, and died 28 March 1869. She married Robert Edwin Wilson 20 July 1857 in Jumptown, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. He was born about 18 November 1830, and died 02 August 1877.

Children of Sarah Wilkinson and Robert Wilson are:

\+ 72 i. Marion DeRochbrune[10] Wilson, born 27 August 1857 in Caroline Co., Maryland; died 13 March 1891 in 628 E. Sixth St., Wilmington, New Castle, Delaware.
\+ 73 ii. Mary Elmyra Wilson, born 06 December 1861; died 03 March 1903.
74 iii. Anna Marie Wilson, born 30 April 1869; died 07 May 1872.

[101] Cemeteries of Caroline County, Maryland, Vol. 2, p. 132.

NOTES

Sarah (Wilkinson) Wilson (1823–1869) [No. 52] is buried in the Wilson family cemetery, Crouse Mill Rd., Jumptown, Caroline Co., Maryland.

An alternate name for Robert Edwin Wilson, husband of Sarah Anne Wilkinson, is Robert Terrell Wilson. He is buried n the Wilson family cemetery.

There is a discrepancy between the calculated birth date for Anna Marie Wilson (1869–1872) [No. 74] and the death date of her mother. The dates listed in the present sketch indicate this discrepancy, taken from cemetery records for the Wilson family cemetery, Crouse Mill Rd., Jumptown, Caroline Co., Maryland.[102]

10 viii. Frances DeRochbrune, born about 1737. She married Jonathan Harrison.

NOTES

The will of Joseph DeRochbrune (senior) (before 1695–ca.1752/53) [No. 2] is dated 16 November 1752; probate 29 March 1753.[103] He was a Roman Catholic. The property "Vaughans Kindness" is indicated to have been 300 acres in Tuckahoe Neck. The will also takes note of nine slaves.

A possible son of Joseph Spencer and Mary (DeRochbrune) Spencer (ca. 1729–after November 1752) [No. 6] is Philemon Spencer, who inherited "Vaughans Kindness" upon the death of his cousin, John DeRochbrune [see No. 11], in 1794.

Generation No. 3

3. John[3] DeRochbrune (Joseph[2], Lewis[1] DeRochburne) was born about 1726 in Kent Island Plantation, Talbot Co., Maryland, and died about April 1761 in Vaughns Kindness, Hillsboro, Caroline Co., Maryland. He married Mary.

Children of John DeRochbrune and Mary are:
+ 11 i. John[4] DeRochbrune, born 07 January 1758 in Vaughns Kindness, Hillsboro, Caroline Co., Maryland; died about November 1794.
12 ii. Ann DeRochbrune, born 02 January 1760 in Vaughns Kindness, Hillsboro, Caroline Co., Maryland.
+ 13 iii. Mathew DeRochbrune, born about 1761 in Vaughns Kindness, Hillsboro, Caroline Co., Maryland; died October 1804.

Generation No. 4

11. John[4] DeRochbrune (John[3], Joseph[2], Lewis[1] DeRochburne) was born 07 January 1758 in Vaughns Kindness, Hillsboro, Caroline Co., Maryland, and died about November 1794. He married Mary Boone 16 July 1782 in Caroline Co., Maryland. She died after 1794.

Children of John DeRochbrune and Mary Boone are:
14 i. Jacob[5] DeRochbrune, died after 1794. He married Polly Welsh 20 February 1810 in Caroline Co., Maryland.
15 ii. Peregrine DeRochbrune, died after 1784.
16 iii. Mary DeRochbrune, died after 1794.

NOTES

The will of John DeRochbrune (1758–ca. 1794) [No. 11] of Caroline Co., Maryland, is dated 14 October 1794; probate 4 December 1794.[104] It lists his "son", Philemon Spencer, to whom he left his plantation, "Vaughan's Kindness". Philemon Spencer may be a son of Joseph and Mary DeRochbrune Spencer; she was an aunt to John DeRochbrune.

13. Mathew[4] DeRochbrune (John[3], Joseph[2], Lewis[1] DeRochburne) was born about 1761 in Vaughns Kindness, Hillsboro, Caroline Co., Maryland, and died October 1804. He married Sarah Wooters 17 July 1780 in Caroline Co., Maryland.

Children of Mathew DeRochbrune and Sarah Wooters are:

17 i. Elizabeth[5] DeRochbrune, born about 1785 in Caroline Co., Maryland; died between 1805-1811. She married Samuel Jones.

\+ 18 ii. Sarah DeRochbrune, born about 1789; died 23 September 1839.

19 iii. Margaret DeRochbrune, born about 1790.

20 iv. John DeRochbrune, born about 1791 in Caroline Co., Maryland; died between 1805-1811.

21 v. Thomas DeRochbrune, born about 1793 in Vaughns Kindness, Hillsboro, Caroline Co., Maryland; died 15 August 1875 in Caroline Co., Maryland. He married (1) Ann Maria Downes 10 February 1820. He married (2) Margarett Orell 27 September 1842; born 1793; died 13 March 1873.

22 vi. Louis DeRochbrune, born about 1795.

23 vii. Mary DeRochbrune, born about 1798.

Generation No. 5

18. Sarah[5] DeRochbrune (Mathew[4], John[3], Joseph[2], Lewis[1] DeRochburne) was born about 1789, and died 23 September 1839. She married Christopher Wilkinson, son of Nathan Wilkinson and Sophia. He was born 1776.

Children of Sarah DeRochbrune and Christopher Wilkinson are:

24 i. John[6] Wilkinson, born 25 April 1808 in Ruthsburg, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died 13 March 1889.

25 ii. Elizabeth T. Wilkinson, born about 1810; died 18 October 1836. She married Joseph Moore Smith 17 August 1829 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, son of James Smith and Susanna Moore. He was born 22 January 1782, and died 10 April 1863.

27 iv. Christopher Wilkinson, born about 1812 in Queen Anne's County, Maryland; died 10 January 1890.

28 v. Thomas H. Wilkinson, born about 1814; died 13 March 1849.

29 vi. William Wilkinson, born 08 April 1818 in Queen Anne's County, Maryland; died 09 December 1880 in Pikeville, Baltimore, Maryland.

30 vii. Sarah Anne Wilkinson, born 04 March 1823 in Jumptown, Caroline Co., Maryland; died 28 March 1869.

End of Wilkinson and DeRochbrune Families collateral genealogy

36. William[5] Smith (James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) died before 1863. He married Mary.

\+ 66 i. Joseph[6] Smith.

NOTES

A "William Smith" married one Mary Leary on 26 November 1823 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; the marriage was officiated by Rev. Sparkes. Whether these people are the same as the subjects here has not been determined.

Generation No. 6

37. Samuel[6] Ratcliffe, Jr. (Mary[5] Smith, James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 1788.

Child of Samuel Ratcliffe, Jr. is:
67 i. Susanna[7] Ratcliffe.

NOTES

Samuel Ratcliffe, Jr. (1788–) [No. 37] served in the War of 1812 and married a Baltimore woman. There is no further record of him.

There is a record of a Samuel Ratcliffe having served as a Private in the 21st Regiment (Reed's Regiment) of the Maryland Militia. Whether this is the same Samuel Ratcliffe as the subject here is not known.

40. Mary Elizabeth[6] Tarbutton (Rachel[5] Smith, James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died 28 August 1840 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. She married (1) James Graham. She married (2) Charles Sculley 07 February 1831 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. He was born about 1816 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died February 1847 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Children of Mary Tarbutton and James Graham are:
\+ 68 i. James Tarbutton[7] Graham, born 01 June 1813 in Maryland; died 03 August 1883.
\+ 69 ii. Anne Maria Graham.
\+ 70 iii. John T. Graham.
71 iv. Mary T. Graham. She married Philip Starr.

Children of Mary Tarbutton and Charles Sculley are:
\+ 72 i. Rachel Emily[7] Sculley, born 20 July 1837 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died 13 April 1913 in Charleston, Kent Co., Maryland.
\+ 73 ii. Sarah Jane Sculley, born 28 November 1832; died 12 May 1904.
74 iii. Emily Sculley.

NOTES

The date of death for James Graham (husband of Mary Elizabeth Tarbutton) may be 25 October 1829.

Charles Sculley's surname is also given as Scully.

The Graham genealogy is largely from the work of J. Lathrop Mack and his wife, Roberta Smith Mack. Lathrop's notes, which he sent to members of the family whom he believed might be able to help with the genealogy, include a preamble, which is repeated below for its historical perspective. It further shows the status of understanding of this portion of the genealogy as of 1934:[105]

> "The Graham Relatives.
> "In our SEARCH among relatives for information concerning their ancestors, a search made necessary by the fact that none of them or their descendants have been found in the printed and unprinted genealogies, we are making slow progress and are compiling a modest genealogy for the benefit of those now living and their descendants.

43. Samuel[6] Tarbutton (Rachel[5] Smith, James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 13 May 1792 in Maryland, and died 05 January 1848. He married Martha Dudley, daughter of Abner Dudley and Martha Emmerick. She was born in Maryland.

Children of Samuel Tarbutton and Martha Dudley are:

+	75	i.	Jane[7] Tarbutton, died 12 September 1880.
+	76	ii.	Sarah Tarbutton.
+	77	iii.	William Dudley Tarbutton, born 11 November 1815 in Maryland; died 1883.
+	78	iv.	Samuel Smith Tarbutton, born 06 October 1816 in Maryland; died 10 September 1903.

NOTES

On the Smith family genealogical scroll by Edward S. Smith, Martha Dudley, wife of Samuel Tarbutton, is listed as Matilda Dudley.

44. Anna Maria[6] Tarbutton (Rachel[5] Smith, James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 06 November 1799. She married George Spry between 29-30 July 1818 in Queen Anne's County, Maryland. He was born about 1800 in Maryland.

Children of Anna Tarbutton and George Spry are:

	79	i.	Martha[7] Spry, born 30 May 1819.
	80	ii.	David Spry, born 20 November 1821.
	81	iii.	William H. Spry, born 08 February 1824.
+	82	iv.	Samuel Spry, born 05 September 1826 in Maryland; died 13 February 1885.
	83	v.	James Price Spry, born 21 March 1829.
+	84	vi.	John Lorenzo Spry, born 24 July 1831 in Maryland; died 1903.
	85	vii.	Joseph S. Spry, born about 1832 in Maryland.
	86	viii.	Sarah Maria Spry, born 24 July 1833.

NOTES

After the death of Anna (Tarbutton) Spry (1799–) [No. 44], her husband, George Spry, married his brother's widow. In the Maryland Marriages index online, 1667-1899, a marriage date for George Spry and Maria Tarbutton is listed as 29 July 1818.

At the time of the 1850 U.S census George Spry's occupation is given as farmer. In this census also are listed with the household are two free colored persons.

Residences of George Spry (from U.S. censuses):
1820, 1830: 1st District, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland
1840: 1st/2nd Districts, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland

Joseph S. Spry (ca. 1832–) [No. 85] at the time of the 1850 census was a laborer (on his father's farm).

45. Henrietta Young[6] Smith (James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) died March 1821 at "Lentley", Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. She married Joseph Taylor Watson between 1818-1819, son of John Watson and Sara Taylor. He was born 04 March 1794, and died about 1826.

Child of Henrietta Smith and Joseph Watson is:

+	87	i.	Ann[7] Watson, born 14 June 1820 in Maryland; died 18 March 1903.

NOTES

Henrietta (Smith) Watson (–1821) [No. 45] died shortly after she and her husband moved to "Lentley". (Her sister, Katherine [No. 47], later married her widowed husband.)

46. John[6] Smith [Capt. John Smith] (James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 06 June 1795 in Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died 07 October 1857 at Upper Heathworth, Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. He married Mary Smith 31 May 1838 in Baltimore, Maryland, daughter of George Smith and Rebecca Price. She was born 09 November 1808 in Maryland, and died 1848 at Upper Heathworth, Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Children of John Smith and Mary Smith are:

+	88	i.	Mary[7] Smith, born 09 July 1839 in Maryland; died after 1908.
+	89	ii.	James Smith, born 23 December 1840 at Upper Heathworth, Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died 08 November 1912 in Denver, Colorado.
+	90	iii.	Anna Virginia Smith, born 11 May 1843 at Upper Heathworth, Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died 11 October 1924.
	91	iv.	Sarah Rebecca Price Smith, born 04 January 1846 at Upper Heathworth, Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died between 1932-1933. She married James T. Taylor after 1870; born about 1832 in Delaware; died before June 1900.
+	92	v.	John Edward Smith, born 17 March 1848 at Upper Heathworth, Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died 31 December 1930 at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

NOTES

46. John Smith (Capt. John Smith) (1795–1857)

Another possible date of birth for John Smith is 2 December 1796. He is sometimes noted as having been born at "Lentley", his father's property, but Lentley was not purchased until 1820 (see under James Smith, No. 29).

Capt. John Smith was a Chesapeake Bay merchant mariner who owned several ships; he was also a planter. He married his first cousin, daughter of George Smith [No. 31].

In 1832, John Smith contracted to buy from George Steuart Hollyday the land that would later be known as Upper Heathworth, which was a part of the Hollyday property called Readbourne Rectified. Presumably, all of John Smith's children were born at Upper Heathworth, and presumably it is where he and his wife died, too. The location of their remains is not known; whether or not anyone was buried at the farm also is not known. (For more on Upper Heathworth, see the section at the end of this Number, below.)

Attempts to locate John Smith in the 1820 census are inconclusive; he may not have been a principal property owner at that time; although he was of majority age he may still have lived with his parents. There are two John Smiths registered in Queen Anne's Co. in 1820, but the ages of principals do not correspond to J.S.'s age of about 25. The 1830 census data for Queen Anne's Co. do not survive.

In the 1840 census, the John Smith household includes one male 40-50 years of age (John Smith), one male 20-30, one male 15-20, one female 50-60, one female 20-30, one female 15-20, and one female under 5; also 11 slaves (eight males from under 10 years of age to 24-34 years, and three females 10-54 years of age). His wife, Mary, may not have been properly recorded, as her age in this census should be in the category encompassing the age of 32. The single female under 5 years of age should be his first-born, Mary, about one year old. So the identities of the two younger males and the two additional females are not known, or whether they are family relations, farm hands, or sailors (such as noted in the 1850 census). In the 1850 census, John Smith is recorded as holding 12 slaves (eight males between the ages of 8 and 30 and four females between the ages of 9 and 40).

> He brought his bride home in one of his sailing ships and, as his wharf had not yet been constructed, they had to back his ox-cart to the ship, so she could come ashore.
> He was known as a kind and genial man, shaggy eyebrows and somewhat curly hair and pleasant smile. He had no enemies, trusted all, and is said to carry his money in the band of his high silk hat. A painting done of him in oil by a Mrs. Prettyman was given to my brother Earle[109] by his [James Smith's] daughter, Lulu Smith Lugg[110] of Denver, Colorado, which he later gave to our brother Gilbert when he [Gilbert] was living in South Shaftsbury, Vermont.[111]
> At various time[s] he had three sailing ships, the "Flying Marie", "Clipper" and "William Stevens"[112]; with them he sailed the Chester River and Chesapeake Bay, between the Eastern Shore and Baltimore, carrying his own cargo and that of neighboring planters and executing commissions for them in Baltimore. It was from this that he was called and known as "Captain".
> His wife was said to be a high spirited lady and liked the best of things. There is a family tale of a bolt of fine cloth he brought to her on one of his voyages. The price he told her caused her to feel it could not be of fine quality, so she had him return it. He took it aboard ship and did not

[112] The significance of the boat names is unknown. Of note, however, is the name "William Stevens", a colonel in the early settlement history of Worcester Co., Maryland, on the Chesapeake Bay; and the present town of Pocomoke was originally Stevens Landing, an important early shipbuilding center.

Shortly after Capt. John Smith's death, the schooner William Stevens was sold at auction by order of the Orphans' Court of Queen Anne's County, as noticed by a series of advertisements in the Baltimore newspaper, The Sun. The announcement is additionally interesting because it provides the only description–albeit a cursory one–thus far known of any of Capt. John Smith's vessels. The auction notice is as follows (The Sun [Baltimore], 26 Oct 1857):

> SCHOONER "WILLIAM STEVENS" AT AUCTION.—ORPHANS' COURT SALE.—By virtue of an order of the Hon. Orphans' Court of Queen Anne's county, we shall sell by public auction at the wharf of Messrs. Smith & Burnett, south side of the basin, at the hour of 4 o'clock on TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Nov. 3d, the SCHOONER WILLIAM STEVENS, with all her Tackle, & c. She is built of the best materials, copper-fastened and locust upper works.—Can be seen at the wharf.
> Terms made known at sale.
> GEORGE M. SMITH,
> JOSEPH W. WATSON
> Administrators of Capt. John Smith, dec'd.
> F. W. BENNETT & CO.,
> Auctioneers.

George Moore Smith [No. 52] was the cousin of Capt. John Smith (and brother of Mary Smith, wife of Capt. John). Joseph W. Watson (Joseph William Wesley Watson, No. 94, usually referred to as William Watson) was the nephew of Capt. John Smith and brother-in-law of George M. Smith.

That the auction notice for only one vessel has thus far been found is of interest. It may be that Capt. John Smith owned only one vessel at a time, or that he had only one at the time of his death. It is possible that other vessels had yet to be disposed of by the estate, and that pertinent notices have not been located.

> exchange it, but gave a different price when he brought the same bolt of cloth back. She wanted to know why he had not done it in the first place. She was pleased with it. "Well, that's more like it."
> He kept her well supplied with goods by the bolt so she could exchange it with neighbors and give variety of dress for her self, the girls, and neighbors. In the river opposite his place he maintained a fine oyster bed.

Gilbert Smith, retelling family information in his incomplete autobiography, included a brief note about his grandfather: [113]

> Grandfather John Smith built the first hotel in Centerville [sic], which still stands. He was called "Captain John" Smith and owned a brace of sailing boats plying between the Eastern Shore and Baltimore, who always carried his merchant accounts in a tall hat. Family tradition has it that once, raising his hat to a lady on shore, the accounts fell out and scattered over the waters of the bay. Whether it was the lady he married I do not know . . . .

Reference to Capt. John Smith having built the "first hotel" in Centreville (not further identified) might be confused with an otherwise undocumented record in the "Smith Genealogy" that it was Capt. John Smith's father, James Smith [No. 29] who built a hotel: [114]

> There is a family tradition that he [James Smith, No. 29] and his wife, Nancy Young Smith, lived in Virginia or North Carolina and in 1804 we find them in Centreville, Maryland, when they purchased a town-lot. In 1806 they sold a one-eighth part of this lot for $716.00 to one John McFeely. On their remaining portion of this town-lot they built a small hotel, which they operated for a number of years.

Or possibly, reference may be made to Capt. John Smith's son, Capt. James Smith [No. 89], who, as a well-established building contractor in Queen Anne's Co., could have put up a hotel in Centreville. Regardless of whether reference really is to James [No. 29] or to Capt. James [No. 89], Queen Anne's Co. historian Frederic Emory made a few remarks about early hotels in Centreville, none of which mention any of these Smiths.[115]

The George Smith family Bible notes, "John Smith departed this life October 7th 1857 in the 62 year of his age".

[115] Frederic Emory noted that "The old frame hotel was burned in March 1860. It belonged to B. H. Corner and was not insured. The fire was supposed to have been of incendiary origin." He also noted, "The old brick hotel in Centreville was destroyed by fire in March, 1870. The proprietor at that time was Jacob Raymond who succeeded the late James Elliott . . . . Mr. Elliott's predecessor in 1859 was John F. Poston under whom the hostelry was known as the United States Hotel. The present [ca. 1886] brick hotel was built in 1873 and opened in 1874 under the management of John W. Glanville. The company which built the hotel was composed of Hon. R. B. Carmichael, Wm. McKenney, John B. Brown, Lloyd Tilghman and Richard T. Earle." Only one photograph of a sailing vessel on Chesapeake Bay is thus far known in the family photos. This one, which is identified as on Chesapeake Bay, was by an unidentified photographer. The print was found loose in the effects of Jeannette L. Spamer, without additional information. It clearly shows an older sailing vessel, with a small boat in tow (see enlargement, below). The significance and precise locale of this photo are now unknown. It has no relationship to Capt. John Smith, but it is included here as an example reminiscent of the days of sail on the Chesapeake.

Few, if any, of the effects of Capt. Smith survive in the family today. Edward Smith made passing note in the "Smith Genealogy" that Capt. Smith's daughter, Anna Virginia (Smith) Bryan [No. 90], "had the silver buckles which were used to fasten his knee pants".[116]

The portrait in oil of Capt. Smith by Mrs. Prettyman is presently (2007) owned by Nadia (Smith) Synnestvedt [No. 348], a great-granddaughter of the subject. The identity or location of Mrs. Prettyman is unknown. The Prettyman name occurs frequently in these parts of Delaware and Maryland, although she could just as easily could have lived in Baltimore, to where Capt. Smith frequently sailed. The portrait, however, seems not to have been painted from life, but from a photograph. Also see Additions & Corrections

Two photographic portrayals of Capt. John Smith are known. One shows him in middle age, perhaps at about age 50; the second shows him (apparently in the same suit of good clothes!) about ten years older, thus perhaps in the 1850s a few years before his death. The younger portrait, however, seen in at least two examples held by family members, is printed with the photographer's name on the front of the cabinet card: "Photo by R. H. Blair, Smyrna, Del." This fortuitously assists us in establishing when the photograph was made—between 1870 and 1880; the evidence for which shall be given here in a note.[117] Clearly, the Blair photo must be a copy print of an older photo, the original of which is not now located. If that original portrait was taken, as is suggested here, in about the 1840s, it is an early example of American photography (perhaps it even was a daguerreotype) and as such it could have been made in Baltimore during one of Capt. Smith's business visits to that port. Whoever had the Blair prints produced in the 1870s clearly wished to distribute copies of the older photo. Because the Blair print also seems to show hand-drawn alterations to Capt. Smith's clothing and hairline, it may have been touched up to remedy imperfections and overly dark areas either in the original photo or caused by the duplication process. (The photograph may well have been commissioned by Capt. Smith's son, John Edward Smith, inasmuch as there is a photograph of J. E. S. also taken by Robert H. Blair in Smyrna.)

The oil portrait of Capt. Smith painted by Mrs. Prettyman is one and the same view as in the Blair photograph. One may suggest that the Blair print is a photograph of the oil portrait, with hand-painted, light-colored alterations to the clothing due to unpleasantly dark clothing. But distinctive facial features and details in Capt. Smith's hair style differ between the photographic view and that of the oil portrait, thus the photograph cannot have been taken of the oil portrait. Thus we must conclude that the oil portrait was commissioned to be painted from the photographic view that is the same as that in the Blair photograph. But we do not know whether Mrs. Prettyman painted the portrait from the original photograph (now unlocated) of the younger Capt. Smith, or from a Blair print, so we cannot establish the

[117] The evidence is as follows: U.S. census records locate Robert H. Blair and his family in the three censuses between 1860 and 1880. He was from Virginia, although the 1860 census records him as having been born in "Geo." (On the census sheet, all state names were abbreviated. However, if he had been from Georgetown [in Virginia] he might have stated that he was born in Georgetown, and the census taker [in Massachusetts] may have assumed mistaken it for Georgia.) His wife and children all were born in Massachusetts. The 1860 census for Worcester, Worcester Co., Massachusetts, lists him as a farmer. In the 1870 census for Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware, his occupation is as a photographer; his one-year-old son is indicated there as born in Massachusetts, which helps date the Blairs' whereabouts in 1869. In the 1880 census for Worcester, Massachusetts, he is again in that city, still employed as a photographer, with two of his children also occupied in the business. This shows us that Robert H. Blair moved to Delaware from Massachusetts sometime during 1869 or before the census date of 30 June 1870, and that by 1880 he had returned to Massachusetts. Thus, the photographic copy was made sometime between 1870 and 1880, after the death of Capt. John Smith; but who ordered the photo, and how many were made, are unknown.

Captain John Smith (1795–1857) [No. 46]

Portrait in oil by Mrs. Prettyman, apparently after the decease of Capt. Smith and based upon a photograph. The original photograph may not survive, and the prints that survive now in the family may have been produced by Capt. Smith's son, John Edward Smith, during the 1870s. Captain John Smith

Left*: Photographic portrait made probably during the 1870s by R.H. Blair of Smyrna, Delaware. As discussed in the text, the photographer, Blair, is known to have worked in Smyrna only between about 1870 and 1880; earlier and later he resided in Massachusetts. The photograph thus post-dates the death of Capt. Smith. Because the subject is younger in appearance than in the photograph at center, the Blair photo seems to be a copy print of an older photograph, one that seems now to be missing. Since Capt. Smith is noticeably about ten years younger than in the portrait at center, the original view may have been taken in the 1840s and thus would have been an early example of American photography, perhaps even a daguerreotype. It seems that Capt. John Smith's son, John Edward Smith, had the copy prints made by Blair; this is ascertained by the fact that J.E.S. also sat for R. H. Blair in Smyrna. Careful examination of the original Blair photo card reveals that the subject's clothing and hair line are retouched, probably to make up for deficiencies in reproducing the original photo. (Copied from original in the possession of Nadia Smith Synnestvedt.)

Center*: Photographic portrait, perhaps taken in the 1850s. This surely is the reliable appearance of Capt. Smith as he was in the few years before his death. (Copied from original in the possession of Nadia Smith Synnestvedt.)

Right*: Portrait in oil by Mrs. Prettyman, date unknown. Comparisons strongly suggest that the portrait was not painted from life but from a photograph of Capt. Smith. Presumably she painted the portrait from either the Blair print (left) or from the original photograph that Blair had copied (now lost), thus the date of the painting cannot now be ascertained. The identity of "Mrs. Prettyman" has not been determined. (Portrait originally owned by Capt. James Smith, passed to Lulu Smith Lugg, then to Earle Covington Smith; now in the possession of Nadia Smith Synnestvedt, 2008.)

date of the painting from this evidence. We can not even learn whether the painting was made while Capt. Smith was alive.

Interestingly, one modern (20th century) photograph of the oil portrait of Capt. Smith[118] is annotated by an unknown person, "Original painted for his eldest son James" and "1950 was in possession of James daughter Lulu Smith Lugg (Mrs James Lugg), Denver". We could surmise that Capt. James Smith commissioned the portrait, or that someone had it commissioned as a gift for him. If James commissioned it, surely this was some time after his father's death because he was not even yet 17 years of age at the time. Feasibly it could have been commissioned for him by his father, for his eldest son. Alas, we may never know. In any case, the portrait passed to James' daughter, Lulu, and after her death it was owned by Earle Covington Smith (James' nephew), who in turn passed it to Nadine Smith Synnestvedt (James' grandniece).

(wife of Capt. John Smith)

Mary Smith's maiden name has been recorded in family notes with the spelling "Smyth", apparently contrived to disguise the fact that she married her first cousin. (In that day and place, however, marriages between first cousins were not unusual.) The George Smith family Bible records under births, without date, "Mary Smith daughter of George & Rebecca".[119] The Baltimore Sun reported the wedding:[120]

> On the 31st ult., by the Rev. Dr. Jennings, Mr. John Smith, of Queen Ann, to Miss Mary Smith, of Baltimore.

Prior to her marriage, Mary Smith had resided in Baltimore, Maryland, with her brother, George Moore Smith [No. 52].

Children of Capt. John Smith and Mary Smith

John Smith left five orphaned children upon his death in 1857. John's brother-in-law, George Moore Smith, and his cousins, John Price and Mordicai Price, all of Baltimore, signed guardian bonds for Sarah, John, and James.[121] The "Smith Genealogy" notes that after the mother of the children died in 1848, they had been cared for by their elderly maiden great-aunt, Sallie Smith, an aunt to Capt. Smith. When Sallie became too feeble to care for the children, Capt. Smith turned their care over to a housekeeper, Miss Botay.[122] After Capt. Smith's death, Susannah and Eliza Ratcliffe briefly took care of the children.[123] Soon thereafter, the children were separated; the next-known events in their lives are as follows:

88. Mary (b. 1839)	1858 — married Samuel Townsend
89. James (b. 1840)	1860 census — he may be the James Smith working as a farm hand in the Joseph B. Hackett household, Sudlersville, Queen Anne's Co.
90. Anna Virginia (b. 1843)	1860 census — she is residing in the household of her cousin, "William Watson" (Joseph William Wesley Watson) and his wife, Susannah, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co.
91. Sarah Rebecca Price (b. 1846)	1860 census — she is residing in the household of her uncle, George Moore Smith, in Baltimore
92. John Edward (b. 1848)	1860 census — he is residing in the household of his aunt and uncle, John H. and Catharine (Smith) Covington just south of Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co. (Catharine was Capt. John Smith's sister, and in the household also lived another aunt, Rachel Smith, the unmarried sister of George Moore Smith)

The 1860 census slave schedule for District 3, Queen Anne's Co., lists "John Smith's heirs" (i.e., John Smith's estate) owning six slaves (three males, aged 60, 32, and 2; and three females, aged 27, 6, and 3 months). Anna Smith, John Smith's daughter, is listed on the census slave schedule on the line adjacent to the entry for William Watson[124], with whom she resided at the time; there one slave is assigned to her (male, aged 17).

91. Sarah Rebecca Price (Smith) Taylor (1846–1932/33)
"Sallie" or "Sally"

Sarah Smith's birthdate in the Smith family history is given as 4 June 1846; however, the George Smith Bible records, "Sarah Rebecca Smith daughter of John & Mary Smith born Jany 4th 1846".[125]

At the time of the 1860 census, after her father's death, she is residing in Baltimore, Maryland, in the household of her uncle, George Moore Smith. As noted in the information about George Moore Smith [No. 52], he appears to have been counted twice in the 1860 U.S. census, both in Baltimore (16 July) and in Queen Anne's Co. (23 August); thus he seems to have departed Baltimore after mid-July 1860. Sarah Smith is recorded with him in the Baltimore census, but she does not appear with him in Queen Anne's Co. some five weeks later. The 15-year-old girl might have remained in Baltimore, sent to work as a domestic (as suggested by an unproved entry in the 1870 census). She has not been certainly located in the 1870 census, although in that census for the city of Baltimore there is a Sarah Smith, aged 25, working as a domestic servant in the George Kepler household in the 14th Ward.

At the time of the 1880 census, Sarah Smith is the wife of James T. Taylor, residing in Appoquinimink Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware. In the 1900 census, she is a widowed boarder (as "Sallie R. Taylor", born January 1846) in the household of Edward Hart, farmer, in Townsend, Appoquinimink [123] The "Smith Genealogy", p. 26, indicates that "Sallie Ratcliffe" took charge of the children for a while after the death of Capt. Smith, which appears to have been a lapsus. On p. 47, E. S. Smith specifies precisely that the children's caretakers were two cousins of Capt. Smith, "Susannah and Elizabeth [Eliza] Ratcliffe" [Nos. 38 and 39].

Hundred; there she is listed as "Land Lady", thus she may be leasing the Taylor farm to Hart. In the 1910 census, she is residing alone (as "Sarah Taylor") in Townsend, next door to George M. J. Hart, who worked for a grain merchant. In the 1920 census, she is (as "Sarah Taylor") a "Companion" residing in the household of Edward Hart, lumber dealer, on Gray St., Townsend. In the 1930 census (as "Sallie Taylor") she is in the Hart household as a "Boarder".

Sarah Smith Taylor had no children. Her possible dates of death are 24 October 1932 or 23 March 1933.

Edward Seville Smith recalled his "Aunt Sallie" in the "Smith Genealogy": [126]

> She attended the Young Ladies Seminary in Baltimore, Maryland.[127] She and her husband lived on the outskirts of Townsend on a farm with considerable timber. After he died, she was invited by Ed and his wife to come live with them in Townsend, and she lived with them until her death. I understand she willed her estate to the Harts. The Harts had several daughters.
> Aunt Sallie was a bright and cheerful person with a good sense of humor. She was a Methodist and an active temperance advocate, a White ribboner.[128] She told the story of her experience one stormy, winter night. The wind had blown her hat off. She rushed home and told Ed Hart to get a lantern and go find her hat, because all Townsend knew her hat and if they saw it in the gutter she would never hear the end of it.
> Often at Thanksgiving or New Years' she would visit my parents and sometimes with Aunt Anna Bryan and Aunt Mollie Townsend. It was always a jolly occasion and my wonderful Mother enjoyed the position of Master of Ceremonies.
> At one of these occasions it was related by Aunt Sallie that a business man from Preston, Maryland, was riding on the train coming to Philadelphia. He had his luggage on the seat beside him. When the train reached Marydel, a colored man got on the train and proceeded to remove from the seat the baggage of the man from Preston and said to him "We are in Delaware now". "Yes" said he "You will be in Hell in five minutes if you do not put that back where you found it". He did just that. I asked Aunt Sallie how far it was from Marydel to Hell. Aunt Sallie: "Ed Smith, what are you up to now?" I said I was wondering how fast the man would have to travel to make it in five minutes.
> On one such occasion when Aunt Annie and Aunt Sallie were retiring, Aunt Annie, a quiet and pious lady, said "Sister, you know we should get on our knees in sack cloth and ashes", to which Aunt Sallie said "Sack cloth and ashes nothing. We should shout and jump and click our heels".
> When we had mince meat pie with the dinner I asked Aunt Sallie what she would do. She answered that her mother told her "to eat what was being served".

[126] "Smith Genealogy", pp. 45-46.

[127] Numerous schools were called the "Young Ladies Seminary" in many cities and towns across America.

[128] White ribbons were a symbol of the temperance movement, specifically the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Organized in 1874, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is still in existence (website http://www.wctu.org, accessed 19 Jul 2006). Originally pledged to abstinence from alcohol, today it includes tobacco and other drugs. A white ribbon bow has been its symbol since the union's origin.

James T. Taylor (ca. 1832–before June 1900)
(husband of Sarah Rebecca Price Smith)

At the time of the 1870 U.S. census, James T. Taylor is living, apparently single, with his retired father in Appoquinimink Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware. The 1880 census lists James and Sarah Taylor living without children in Appoquinimink Hundred; there he is listed as a farmer.

Upper Heathworth

Edward S. Smith took note of the origin of "Upper Heathworth", without further remark:

> "Upper Heathworth" originally was 690 acres, patented to James Heath, in July, 1702, and was located between the southeast and southwest branches of Island Creek, in Chester River. Recorded in Liber D.S. No. F.F. 453. Emerson Roberts wrote this was a fine old place.[129]

This locale is today demarked by Island Creek and its tributary, Granny Finley Branch, northeast of Burrisville. Island Creek is a tributary of Southeast Creek. Island Creek flows northward and which creates Wilmer Neck, the northward extension of Spaniard Neck; it reaches Southeast Creek just before that waterway in turn flows into the Chester River. This locale of the original Upper Heathworth lies due east of the reduced "Upper Heathworth" that is the property under discussion here.

As for "Upper Heathworth" as owned by Capt. John Smith, it was a farm of about 215 acres on the south shore of the Chester River, in Spaniard Neck, Queen Anne's Co. It still survives today, but not by this name. It is located on what today is Land's End Road, northwest of Centreville, adjacent to and on the southwest of Readbourne, the historic manor of the Hollyday family.[130]

[130] Readbourne of Queen Anne's Co. is one of the distinguished manors of Maryland, about which much has been written. See, as examples, Thomas T. Waterman, "Readbourne, Queen Anne's County", Maryland Historical Magazine, vol. 45 (1950), pp. 95-103; Thomas Hollyday, "Readbourne Manor Revisited: Gleanings from an Eighteenth-Century Journal", Maryland Historical Magazine, vol. 85 (1990), pp. 44-50; and James Bordley, Jr., The Hollyday and Related Families of the Eastern Shore of Maryland; including the Truman, Vaughan, Covington, Lloyd, Robins, Chamberlaine, Hayward, Carmichael, Murray, Bennett, Earle, Chew, Hemsley, Tilghman, Goldsborough, and Other Families (Maryland Historical Society, Baltimore, 1962).

Readbourne manor is on the National Register of Historic Places. The National Register information notes, "Readbourne is significant for its association with the Hollyday family, who built the brick house and owned the land between 1730 and 1904. Equally important, the house is one of the earliest major Georgian structures to remain in the state of Maryland. In scale and detail, it resembles the early Georgian buildings of Virginia and like the great Virginia mansions, Readbourne overlooks a series of terraced "falls" which carry the symmetry of the house out into the garden." It is a "five-part brick house, the center block having been built in the early 1730s by James Hollyday I; the south wing in 1791 by James Hollyday, III; and the north wing in 1948 by William Fahnstock, who undertook the restoration and remodeling of the building between 1940 and 1948. (>> "National Register of Historic Places Inventory–Nomination Form", Michael Bourne, Maryland Historical Trust, 1972.) Deeds and surveys of Readbourne (and Readbourne Rectified, noted elsewhere herein) are among the Hollyday Papers in the Maryland Historical Society (MS 1317). Some architectural photographs of the exterior and interior of Readbourne are in the Library of Congress; these were taken by Thomas T. Waterman in 1940 as part of the Historic American Buildings Survey, which have been posted to the "American Memory" website of the Library of Congress, http://memory.loc.gov (accessed 21 Dec 2005). An undated, but more recent, sales prospectus for Readbourne notes that this waterfront

In a discussion of the family of Emerson Bryan Roberts [No. 326], Edward S. Smith took note in the "Smith Genealogy" that the Price Farm near Chestertown, Kent Co., was "about two miles from Quaker Neck Wharf, from which they could look across the Chester River to 'Capt.' John Smith's place." [131]

As noted below, "Upper Heathworth" of Capt. John Smith was apportioned from the vast tract of nearly 2,000 acres once owned by the Hollydays; it was originally acquired by James Emory and inherited by his son, John. As outlined more fully below, in 1832 Capt. John Smith contracted to buy the property from George Steuart Hollyday. Upon Smith's death in 1857 a small balance remaining on its price was paid by his estate and the title transferred to his heirs. In October 1860, a notice published in The Sun in Baltimore reported that George M. Smith had purchased the property from the estate of his cousin and brother-in-law, Capt. John Smith, and thereafter sold it to Capt. Monteville Bowen, who is recorded in the 1866 map as the owner at that time. Also see Additions & Corrections

The property first had a "Little White House" built upon it, which according to scant historical information (see below), was used as a temporary dwelling by some of the Hollydays while the palatial brick Readbourne manor was being built to the northeast. This little house later comprised the northern wing of the large house as it was known to Capt. Smith and his family.[132] The central, three-story main block was added, and to which a southern wing was attached, becoming a nearly symmetrical manor house with a simple interior plan. Indeed, unlike its brick neighbor, it seems to have been a house built more for functionality than for entertaining. As noticed below, who built the additions is not clear, but it seems that a substantial portion may have been built by Capt. Smith, which in turn reveals at least modest success in his maritime business.

This was for all intents and purposes the family homestead of our modern Smith family, even though just two generations lived there, for only about 25 years. Here Capt. Smith brought his bride from Baltimore, and where they raised their young family. Upper Heathworth was also a residence for at least some of Capt. Smith's hired sailors in his Chesapeake Bay merchant business, as noted in U.S. census records. Whether they quartered somewhere in the house or in another structure that no longer survives is not known. The census seems to omit record of hired hands who would have worked the plantation, but this is more clearly explained elsewhere in the census by the counting of slaves who lived there. In historical records and the architectural survey of Upper Heathworth that was prepared in 1978 there is no mention of slave quarters.[133] estate "has both esthetic and capital appeal to the potential purchaser", with 895 acres of which 524 are in crop production; and other features of the estate include a farm manager's home, five other houses for farm employees, a dairy barn, and numerous other outbuildings including grain-drying facilities to store 50,000 bushels." ("Readbourne Estate. Your Entrance to Gracious Living. Your opportunity to attain a classical standard of living not duplicated anywhere", Stafford and Clements, Realtors, Sudlersville, Maryland, no date).

[132] This was a part of family tradition, which is further supported by the architectural description of the house that was prepared by the Maryland Historical Trust in 1978 (about which see more below in this section).

[133] Nearby "Poplar Grove", homestead of the Emory family closer to the point of Spaniard Neck, likewise housed slaves, but the slave quarters are identified there and are the subject of archaeological investigations.

name to the property.[134] Smith obtained historical and architectural information from McKenney, and Smith further conducted some additional records searches in the Queen Anne's County land records. He incorporated much of this information in abstracted form in the "Smith Genealogy", which is presented again, below. In the 1960s, Upper Heathworth was sold to a new owner.

Edward Smith's brief description of the property, as it was known to him, is included in the "Smith Genealogy". It mixes both historical elements and its appearance in the mid-1900s:

> The shape of the John Smith farm is a long and relatively narrow tract of land extending inland from the Chester River in a Southerly direction, to and across Spaniards Neck Road. At the entrance of the long lane you can see the large, frame house at the river end, standing squarely, facing the River. The house has good elevation above the river, with the lawn sloping gradually to the water's edge where, years ago, stood the wharf or dock of "Capt." John Smith. In the early days the front of the house was toward the river; the back facing the lane is finished in much the same construction as the front.[135]
> In the early days the bays and rivers were the first and main means of travel, the avenues and streets of that time, and in travelling through Maryland and Delaware one will notice that the fine old homes faced the waters. And the long, handsome lanes to these mansions are the result of the distance from them, that the early county roads were cut through and constructed.[136]

The house at Upper Heathworth was a handsome structure, which finally succumbed to age in 1978 when it was dismantled (presumably for its salvageable architectural elements) and the residue said to have been burned. A newer, smaller house stands there today, now several owners later. In 2004, the mailbox at the property indicated that it was then called "Tranquility Farm", but when passed by again in 2006 and 2007 that name was absent. Much of the area is still nearly as rural and unencumbered as it was when the Smiths lived there more than a century and a half ago.

[134] John McKenney (1900-1968) is noted frequently herein, through his correspondence with Edward S. Smith. The McKenney family is a long-established family of Queen Anne's County. An obituary in a Wilmington, Delaware, newspaper summarized his life, which came to an end at his estate, Upper Heathworth, on 26 Jul 1968, repeated here as the historical end of Upper Heathworth ("McKenney Dies; Shore Leader", Evening Journal, 27 Jul 1968):

> "He attended schools in Queen Anne's County, Tome Institute and St. John's Military College in Annapolis. He was graduated from Princeton University in 1923 and took post-graduate courses in agriculture at the University of Maryland.
> "He was associated for a short time with Alexander Brown & Sons, investment bankers in Baltimore. He returned to the Eastern Shore in 1928 to assist with the formation of the Corsica Foxhounds, which hunted the country surrounding Centreville under the joint mastership of Mr. McKenney and the present [master] Judge Thomas J. Keating Jr. of the second judicial circuit of Maryland.
> "During this period, he wrote 'Tackroom Tattles,' a series of short stories on sporting subjects. He organized three real estate firms, through which farms of the McKenney estate and other waterfront properties were sold to the public.

With great fortune for us, the Maryland Historical Trust performed an architectural survey of Upper Heathworth; by chance this was done just at the time the house was beings demolished. Despite the occasional visit to the property by various family members during the 1900s, we had only the most general description of the house and the land around it. The Trust's survey report, on the other hand, provides a detailed, professional description that places the house in architectural and historical perspective. This report is reproduced in its entirety, farther below (see "The House at Upper Heathworth").

The "Upper Heathworth" Property

The name, "Upper Heathworth", dates at least to a century earlier than the Hollyday–Smith transaction of 1832. Although the property of interest here was called by this name, it is apparent that other properties may also have used the name; how they differ, or not, from the Upper Heathworth of interest is not clear. Some records are noted, as follows:

The will of James Earle of Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, dated 29 May 1734 (probate 18 June 1734), gives to his son, John Earle, and his heirs the "dwelling plantation, 'Heathworth,' and 'Upper Heathworth,' sd. lands bought of Charles Blak."[137]

The will of John Earle of Queen's Anne's Co., Maryland, dated 19 March 1745 (probate 17 July 1746), gives to his four minor sons, James, John, William, and Benjamin Earle "my 2 tracts, Heathworth & Upper Heathworth . . . ." [138]

On 8 January 1781, Daniel Cain contracted to purchase from John Earle and Benjamin Earle Upper Heathworth and Heathworth.[139]

In 1790, an Act was passed on 14 December in the Maryland legislature "to enable Richard Tilghman Earle to sell and convey certain property of his deceased father Richard Tilghman Earle", including, amongst others, a tract called Upper Heathworth in Queen Anne's Co.[140]

In 1783, assessments were made on Elijah Bishop, James Deford, and John Smith [relationship unknown] for a 100-acre parcel called Upper Heathworth, in the Corsica District of Queen Anne's Co.[141]

In 1819, the Commissioners of the Tax for Queen Anne's County published a list of persons and names of lands owned by them, for which taxes were due within thirty days or the properties would be sold at auction to recover the taxes. Listed in the Middle Election District is one John White, holder of Upper Heathworth, a property of just 20 acres valued at $55 with taxes due of $1.21.[142]

Edward S. Smith's reconstruction (ca. 1960) of the original survey lines of Upper Heathworth. The property is traditionally indicated to be situated on Spaniard Neck, although more precisely it is on Wilmer Neck, along the Chester River northwest of Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. The diagram indicates the approximate location of the original house, which was razed in 1978 and replaced by another structure. Smith (at bottom) notes the position of "Spaniards Neck Road" crossing the southererly point of the property, as it still does, but this road today is Lands End Road. Spaniard Neck Road, which leaves the main highway north of Centreville, now loops to the south to point of Spaniard Neck itself. Lands End Road departs from Spaniard Neck Road and runs northeastward up Wilmer Neck. The property is principally open farmland; the small portion south of the road is wooded.

Whether these are coincidental names to the property later acquired by Capt. John Smith from George Steuart Hollyday, or even if they all represent the same tracts, is not clear at this time. Detailed title searches will have to be conducted, which constitutes a task beyond the capabilities of the present genealogy.

A good starting point for a discussion of the origins and legal affairs of Capt. John Smith's "Upper Heathworth" is the summary that is presented in the "Smith Genealogy". There, Edward S. Smith wrote of his grandfather, Capt. Smith, and the home that he had acquired on the Chester River:

> [John and Mary Smith] lived on a farm, now called "Upper Heathworth", in Spaniards Neck, on the Chester River, where they raised their family and from which he conducted a shipping business between points on the Chester River and across the Bay to Baltimore. He had his own wharf or landing and his own ships. They were married in Baltimore, Maryland, where she had been living with her brother, George M. Smith.
> He was about 25 years of age when his father purchased and moved to "Lentley"[143], and was a sailor following the waters of Chesapeake Bay and along the Sea Coast.
> In 1832 he entered into a contract with George Steuart Hollyday, who owned "Readbourne Rectified", a large plantation, to purchase a river front farm, a part of the "Readbourne Rectified" tract of land, the farm to contain about 215 acres. However, the deed from Hollyday was not delivered until its date, December 29, 1857, 25 years after the date of the Contract to sell and purchase, and then the grantees named therein were the children of "Captain" John Smith, he having died in October, 1857. When I read this in an Abstract of title very kindly loaned me by Mr. John W. McKenney, the present owner, I had to seek an answer or reason, which I found in a photostatic copy of the Deed which I got from the Land Office in Annapolis, Liber W.P.3, folio 412-413.
> At the time of the death of "Capt." John Smith, there was outstanding a balance due of $16.50, with interest thereon from January 11, 1838 [sic], which was then paid by George M. Smith and Joseph W. Watson, Administrators of the Estate. The contract to purchase must have allowed payment to be made over a period of time, or by a credit from time to time, for freight services by John Smith to George S. Hollyday, who had a large adjoining plantation. We will never know. The Grantees in the Deed are the children and heirs-at-law of John Smith, deceased, namely: Mary Smith, James Smith, Anna Virginia Smith, Sarah R. Price Smith, and John Edward Smith, and as all were under legal age, title was taken in Joseph A. Wickes, Trustee. The mother had died in 1848.
> The premises are described as beginning at a large Oak tree on the side of a cove issuing out of said River, called "Lime Kiln Cove." The tract is comprised of part of "Readbourne Rectified", Upper Heathworth, and Ann's Portion. When Mr. John McKenney became the owner he and his sister decided to [re]name the place "Upper Heathworth". [144]

> In 1733 the Little White House, as it was then known, stood on the top of an elevation above the Chester River in Talbott, now Queen Anne's, County, Maryland, with the land sloping gently from the house to the River. When the Hollydays purchased Readbourne Rectified and planned to build their fine mansion, "Readbourne", Sarah Covington Lloyd Hollyday[145] is supposed to have lived in the Little White House while overseeing the building of "Readbourne", which progressed from 1733 to 1740. While the Hollydays were preparing the plans of the new house, Lord Baltimore collaborated on the plans and design and construction in this "little White House", which was conveniently near the site of the proposed new mansion. The date 1733, is confirmed by dates and names of workmen marked by them on the mantle in the bedroom of the little "White House".

John Emory, son of James, inherited "Upper Heathworth" at the death of his father in 1774. He was a fine cabinet maker and could well have done the interior of "Readbourne".

It is most interesting, however, to note that while the little "White House" is still standing, it constitutes a wing of the present handsome home, "Upper Heathworth" of Mr. John McKenney. Added have been a three story main building and a balancing wing annexed. In the building of the additional sections, skill and care were exercised to accomplish harmony of design and construction. The present house is well maintained, handsome, and about ninety feet in width, as it faces the River and the long lane from Spaniard's Neck Road.[146]

In 1832 George Steuart Hollyday contracted to sell to Capt. John Smith, our Grandfather, the tract of land now known as "Upper Heathworth" on and from which John Smith conducted his freight and commission business from his wharf or landing, in his ships, between Baltimore and the Eastern Shore, over the waters of the Chester River and the Chesapeake Bay. It was part of Readbourne Rectified.

In the contract of sale, George Steuart Hollyday was named as living in Kent County, Maryland. While it is not indicated clearly, it is likely the house and additional wing were built by Smith. There he took his bride and raised his family.[147]

At the time of the death of "Capt." John Smith, there was a balance due on the price of the land of $16.50 and some interest, which was paid by the administrators of his estate and title was put in the trusteeship for the heirs of John Smith, who were then minor children.

By letter of January 29, 1963, Mr. John McKenney tells us of the above, of which he had not known. It is from a book "The Hollyday Family" recently published by the Maryland Historical Society, 201 West Monument Street, Baltimore, Maryland, which had been prepared by the late Dr. James Bordley, Jr. [148]

Another letter from John McKenney to Edward Smith relates slightly different facts from those that Smith reported: [149]

George M. Smith and Joseph W. W. Watson[150] were administrators of John Smith, who [i.e., Smith] contracted to buy Upper Heathworth from George Steuart Hollyday on June 11, 1832. On this date he paid the purchase price with the exception of $16.50, on which interest was paid by the administrators until 1857, when title to this land was passed. The heirs of John Smith, who [146] Lands End Road, at least today. Spaniard Neck Road as signed now begins from the highway north of Centreville and continues in a looping fashion to the point of Spaniard Neck; in Spaniard Neck, Lands End Road comes off of Spaniard Neck Road and traverses Wilmer Neck, passing enroute the Upper Heathworth property and its neighbor, Readbourne.

[147] This implies that Capt. Smith built these additions around the time that he married, but this is not necessarily the case. The "1857" inscribed in one of the upstairs fireplace mantels might indicate some recent construction at that time, too.

On 9 August 1961, Edward Smith transcribed the deed from the Queen Anne's County Land Records, Liber W.P. 3, folios 412-413. The deed notes that the property was composed of three pre-existing properties (as noted above):

> Readbourne Rectified, the boundaries of which were delineated "Beginning at a large oak tree on the side of a cove issuing out of said [Chester] River, called Lime Kiln Cove . . .", containing "175 acres and 2 roods of land, more or less", originally conveyed to George S. Hollyday as recorded in the Land Records Books, Liber I.T. 3, folios "343 etc."
> An attached property to Readbourne Rectified with boundaries also beginning at the same oak tree, here called a "White Oak", containing "14 acres and 2 roods of land, more or less"
> "Anns Portion", with boundaries "Beginning at a stone at the end of the [fifth survey] line of the whole tract", containing 13 acres and 3/8 of an acre, more or less, and also a right of way to and from the Public Road running through Spaniard's Neck,[151] nearly parallel with the River, through that part of Readbourne Rectified now belonging to William Emory, to and from the farm proper . . .", which was by this deed attached to Readbourne Rectified.

A public notice of farm sales appeared in the Baltimore Sun for 2 October 1860, listing,

> . . . the farm of the late Capt. John Smith, on Chester river, has been sold to Mr. George M. Smith at $53.75 per acre.[152]

The original deed was "examined and delivered to George M. Smith February 5, 1863." The property size at the time was 215 acres, 2 roods, 8 perches. The settlement was "conveyed to said George M. Smith by Joseph A. Wickes, Trustee by Feb. 4, 1863, recorded in Liber M.B. No. 2 folio 237, 238 & 239", comprising Readbourne Rectified, Ann's Portion, and Upper Heathworth. The deed was acknowledged by John H. Rawlinson.

In a deed dated 11 February 1865, Upper Heathworth was sold by George M. Smith and Eliza A. Smith, his wife, to Monteville Bowen for $18,000, a profit of more than $6,000 over what G. M. Smith had paid for the property in 1860.

In the 1866 J. G. Strong map of Queen Anne's Co.,[153] Monteville Bowen is shown as the landholder of the property known as Upper Heathworth. He is listed there as "Capt. M. Bowen"; whether the title indicated military or mariner's insignia is unknown. Edward Smith notes about Monteville Bowen in the "Smith Genealogy": [154] Also see Additions & Corrections

> In September, 1961, Mr. John McKenney, present owner of "Upper Heathworth" wrote that a Mrs. Cochran, who was Laura Emory of Poplar Grove, told him it was always a treat to come to his place when she was a young girl because there were so many children to play with at the Bowen farm. Montreville [sic] Bowen came here from the Carolinas and married a Miss Warren, an ancestress of Herbert Warren, who married Antoinette Emory. After her death, he married her sister. With five children by his first wife and eight by his second, thirteen children must have been a merry place.

An 1877 atlas of Kent and Queen Anne's Counties shows the Upper Heathworth farm as still the "Est. of Capt. Bowen" and "Res[idence] of W. H. Waner". Waner has not been identified in the 1870 or 1880 U.S. censuses.[155] Also see Additions & Corrections

In 1887, the property, now somewhat reduced in acreage, was sold to J. Hersey Hall for $13,400: [156]

> SALE OF A QUEEN ANNE'S COUNTY FARM.—the Centreville Record announces the sale by John B. Brown, trustee, to J. Hersey Hall, of the handsome farm in Spaniard's Neck, Queen Anne's county, formerly belonging to Capt. Bowen. The farm contains 183 acres, and was sold for $50 an acre. It is situated on Chester river, and was at one time among the most productive fruit farms in the county.

In the 1877 atlas, a map of Centreville notes a property of "Wm. Bowen" on Commerce St. just north of the Queen Anne's County Court House.[157] Whether he was a relation to Capt. Bowen has not been determined.

Records are not had at this time regarding the kinds of crops that were raised at Upper Heathworth during the Smith ownership or during the tenure of later owners. As just recorded, it was known for its fruit by the late 1880s. It is likely that other crops were raised there, too, including tobacco, a traditional and widely raised cash crop in the area at earlier times. The property today is mostly tillable land, although during drive-by visits during the past few years no crops were seen, suggesting that the property has been used more strictly as a residential retreat in recent times. Also see Additions & Corrections

The House at Upper Heathworth

For years, the only information about Upper Heathworth and its house was from family information, mostly oral tradition. It was known to have been destroyed, when Helen (Montgomery) Mummert McCarraher related that she had been told it was burned down "on purpose". She had learned of this when she visited the area in 1978, going to the north side of the Chester River, in Kent Co., to view the house from across the river. Not seeing it, she inquired and was told by a local man that it had recently been burned; that the act was intentional. This fragment of information was the foundation for a later inference of the fate of the house, retold in the family, that the destruction of the house was due to vindictiveness on the part of the owners, for reasons not made clear. At the same time, oral tradition held Recently, a fuller, reasonable, story has been recovered regarding the fate of the house at Upper Heathworth. The house was in disrepair by age and was partly dismantled, presumable to re-sell certain architectural elements. Just at this time, a Maryland Historic Sites Survey report fortuitously was completed for the house and two of its outbuildings, which is presented below. It stands reason that the residue, rather than wrecked and demolished, may first have been burned to reduce haulage—bearing in mind that environmental constraints on open burning were probably not in place at the time.

An undated realtor's sales prospectus for Upper Heathworth probably is from the time when the home was sold by John McKenney's sister (in the late 1960s?). [159] It was offered by John H. Porter & Co., Easton, Maryland, whose illustrated prospectus describes the house, property, and residential amenities:

> The house is spacious and comfortable with a large livingroom (30′ x 15′), fireplace, built in bookcases on each side of a small piece of old pine paneling from the Goldsborough House in Centreville. [160]
> The main block of the house dates back to 1857. An earlier wing contains the kitchen, paneled in white pine, with beamed ceiling, and a service stairway leads to quarters above. There is a gunroom in this wing.
> The Master bedroom suite is in the south wing, containing a large bath and dressing room, with a small hall and linen closet.
> The central block has attractive hallway, two comfortable bedrooms, bath and dressing area on the second floor.
> The north bedroom wing can be entered from either of two stairways and has a large bedroom, dressing room and bath. This area could be used for an office or servants quarters since it is a separate unit. On the third floor center section are two additional bedrooms and a bath.

[158] More likely the "hunting lodge" story confuses Upper Heathworth with another property on Spaniard Neck now called Conquest Beach, a public area and yacht club on the Chester River; or perhaps the Spaniard Point Farm (at the tip of Spaniard Neck), which had been used in 1997 by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and then-Vice President Al Gore to announce the Conservation Reserve Enhancement Program relating to the moderation of agricultural runoff (John H. Cushman, Jr., "Planting Trees and Not Crops to Fight Water Pollution", The New York Times, 21 Oct 1997); "Glickman to Join Vice President Gore to Announce Major Conservation Initiative for Chesapeake Bay", U.S. Department of Agriculture, Media Advisory, Release no. 0369.97, 17 Oct 1997).

[159] "Upper Heathworth, circa 1857" [real estate prospectus], John H. Porter and Co. (Easton, Maryland, no date), 4 pp. and xerographic copy of plat. That the prospectus is from the time of McKenney ownership is supposed because the advertised name is "Upper Heathworth", which name McKenney had restored to the property.

> "Circa 1798. By that year, a 2-story brick house, measuring 40 by 24 feet and described as 'not yet complete,' was built on a 4-acre lot of 'Chesterfield,' deeded in 1792 from Mary Nicholson to her daughter Henrietta. Henrietta's husband, Dr. John Bracco, died, and by 1799 she had married Dr. Robert Goldsborough. The property descended through the Goldsborough and McKenney families. The house was demolished in 1963.

The Maryland Historical Trust conducts a statewide Historic Sites Survey by an Act of the Maryland Legislature. These surveys are "prepared for information and record purposes only and do not constitute any infringement of individual property rights". The survey for Upper Heathworth, site QA-79, was completed 18 July 1978.[161] An "Adenda" [sic] notes succinctly:

> "Upper Heathworth was demolished in the late summer of 1978, not long after the survey of the house was completed. Some of the materials were salvaged by the present owners, who plan to construct a new house on the sight [sic]. The dairy building and the post-and-plank meat house were not destroyed."

The complete architectural description, including a floor plan for the ground floor, preserves a record of the house as it was in 1978, somewhat altered from the time when Capt. John Smith's family lived there. Also included in the survey were historic outbuildings. Several photographs accompanied the report, one of which shows the north wing of the house in the process of being dismantled. This is the part of the house that was believed to have been built upon the original "Little White House". The Trust report is so significant to the Smith family history that this record is reproduced here in its entirety. It further assists greatly in understanding what part of the house was original, and what was added later (presumably by Capt. John Smith, according to family tradition), as well as some architectural changes that occurred after the property passed from the family.

The original "Little white house" is the northeasterly wing, on the right side of this view, which was built by 1733 and said to have been occupied by the Hollydays while Readbourne was under construction, 1733–1740. The main block and southwesterly wing are supposed to have been built during time when Capt. John Smith owned the property, thus during 1832–1857. An upstairs mantelpiece had an 1857 date and names inscribed in it, thus probably at least some addition was built in that year, the same year as Capt. Smith's death. (See text.)

Note that the fence seen on the landward façade view is behind the house (here it is in front); this view looks upslope; and the window spacings of the wings and the location of the porch doorway now match later views of the house. The chimney positions in the central block and assymmetry of window placements in the wings help distinguish the landward and riverfront façades. Also note the doorway at the left end of the "Little white house" wing, presumably original but subsequently removed since it does not appear in the Maryland Historic Sites Survey floorplan in 1987 [see fifth leaf].)

The front page (right) illustrates the landward side of the house. The aerial view (below) shows an interesting perspective, showing how far back from the Chester River the house was set, and its relationship to the 110 tillable acres of the property. The 1857 date on the front page relates to the age of the house in its present appearance, with its added central block and southwesterly wing (at left of photo).

The John H. Porter sales prospectus was illustrated with exterior and interior views of the property as it appeared at that time.

rectangular two story flanking wings, one original, the other an early addition, combine to transform the house into a massive if somewhat awkward composition. An original dentil block cornice and later Victorian porches serve to relieve the heaviness of the building somewhat, but the overall feeling of simplicity and size remains dominant on the exterior. The interior of the main house is almost equally plain, with a Victorian stair and a simple mantel the only surviving evidence of 19th century trim. Notable outbuildings include a dairy with pyramidal overhanging roof and a post-and-plank meat house.

Upper Heathworth is one of the largest and most imposing 19th century houses surviving in the county. The main block combines a side hall, double parlour plan with three story height and shallow hip roof, a composition that was widely used on the Eastern Shore in the mid-19th century. Although only one of the two-story wings is original, the other was added at an early date, and together they transform a relatively simple three story house into a massive if somewhat awkward composition. An original dentil-block cornice and later Victorian porches serve to relieve the heaviness of the building somewhat, but the overall feeling of simplicity and size remains dominant on the exterior. The interior of the main house is almost equally plain, with a Victorian stair and a simple mantel the only surviving evidence of 19th century trim.

Two outbuildings of particular note have also survived. A small frame dairy with an overhanging pyramidal roof is located to the east of the main house, and a post-and-plank meat house is located at the eastern edge of the yard, adjoining the more recent farm buildings.

Upper Heathworth is located on Spaniard Neck, overlooking the Chester River. The house surveys a broad sweep of agricultural land that slopes down to the river in front, and two small coves on either side. There are a number of small outbuildings, a granary, and several barns to the east and northeast of the house. A long driveway flanked by an allee of pine trees approaches from the southeast, and terminates in a circle in front of the house.[162]

The three-part house is of frame construction, consisting of a three story central block with a hip roof flanked by two story gable roof wings. A pair of flush brick chimneys rise on the northeast gable wall of the main house, and single flush chimneys rise at the gable end of each wing. The central portion of the house is three bays wide and two rooms deep, and dates to the mid-nineteenth century. The wings are four bays wide and only one room deep. The northeast wing appears to be original, while the southwest wing was added soon after the original house was completed. These wings are shifted forward, so that they are flush with the river facade of the main house. There are one story porches with Doric columns and scrolled fretwork railings on both facades of the house, and similar porches with diagonal lath railings on the southeast facade of each wing.

The river facade of the main house has a large double door with sidelights and transom in the southwest bay and large six-over-six windows in the center and northeast bay. There are three-over-six windows on each of the upper floors. The second floor windows are the same size as the first floor windows. The third floor windows are the same width, but are considerably shorter in height.

The southeast facade, facing the driveway, is identical to the river facade except that the entrance consists of a single door with a three-light transom, but no sidelights.

[162] The house that exists there today (as viewed in aerial photographs taken in 1992) sits approximately in the same spot as the original house, although the alignment of the drive as it approaches the house no longer inscribes a circle or oval.

There are no openings in the gable walls of the main house, but seams in the siding and and [sic] evidence inside indicates that there were windows on each floor in the southeast bay of the southwest gable.

The southwest wing is more carefully ordered than the northeast wing. The river facade has four six-over-six windows on each floor. On the land facade, there are doors in the second and fourth bays from the left, and windows in the first and third bays. Four six-over-six windows are symmetrically arranged on the second floor. There are no openings in the gable wall of the southwest wing.

The river facade of the northeast wing is almost identical, but one window has been omitted on the first floor, in the second bay from the right, and a seam below the third window suggests it was once a door. The land facade is also similar, with doors in the second and fourth bays, but the latter of these doors is offset to the left, placing it right next to a window. Both of the irregularities in this wing can be attributed to two winder stairs inside. There are two four-over-four windows flanking the chimney in the upper gable of this wing.

Based on framing evidence, it would appear that the northeast wing is original, and that the southwest wing was added at an early date. All three sections of the house have original, unbeaded horizontal weatherboarding and a flat modillion block cornice consisting of two different size blocks alternating against a wide fascia board.

The house rests on a brick foundation. A covered bulkhead entrance on the southeast corner of the northeast gable allows access to a cellar under the main house.

The interior plan of the main house consists of a side hall with two parlours. A steep stair rises from the southeast corner of the hall along the southwest gable of the house. This is not the original stair, as it cuts across the location of the now-removed gable windows. The lower part of the first floor window frame remains visible in the closet under the stairs, and ghosts of the second and third floor windows are evident in the interior plaster. The location of the original stair is uncertain, but the northwest end of the hall seems the most likely possibility. The present stair consists of an open string carriage decorated by scrolled brackets on each step, with turned walnut newels, walnut rail, and turned oak balusters. The railing has evidently been changed, as the tenons of earlier newels remain in each floor, where the newels were cut off and replaced. The turned drops from these newels remain in the ceiling of the first and second floor.

Other alterations are also evident on the first floor. The wall between the two parlours has been removed, creating one large room with two fireplaces. The fireplace in the room facing the river has been blocked and fitted for a stove, the other fireplace remains open. The mantel has been removed from the former, while the latter retains a simple 19th century mantel. A single door gives access to the wing.

The hall has also been altered. Seams in the plaster walls and ceiling indicate the hall was once divided, and the presence of two bolts in the wall suggest there was a pilastered arch to divide the two spaces. As mentioned, the stair has been moved, and a small bath has been inserted below the second floor landing. A large doorway opens off the hall into the southwest wing.

Etched into the glass of one of the river facade sidelights is the name “J. F. Reeves, Jr. 1860”.

The second floor repeats the first floor plan, but with a small, unheated room worked into the northwest end of the stair hall. There are small fireplaces in each of the two chambers, and doors leading to the second floor of each wing.

The third floor is identical to the second floor, but the two larger chambers were heated with stoves, having no fireplaces.

The northeast wing is divided into two rooms on the first floor. The northeast room has a large exposed bricks fireplace on the center of the gable wall, and a winder stair in the corner to the right of the fireplace. The inner room has a false fireplace on the center of the southwest wall, and a winder stair in the northeast corner of the room. Several steps lead up to a door leading into the front parlour of the main house.

The second floor of this wing is divided into three rooms and a narrow hall. A steep ladder-stair leads to a large loft room with plastered walls and ceiling.

The southwest wing consists of a single large room on the first floor with a fireplace on the center of the southwest gable wall. This wall has been paneled in recent times, but rather crudely. It appears that raised panel doors were cut up and reused as wall paneling, and other panels were salvaged and set into modern two-inch frames to serve as cupboard doors. Although reasonable convincing from the far end of the room, closer examination betrays the horizontal seams of the lock rails breaking across the vertical styles of the doors, creating a most unsettling effect.

The interior trim of the house is relatively simple. Door and window architraves are rabbetted, but otherwise plain. The mantles that remain are also rather plain and undistinguished.

Dairy

To the east of the main house, directly behind the northeast wing, there is a small frame dairy with a large overhanging pyramidal roof. The dairy building is approximately eight feet square, with a beaded batten door centered on the northwest facade, toward the house, and a single six-over-six window centered on each side wall. It sits on a brick foundation that encloses a springhouse or ice-house, with access through a hinged trap door in the floor.

The roof overhangs about four feet on each side, and is supported by squared, chambered posts set in the ground. The roof is covered with wood shingles, and surmounted by a weathered finial. Exterior siding consists of unbeaded horizontal weatherboards secured with machine nails. All visible framing is circular sawn and secured with machine nails.

Smokehouse

The smokehouse is located to the east of the house, and is the first of a line of more recent farm buildings that lie in a line roughly parallel to the driveway.

This building is of post and plank construction, approximately twelve feet wide by fourteen feet long. The exterior is covered with horizontal beaded siding on the upper gable and vertical unbeaded siding on the lower gables and side walls. The gable roof is approximately 45 degrees in pitch, and covered with wood shingles. Beaded, tapered rakeboards and box cornice with beaded fascia board remain intact. The door is located on the center of the southeast facade. The door is gone, but one iron pintel remains on the front face of the right door jamb.

Although this building is constructed in similar fashion to other post and plank buildings in this area, it is unique in its use of slab-wood or kerf-wood for the plank walls and roof. The corner posts, plates, and rafters are all hewn or pit sawn, and how a certain amount of care in construction. The planks and several of the intermediate posts, on the other hand, are all pieces of kerf-wood left over after logs are cut into planks. The rounded face is on the inside, and has been notched out to allow the intermediate posts to lie flat against them. Other pieces of kerf-wood have been used for nailers in the roof. They are laid across the rafters in a horizontal position with the rounded face down, and notched out so they lie flat on the rafters. One-inch boards have been nailed in a vertical position on top of the nailers, and the shingles are nailed to the boards.

The combination of kerf-wood members and machine nailed collars suggests a mid-nineteenth century date for this building.

Correspondence from John McKenney to Edward S. Smith notes that a fireplace mantel in an upstairs wing bears the date 1857, which is the same year in which Capt. John Smith died and his heirs received title to the property after the outstanding nominal debt was paid. McKenney believed that this was evidence (hitherto not proved) that the house had been added to several times. With the date also were "the names of several carpenters who were obviously working on the house at this time. Either George Hollyday, or John Smith, or his heirs to whom it was sold in that year, must have built the present Upper Heathworth."[163]

47. Katherine W.[6] Smith (James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born about 1801, and died 30 April 1881. She married (1) Joseph Taylor Watson 04 November 1821 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, son of John Watson and Sara Taylor. He was born 04 March 1794, and died about 1826. She married (2) John H. Covington 26 September 1846 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, son of Ebenezer Covington and Elizabeth. He was born 1798 and died after 1865.

Children of Katherine Smith and Joseph Watson are:

93 i. Ann[7] Watson.

\+ 94 ii. Joseph William Wesley Watson, born about 1823 in Maryland; died after August 1860.

Children of Katherine Smith and John Covington are:

\+ 95 i. Catherine S.[7] Covington, born 24 October 1833 in Maryland; died 27 September 1868.

96 ii. Sarah Augusta Covington, born 1840 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died after June 1880 near Church Hill, Queen Anne's, Maryland. She married William Massey; born about 1845 in Maryland.

97 iii. John S. Covington, born 17 August 1845 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died 07 July 1864.

NOTES

47. Katherine (Smith) Watson Covington (ca. 1801–1881)
"Kittie"

One record gives her birth as 1810. Her name has also been spelled Catherine.

She was a widow at the time of her marriage to John H. Covington. Her first husband, Joseph Taylor Watson, was the widower of her sister, Henrietta Young Smith [No. 47].

At the time of the 1880 U.S. census, "Catherine" Covington resided with her daughter and son-in-law, William T. and Sarah A. Massey, in Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

She is buried in Bailey's Delight Cemetery, Burrisville Rd., Burrisville, Queen Anne's Co.

View generally eastward at the former site of John Covington's farm (ca. 1850-1870); southwest of the town of Church Hill, Maryland, along Maryland Route 213. The Covington farm was situated in the southeastern corner formed by the intersection of Rt. 213 and Church Hill's Main Street, which once was the main thoroughfare here but is now bypassed by Rt. 213. John Edward Smith was sent to live with the Covingtons after the death of his father in 1858. His aunt, Katharine Smith Covington, had married John H. Covington in 1846. (Spamer photo, taken in 2006) property owners, shows "J. Covington" just southwest of Church Hill; today the location is approximately at the southeastern corner of the junction of Maryland Rt. 213 and Main St. (Main St. is the former route of the highway, which now bypasses Church Hill). The site is still farmland today, with woodland and apparently some sectioned off properties along Main St. To the west, along present-day Southeast Creek Road and about two miles from the Covington site, one "W. H. Smith" is noted on the 1866 map; but whether this is family is not known.

John H. Covington is listed in the 1840 U.S. census residing in the 1st/2nd Districts, Queen Anne's Co. There the household includes one male 20-30 years of age, two females 20-30, one female 8-10, and one "free colored" person, aged 10-21. Neither Covington nor any members of his household have been located in the 1850 census, although he does appear in the slave schedule of the 1850 census in the 2nd District, Queen Anne's Co., listed as holding seven slaves (four males, aged 6 to 38, and three females, aged 11 to 32). In the 1860 census for the 2nd District, he is listed as a farmer; in addition to his family, with him are his wife's cousin, Rachel Smith (never married), and John [Edward] Smith, his wife's nephew who was orphaned in 1857. John Covington is listed in the 1860 census' slave schedule for the 2nd District, Queen Anne's County, holding 14 slaves (seven males, aged 12-43, and seven females, aged 1-45). He has not been located in the 1870 census.

The marriage of Katherine Smith and John Covington was officiated by Rev. Reed.

96. Sarah (Covington) Massey (1840–after June 1880)
"Gus"

Also see Additions & Corrections

She had no children of her own. She died at the Covington farm south of Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co. Her funeral service was conducted by Rev. John Edward Smith [No. 92]; she is buried in Chestertown, Maryland.

William Massey (ca. 1845–)
(husband of Sarah Covington)

The "Smith Genealogy" gives his name as William T. Massey; but in the 1870 and 1880 censuses he is listed as William F. Massey. After his wife's death he sold the Covington farm near Church Hill and moved to Baltimore. He apparently had no children. Attempts to locate him in Baltimore have not been conclusive.

Tracing his earlier life and parents has not yielded conclusive information. The 1860 U.S. census lists a William T. (or F.) Massey, aged 16, residing with parents Josiah and Mary Massey in District 3, Kent Co., Maryland. Tracing backward, the 1850 census lists William T. Massey, aged 5, with parents Josiah and Mary, again in District 3; but in that census there also is a William Massey, aged 4, residing in a household headed by an Ann Johnson, he being the only Massey living there in District 2, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

1870, 1880: farmer

Residences of William Massey (from U.S. censuses):
1870: 1st/2nd District, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland
1880: Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland

97. John S. Covington (1845–1864)

John S. Covington is buried in Bailey's Delight Cemetery, Burrisville Rd., Burrisville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. (Bailey's Delight was patented in 1727.)

(23 descendants)

The genealogy of the Covington family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of John Covington

Generation No. 1

1. John[1] Covington was born 1602.

Child of John Covington is:

\+ 2 i. Nehemiah[2] Covington, born 1628 in Coventry, Huntingdonshire, England; died 1681 in Great Monie Creek, Somerset Co., Maryland.

Generation No. 2

2. Nehemiah[2] Covington (John[1]) was born 1628 in Coventry, Huntingdonshire, England, and died 1681 in Great Monie Creek, Somerset Co., Maryland. He married Anne Ingram July 1667 in Covington's V., Great Monie Cr., Somerset Co., Maryland. She was born 1628, of Covington's V., Somerset Co., Maryland, and died 1678.

Children of Nehemiah Covington and Anne Ingram are:

3 i. Elizabeth[3] Covington, born 10 September 1668 in Great Monie Creek, Somerset Co., Maryland.

\+ 4 ii. Thomas Covington, born 10 May 1670 in Great Monie Creek, Somerset Co., Maryland; died 30 May 1670 in Kent Co., Maryland.

6 iv. Jeremiah Covington, born 16 December 1675 in Great Monie Creek, Somerset Co., Maryland; died 31 January 1675/76.

7 v. Thomas Covington, born before 1675 in Probably Talbot Co., Maryland; died between 1708-1709. He married Rachel.

NOTES

Thomas Covington (before 1675–ca. 1708/09) [No. 7] may not have had children.

Generation No. 3

4. Thomas[3] Covington (Nehemiah[2], John[1]) was born 10 May 1670 at Great Monie Creek, Somerset Co., Maryland. He married Rachel Ingram, daughter of James Ingram and undetermined wife. She was born 1672, from Kent Co., Maryland.

Child of Thomas Covington and Rachel Ingram is:

\+ 8 i. Henry[4] Covington, born 1693 in Kent Co., Maryland; died 31 July 1744 in Providence, Queen Anne's, Maryland.

NOTES

Thomas Covington (1670–) [No. 4] and his wife, Rachel (Ingram) Covington (1672–) are buried in St. Paul's Church cemetery, Kent Co., Maryland. [165]

Generation No. 4

8. Henry[4] Covington (Thomas[3], Nehemiah[2], John[1]) was born 1693 in Kent Co., Maryland, and died 31 July 1744 in Providence, Queen Anne's, Maryland. He married Mary Blackistone. She was born 1700, of Church Hill, Queen Anne's, Maryland, and died after 31 July 1744.

Child of Henry Covington and Mary Blackistone is:

\+ 9 i. Benjamin[5] Covington, born 1722 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died 07 October 1767 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Generation No. 5

9. Benjamin[5] Covington (Henry[4], Thomas[3], Nehemiah[2], John[1]) was born 1722 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died 07 October 1767 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. He married Elizabeth 1740. She was born about 1724, of Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died before 17 May 1796.

Children of Benjamin Covington and Elizabeth are:

10 i. Elizabeth[6] Covington, born about 1740.
11 ii. John Covington, born 19 October 1740.
12 iii. Annie Covington, born about 1742.
13 iv. Henry Covington, born 20 August 1742 in Church Hill, Queen Anne's, Maryland; died 07 July 1805.
14 v. Benjamin Covington, born about 1744; died after 1790.
15 vi. Sarah Covington, born about 1744.
16 vii. Mary Covington, born about 1746.
17 viii. Rachel Covington, born about 1748.
18 ix. Ann Covington, born about 1749.
19 x. Rebecca Covington, born about 1754.
\+ 20 xi. Benjamin Covington, born about 1755, of Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died about 27 August 1811 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.
21 xii. Rachel Covington, born about 1755.

NOTES

Elizabeth Covington (ca. 1724–before 17 May 1796, Mrs. Benjamin Covington) was a widow when she married him.

John Covington (1740–) [No. 11] was christened in 1741 in St. Luke's Church, Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Henry Covington (1742–1805) [No. 13] was christened in 1742 in St. Luke's Church, Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Generation No. 6

20. Benjamin[6] Covington (Benjamin[5], Henry[4], Thomas[3], Nehemiah[2], John[1]) was born about 1755, of Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died about 27 August 1811 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. He married Elizabeth. She was born about 1755, of Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Child of Benjamin Covington and Elizabeth is:

\+ 22 i. Ebenezer[7] Covington, born about 1772, of Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died about 19 July 1833.

Generation No. 7

22. Ebenezer[7] Covington (Benjamin[6], Benjamin[5], Henry[4], Thomas[3], Nehemiah[2], John[1]) was born about 1772, of Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died about 19 July 1833. He married Elizabeth about 1794. She was born about 1770, of Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Child of Ebenezer Covington and Elizabeth is:

\+ 23 i. John H.[8] Covington, born 1798, of Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died after 1865.

NOTES

This Ebenezer Covington (ca. 1772–1833) [No. 22] may have been one of the town Commissioners of Centreville, Queen Anne's Co. On 2 May 1820, Ebenezer Covington was appointed to replace Thomas Kent, who had resigned; and at the same time Richard Earle Clayton was appointed as a Commissioner in place of William Clayton, deceased.

Another child of Ebenezer Covington could be the "Eben[ezer] M. Covington", born about 1797, whose own family is listed in the 1850 U.S. census for Queen Anne's Co., Maryland (District 3, dwelling no. 274 in order visited).

Generation No. 8

23. John H.[8] Covington (Ebenezer[7], Benjamin[6], Benjamin[5], Henry[4], Thomas[3], Nehemiah[2], John[1]) was born 1798, of Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died after 1865. He married Katherine W. Smith 26 September 1826 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, daughter of James Smith and Nancy Young. She was born about 1801, and died 30 April 1881.

See the main Smith genealogy for information about John and Katherine (Smith) Covington.

49. Mary[6] Smith (George[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 09 November 1808 in Maryland, and died 1848 at Upper Heathworth, Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. She married John Smith 21 May 1838 in Baltimore, Maryland, son of James Smith and Nancy Young. He was born 06 June 1795 in Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died 07 October 1857 at Upper Heathworth, Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Children and notes are listed above under (46) John Smith.

51. Sarah Rebecca[6] Smith (George[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 04 October 1812, and died after 1860. She married William Fisher. He was born 29 September 1810, and died 08 February 1874.

Children of Sarah Smith and William Fisher are:

	98	i.	George Thomas[7] Fisher, born 28 September 1834; died November 1934.
	99	ii.	William James Fisher, born 29 November 1835; died 26 January 1854.
	100	iii.	Samuel Fisher, born 19 September 1840 in Maryland; died 02 October 1867.
	101	iv.	Robert Henry Fisher, born about 1842 in Maryland; died 22 June 1866.
+	102	v.	George Mifflin D. Fisher, born 23 February 1845 in Maryland; died 02 November 1932.
+	103	vi.	Catherine Fisher, born 13 September 1847 in Maryland.
	104	vii.	Sarah Fisher, born 15 June 1849 in Maryland; died 11 December 1890. She married (1) Sewell. She married (2) James Poore; died 1920.
+	105	viii.	Carroll Fisher, born 04 July 1854 in Maryland; died 14 May 1927.
	106	ix.	Philip Fisher, born 18 August 1859 in Maryland; died 09 January 1860.

NOTES

51. Sarah (Smith) Fisher (1812–after 1860)

Another possible birth date for Sarah Rebecca Smith is 3 February 1815.

William Fisher (1810–1874)
(husband of Sarah Rebecca Smith)

Another possible birth date for William Fisher is 28 July 1810. At the time of the 1860 U.S. census he is a farmer residing in the 3rd District, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland (Centreville post office).

98. George Thomas Fisher (1834–1934)

There is a family record that George Thomas Fisher became the Treasurer of Delaware, but this seems to be confused with one George Purnell Fisher (1817-1899), First Auditor of the Delaware Treasury Department, 1889-1893. The auditor Fisher seems not to be a family relation.

52. George Moore[6] Smith (George[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 04 October 1812 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died 9 February 1891 in Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. He married Eliza Fosbenner 08 July 1835 in Baltimore, Maryland. She was born about 1817 in Maryland, and died after 9 February 1891. Also see Additions & Corrections

Children of George Smith and Eliza Fosbenner are:

	107	i.	Mary Elizabeth[7] Smith, born about 1836 in Maryland.
	108	ii.	George Smith, born about 1838 in Maryland; died after 9 February 1891.

NOTES

52. George Moore Smith (1812–1891)

The "Smith Genealogy" gives 9 October 1812 as George M. Smith's date of birth; the Bible of George Smith, his father, records G. M. Smith's birth on 4 October 1812.

Although George Moore Smith was a native of Queen Anne's County, he went to Baltimore as a young man where he established himself as a lumber merchant specializing in maritime work. He also entered politics in Baltimore. In 1860, he moved to Queen Anne's Co., where he became a farmer near Centreville and continued a lumber business in the town of Centreville and was a prominent member of the community. On the genealogical scroll by Edward S. Smith, which accompanied his "Smith Family Genealogy", George Moore Smith is noted to have been at his decease an actuary for George Washington College[166] at Chestertown, Maryland. The scroll also states that he was a "highly esteemed and a fastidious dresser". In his day, George Moore Smith was indeed the successful businessman of the family and was very involved in the affairs of politics and his Methodist church.

The death of George Moore Smith was not noticed in Smith family records; why this was so is not known. In 2007, his February 1891 obituary was found in the Baltimore newspaper, The Sun (see farther below).

Business directories for Baltimore, Maryland, list George Moore Smith's businesses:

1851: "Smith, Burnett & Co., Barre near Light"[167]
1852: "Smith, Burnett & Co., Barre near Light"[168]
1853: "Smith, Burnett & Co. lumber mts. Barre w Light"[169]
1855: "Smith (Geo. M.,) Burnett (Sam'l,) & co., lumber merchants, 18 Barre"[170]
1856: "Smith, Burnett & Co., lumber merchants, cor. Hughes and Johnson". There is also a listing for "Smith George M. (S., Burnett & Co.) 166 Hanover".[171]

The Barre St. location, west of Light St., is immediately west of the Inner Basin of Baltimore Harbor. By 1857, the firm was located on the south side of the Inner Basin, at Great Hughes (today East Hughes St.) and Johnson (or Johnston) Sts., where they had a wharf. The firm dissolved in early 1860 when Smith sold his partnership share to Burnett (see below).

George M. Smith is listed in several real estate cases filed in the Baltimore County Court (1837, 1848) and in the Baltimore City Superior Court (1852, 1859). In all but one of these cases both George M. Smith and Samuel Burnett are listed together on case documents, thus these cases were business ventures and not personal real estate. As is noticed by further comments below, he seems to have been active in real estate ventures throughout his life.

He was elected in 1858 to a two-year term in the Maryland Assembly, House of Delegates, representing Baltimore City.[172] Other political activities are not known at this time, although his obituary in the Baltimore Sun indicates that he was active in politics.

After the death in 1857 of his widower brother, Capt. John Smith of Queen Anne's Co., George Moore Smith and his cousins, John Price and Mordicai Price, of Baltimore, signed Guardian Bond for three of John's five children, Sarah R., John E., and James S. Smith. The elder children, Mary and James, were about 18 years of age; Mary was soon married, and James seems to have gone to work outside of the family. (See notes with Capt. John Smith regarding the disposition of the children.) At this time, too, one of Capt. John Smith's sailing vessels, the schooner William Stevens, was sold at auction by order of the Orphans' Court of Queen Anne's County, as noticed by a series of advertisements in the Baltimore newspaper, The Sun. The auction took place at the Smith & Burnett wharf in Baltimore:[173]

> SCHOONER "WILLIAM STEVENS" AT AUCTION.—ORPHANS' COURT SALE.—By virtue of an order of the Hon. Orphans' Court of Queen Anne's county, we shall sell by public auction at the wharf of Messrs. Smith & Burnett, south side of the basin, at the hour of 4 o'clock on TUESDAY AFTERNOON, Nov. 3d, the SCHOONER WILLIAM STEVENS, with all her Tackle, & c. She is built of the best materials, copper-fastened and locust upper works.—Can be seen at the wharf.

"George Smith" being a common name, he has been difficult to locate in the U.S. censuses prior to 1850, when the censuses did not enumerate other household residents, nor did they provide actual ages, occupations, or places of birth. The information gleaned from the censuses that are known to pertain to our George M. Smith are as follows:

Occupations for George Moore Smith (from U.S. censuses and other sources):

1850 census: lumber merchant
1860 census (Baltimore): merchant
1860 census (3rd District, Queen Anne's Co.): farmer
1870 census: merchant
1878 Maryland directory: lumber dealer

In the 1840 U.S. census for Baltimore, two George Smiths are candidates: a "Geo. Smith" in the 1st Ward, and a "Geo. W. Smith" [sic] in the 12th Ward. The distribution of age ranges for the individuals in each of these households is correct for the George Moore Smith household as it would have been in 1840.

George M. Smith's removal from Baltimore to his native Queen Anne's County seems to have been anticipated. His partnership with Samuel Burnett was dissolved early in 1860, as publicized in a series of legal notices placed in Baltimore newspapers:[175]

> THE CO-PARTNERSHIP heretofore existing under the name and style of SMITH & BURNETT was dissolved January 23, 1860, by mutual consent. All persons indebted and having claims will please call and make early settlement. Either party is authorized to use the name of the firm in settlement.

In family records, it was known that George M. Smith moved from Baltimore to near Centreville sometime in the 1860s. More recent investigations have revealed his presence in Centreville in the early 1860s. In fact, it seems that his removal to Queen Anne's Co. was accomplished in late July or early August of 1860, as documented by a fortuitous double-counting in the 1860 U.S. census. It seems that G.M. Smith was counted in Baltimore on 16 July and then counted again in the vicinity of Centreville, [175] Legal notice, The Sun (Baltimore) (25 Feb 1860).

[176] Hughes St. parallels the south side of the Inner Basin of Baltimore Harbor, running along the north side of Federal Hill Park. The name of Johnson (or Johnston) St. does not seem to be now in use in this section of Baltimore, and possibly the street itself no longer exists, inasmuch as the wharves on the south side of the basin likewise were removed when the Inner Harbor area was rebuilt for public use and entertainment. The "Old Stand" is a frequently used term to locate mercantile businesses and thus has no specific historical significance with respect to the firm of Smith & Burnett.

Queen Anne's Co., on 23 August. The household members and their ages are the same in both enumerations, with the exception of niece Sarah, who seems to have remained in Baltimore (see below).

George M. Smith left Baltimore at a time of rising unrest preceding the outbreak of the Civil War, and at a time of seething and literally bloody politics in Baltimore. Perhaps he moved also because of pro-slavery sentiments, which his ancestral county more favorably embraced. The 1860 census slave schedule for District 3 of Queen Anne's Co. lists George M. Smith as holding two slaves (one male, aged 17, and one female, aged 15) residing in one slave house.[177]

George M. Smith purchased Upper Heathworth from the estate of his brother-in-law, Capt. John Smith, the farm in Spaniard Neck. In 1863, the property was in turn sold to one Capt. Monteville Bowen (see under John Smith, No. 41).

Also see Additions & Corrections

George M. Smith also had a farm of 303 acres about one mile south of Centreville, north of the road to Taylor's Hill.[178] This is noticed in the 1866 J.G. Strong map of Election District 3 in Queen Anne's Co.[179], which shows the location of most, if not all, property owners. The "G.M. Smith" farm is located on the map on the road leaving Centreville to the south, and situated just north of what today is Taylors Mill Rd. When the site of the G. M. Smith farm south of Centreville was visited in 2006, a large housing development had been built there not long before. It is not known when Smith disposed of his farm, or whether it remained a part of his estate.

On the 1866 map, a separate detail of the town of Centreville also depicts the "G.M. Smith Lumber Yard" on the north side of Broadway, a block west from the Queen Anne's County Court House.[180] (Of note is the "R. G. Price Lumber Yard" directly across, on the south side of the street; whether or not this was the business of a relation is undetermined.)

The next we are aware of George M. Smith in Queen Anne's Co. is notice on 20 February 1866, when he was appointed to a committee to draft articles of association for a bank that would ultimately be formed in 1874 as the Bank of Centreville.[181] It seems that he served only in an advisory capacity, and not as an officer of the bank.

It seems that George M. Smith also was in the building contract business. A passing note in Frederic Emory's history of Queen Anne's County recounts:[182]

[177] Also of note is that the 1860 census for both Baltimore and Queen Anne's Co. list free black men and women in the George M. Smith households, who probably worked as servants and cooks. In Baltimore, there were Susan Jones, aged 12, and Emily Jones, aged 18; in Queen Anne's Co. there was William McDaniel, aged 28.

> [In 1868] The jail had already been rebuilt and strengthened under a contract awarded Aug. 27, 1867, to George M. Smith and John H. Evans, the Legislature in that year having authorized the county commissioners to build a new jail at a cost not to exceed $8000.

An 1877 map of Centreville shows the Smith lumber yard in Centreville split into two lots, one marked "George M. Smith" (with a building on the property) and, on the east, a lot marked "Lumber Yard".[183] (The "R. G. Price Lumber Yard" is still across the street.) (The 1878 Maryland directory notes the Centreville lumber merchants, Geo. M. Smith and Robert G. Price.)

In 1883, a "G. M. Smith" and a "James Smith", who presumably were George M. Smith and Capt. James Smith of this genealogy, were among the Trustees elected on 15 January to oversee the Wye Camp Ground of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The Wye Camp was a part of the Centreville Charge, Easton District of the Wilmington Conference. The first church-camp meeting at "Head of Wye" was in 1807, which since 1810 was known as Wye Camp. The land was eventually given to the Centreville M.E. church in 1879.[184]

George Moore Smith's obituary was published in the Baltimore Sun, as follows:[185]

> A Leading Business Man's Death.
> [Special Dispatch to the Baltimore Sun.]
> CENTREVILLE, MD., Feb. 9.—Mr. George M. Smith, a prominent and active business man of this place, died at his residence, in Centreville, at 2.20 P. M. today, of Bright's disease. He had been complaining for some months, but was confined to his bed for only about four or five weeks. Mr. Smith was a native of Queen Anne's county. In early manhood he went to Baltimore, where he worked at carpentering, and after saving some money he, with a friend, formed the copartnership of Smith & Burnet [sic] and conducted the lumber business for many years. He was an active politician and became market-master, and was a member of the Legislature from Baltimore and a life-long friend of Gov. Thomas Swann.[186] In 1835 he married Miss Eliza A. Isbenner [sic], of Baltimore, who survives him. In 1863 Mr. Smith bought the Bowen farm, a

[186] More information about G. M. Smith's friendship with Gov. Swann is not had at this time. Thomas Swann (1809-1883) was born in Alexandria, Virginia and died at his home, Moreven, near Leesburg, Virginia. He studied law at the University of Virginia and became an accomplished businessman. He was and a director of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., 1844-1847, and its President 1847-1853, then was President of the Northeastern Virginia Railroad Co., 1853-1856. He was elected as Mayor of Baltimore in 1856, running on the ticket of the Know-Nothing Party, serving one term until 1860. During his term he worked to quell the great violence in political and electoral affairs in the city. In 1863-1864 he was the President of the First National Bank of Baltimore. In 1864 he was nominated as the candidate for Governor on the Union Party ticket, running with Lieutenant-Governor candidate Christopher C. Cox; they were elected by a majority vote and Swann, who was given the oath of office on 11 Jan 1865, did not in fact become Governor until 10 Jan 1866 and became a Democrat. He served one term, until Jan 1869 when he assumed an elected seat in the U.S. House of Representatives, where he served until 1879. (>>Maryland State Archives website, citing Frank F. beautiful estate on the Chester river, and returned to his native county.[187] In 1864 he bought property in Centreville, and soon after went into the coal and lumber business and continued to prosper. During his residence here he was town commissioner for many years and was the foreman of more grand juries than any man who ever lived in the county. For nearly fifty years he was an active Methodist; was trustee, steward, superintendent of the Sunday-school, and always a trusted leader in religious matters. His loss will be deeply felt. He died in his seventy-eighth year, and leaves a widow and one son. The funeral will take place at his late residence in Centreville on Wednesday, at 3 P. M. Interment in Mt. Olivet Cemetery, Baltimore.[188]

(wife of George Moore Smith)

Her maiden name has also been given as "Fasbenner", and in her husband's obituary as "Isbenner". She lived in Baltimore, Maryland. The Fosbenner family (under this and variant spellings, including the roots "Fosben–", "Fasben–", "Isben–" or "Eisben–") has not been located in U.S. censuses. It is possible that the name as suggested in the "Smith Family Genealogy" is not correct. Also see Additions & Corrections

Her sister, Susannah Fosbenner, married Joseph William Wesley Watson [No. 94].

107. Mary Elizabeth Smith (ca. 1836–)

She is noted as "Marie" on the genealogical scroll accompanying the "Smith Genealogy", perhaps a lapsus for "Mary E." She is there noted to have died as a young woman and is said to have been beautiful. She is not known to have married but was not residing in the George Moore Smith household at the time of the 1860 census, thus she may have been deceased at that time.

108. George Smith (ca. 1838–after 9 February 1891)

At the time of the 1860 census in Baltimore, George Smith is a clerk (probably in his father's lumber business), residing with his parents; in the Queen Anne's Co. census for that year, he is with his parents but no occupation is listed for him. In the 1870 census in Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., he is again a clerk and residing with his parents.

The genealogical scroll accompanying the "Smith Genealogy" notes that he died as a young man. However, he was still alive at the time of his father's death in 1891, when he was in his 50s. He has not been located in subsequent censuses.

Note 187 Also see Additions & Corrections

[188] Among the notable people who were buried in Mt. Olivet Cemetery are Francis Scott Key and several bishops of the Methodist church.

Note Regarding
91. Sarah Rebecca Price Smith (1846–1932/33)

George Moore Smith's orphaned niece, Sarah Rebecca Price Smith, daughter of Capt. John Smith, lived with George after her father's death. In the 1860 U.S. census for Baltimore, she is listed as "Sarah Smith", but she does not appear in the 1860 census for Queen Anne's Co. a month later, when (as noted above) George Moore Smith had relocated there. As noticed in a little more detail under Sarah Smith [see No. 91 under John Smith, No. 46], the 15-year-old may have been left behind in Baltimore to work as a domestic.

53. Susan Catherine[6] Smith (George[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 05 January 1818 in Maryland, and died 20 January 1853. She married (1) William Watson. He was born about 1793 in Maryland. She married (2) Samuel Smith Tarbutton 18 January 1841 in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, son of Samuel Tarbutton and Martha Dudley. He was born 06 October 1816 in Maryland, and died 10 September 1903.

Children of Susan Smith and Samuel Tarbutton are:

+	110	ii.	William J. Tarbutton, born 18 August 1842 in Maryland; died after January 1920.
+	111	iii.	John Smith Tarbutton, born 18 August 1845 in Maryland; died January 1916.
+	112	iv.	Sarah Catherine Tarbutton, born 23 September 1847 in Maryland; died 14 November 1934.
	113	v.	Enoch Dudley Tarbutton, born 10 May 1849 in Maryland; died February 1880.
	114	vi.	Uriah Dudley Tarbutton, born 03 September 1852 in Maryland; died 09 February 1880.

NOTES

53. Susan Catherine (Smith) Watson Tarbutton (1818–1853)
"Kitty"

The "Smith Genealogy" gives her birth date as 6 January 1817. She was generally known as Catherine. George Smith's bible records her birth date as 5 January 1818. Mary Smith's Bible does not mention a Catherine Smith. The Smith Family genealogical chart compiled by Edward S. Smith gives her name just as "Katharine Smith".

William Watson (ca. 1793–)

William Watson is listed in the 1860 U.S. census as a farmer in the 3rd District, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Samuel Smith Tarbutton (1816–1903)
(husband of Susan Catherine Smith)

The marriage of Susan Smith and Samuel Smith Tarbutton was officiated by Rev. Crane. They are buried on the Tarbutton Farm (private), Dudley Corner Rd. (Rt. 290) near junction with Rts. 290/301, south of Pondtown, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Occupations of Samuel Smith Tarbutton (from U.S. censuses):
1850-1870: Farmer
1880: Retired farmer
1900: Farmer

Residences of Samuel Smith Tarbutton (from U.S. censuses):

NOTES

59. Joseph Edmund Smith (1830–1910)

During part of his career, Rev. Joseph Edmund Smith was the pastor of Mount Vernon Methodist Church, Baltimore, Maryland. (See more about the church below.)

One genealogical database lists his wife as Caroline R. Emmerson, marriage date 13 May 1852, without further specifics.

Residences of Rev. Joseph Edmund Smith (from U.S. censuses):
1860: Mispillion Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware
1870: 14th Ward, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Rev. Smith assumed the pastorate of the Mount Vernon Place church in March 1896. Although nothing has thus far been located regarding his early work in the ministry, the following announcement provides a little information on the matter, as well as about the kind of minister he was:[189] Also see Additions & Corrections

TO SUCCEED DR. TOWNSEND.

Dr. J. E. Smith Called to Mt. Vernon Place Methodist Church.

Rev. J. E. Smith, D. D., L.L. D., of State Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Trenton, N. J., has been called to Mt. Vernon Place Church, Baltimore, to succeed Dr. L. T. Townsend, who has tendered his resignation, to take effect in March, 1896.

The official board of Mt. Vernon Place Church decided unanimously to tender the call to Dr. Smith. Dr. Henry M. Wilson went to Trenton and notified Dr. Smith of the call, which was accepted.

Mr. Smith is a man in middle life and was born on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. Since his entry into the Methodist ministry he has been connected with the Philadelphia Conference. Previous to his call to Trenton he was located at Scranton and Wilkesbarre[Wilkes-Barre], Pa., and St. Paul, Minn. His degree of D. D. was received from Dickinson College. The degree of LL. D. was conferred upon him by the West Virginia University, the presidency of which institution was tendered him some time ago, but which he declined.

The pulpit delivery of Dr. Smith is said to be brilliant and forcible. He is an extemporaneous speaker. In theological research he is regarded as one of the best read of American clergymen. Dr. Smith has never preached in Baltimore nor held a Maryland charge. He will not come to this city before March.

Although his sermons were no doubt numerous, one was a New Year's Eve missive quoted, presumably in summary, in the Baltimore Sun in 1900, which is reprinted here as an example of his oratory:[190]

JESUS' WORD WILL BE LAW

Dr. Smith Says It Will Rule Business, Home and Pleasure.

Rev. Dr. Joseph Edmund Smith preached at Mount Vernon Church yesterday morning upon "The Message of the Past to the Present," from the text "Other man labored and ye are entered into their labors."

Mr. Smith began by stating that the course of history and of nature shows that nothing is done in vain—there has been and can be no pause; each action has its influence upon succeeding events. He then said:

"How different a world is ours from the world of 1800: Never in its history has there been seen such progress as that which has marked our country during the present century. Territorially our expansion has been marvelous. In 1800 we had 815,244 square miles of territory; today we have 3,768,521 square miles. This is unparalleled in the history of the world. Our population was but 5,300,000; now it is 76,000,000. From insignificant colonies we have in that short time become one of the most important of the world powers. Intellectually we have taken our place among the most cultured nations of the world. A century ago it was scornfully asked, 'Who reads an American book?' This question is no longer heard.

"But the greatest message from the past is one of spiritual inheritance. In nothing during the past century has thee been greater development than in our religious ideas. In no period of history has there been such merciless criticism of the bible and of the religion which it teaches than during the century now about to close. The result has been not to obscure or undermine these truths, but to convince us that truths of Christianity are indestructible.

"Absolute loyalty to Jesus Christ will be another characteristic of the church of tomorrow. His word will e our law in business, in the quiet of our homes and in our seasons of recreative pleasures. Be assured that the religion of tomorrow is not to be a loose, nerveless, lifeless profession. It is to be a life patterned after the life of our Lord—a life that sacrifices all for the attainment of its highest possibilities."

Since so little is preserved of Rev. Joseph Edmund Smith's sermons (at least so far as has been found), another one summarized in quotation in the Baltimore Sun is worth transcribing as well:[191]

THE FIRST SKEPTIC

REV. Dr. Joseph Edmund Smith Preaches On Cain.

CREED DETERMINES DESTINY

"I Will Not Believe What I Cannot Comprehend" Was Cain's Creed, and It Led To His Undoing.

Rev. Dr. Joseph E. Smith, pastor of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church, delivered a strong sermon at the evening service yesterday, taking as his subject, "Cain, the First Skeptic." He said, in part:

"I know of nothing that would be more helpful or healthful than a careful study of the character of Cain. It will teach you the real nature of sin and its dreadful effect upon a human life. Here is a man living just outside the Garden of Eden. Every moment of his life he was living face to face with the awful fact and dreadful consequences of his sin. And over against this was placed the goodness and mercy of God; the promise of a deliverer was given. One would suppose that consecration, obedience and love would be the controlling principles of the soul. Instead, we find selfishness, jealousy and skepticism, developing into murder. He is unmoved even by the death of his brother and adds falsehood to murder when talking to God. Such, my friends, was its effect on Cain. Such has been its effect throughout the ages, and such will be its effect upon you.

"In the study of Cain I will begin with his religious creed. We are living in an age of indifference to creeds. In some quarters there is an impatience with them. Is this right? The convictions of a man form the man's character; they mold the man's life; they make him what he is. A creed you must have, and your destiny will be its legitimate outcome.

"Now, as to Cain's creed. He believed in God as the source of every blessing, and acknowledged his obligations to Him. He was even willing to offer a sacrifice to Him and brought of the fruit of the ground. Why was it not equally as good as that of Abel? Because it was not according to the divine requirements. In other words, Cain was the first skeptic. He was the first man to disdainfully reject revelation and to rely solely upon reason for his guidance. His creed has come down to us today unaltered. It is short and simple. 'I will not believe what I cannot comprehend. I will have nothing to do with mysteries. I am willing to acknowledge my obligations to God. I offered Him of the fruits of the field that he has given me. This I can understand, but beyond it I will not go.'

"My friends, do you not see that the genius of thousands of years has not improved upon the reasoning of Cain. It is a creed that dares measure the divine command by human reason and dares disobey the divine law if it cannot be comprehended by human understanding.

"This history of Cain teaches us the secret of skepticism. The difficulty, it shows us, is not with the requirements but with us. The root of all infidelity is sin."

[191] The Sun (Baltimore), 26 Feb 1900.

> Dr. Smith spoke of the terrible feeling of jealousy that animated Cain toward his brother and of his demand that god should treat him as if he were right. "Murder," he said, "is the ripe fruit of a life of unbelief. Cain stands branded a murderer, and the brand is ineffaceable."
> Dr. Smith closed his sermon by speaking of the awful consequences of Cain's deed and of the cry of his brother's blood from the ground unto God for vengeance. "You may escape the laws of man, but the law of God, never."

He also lectured on biblical history, as is indicated by the following announcement:[192]

> Rev. J. E. Smith, D. D., pastor of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church, will tomorrow evening begin a series of Sunday evening lectures on the women of the Old Testament. These lectures will be studies in womanhood, the special purpose of which will be to point out the excellence and defects in the nature of woman as shown by the history of those Old Testament characters.

Mount Vernon Methodist Church and a genealogical connection to Francis Scott Key

Mount Vernon Methodist Church was constructed during 1870-1871 at 2–6 East Mount Vernon Place, northeast of the Washington Monument, in Baltimore. It was built on the homesite of Dr. Charles Howard (1802-1869) and family, a Greek Revival style mansion that had originally been part of "Belvedere", the estate of Charles Howard's father, John Eager Howard (1752-1827). J. E. Howard gave a part of his land, at the highest point in Baltimore, to erect the 178-foot-high Washington Monument. Dr. Charles Howard subdivided the estate, establishing Mount Vernon Place as an upscale urban development, which today is part of the Mount Vernon Historic District, embracing grand residential, commercial, and institutional buildings.[193] Francis Scott Key (1779-1843), author of The Star-Spangled Banner, died at the Howard home while visiting his daughter, Elizabeth, Mrs. William Howard (see the footnote below for information about the genealogical connection to our Smith family).[194] The house left

[194] Francis Scott Key was born 1 Aug 1779 in Frederick (now Carroll) Co., Maryland, and died 11 Jan 1843 in Baltimore, Maryland. He was the son of John Ross Key, an Army officer during the Revolutionary War, and Anne Phoebe (Penn) Dagworthy Charlton Key. By profession Francis Scott Key was a lawyer and writer. In 1802, he married Mary Tayloe Lloyd, known as "Polly", daughter of Edward Lloyd (1744-1796) and Elizabeth (Tayloe) Lloyd (1749/50-1825) of Wye House, Talbot Co., Maryland; they had 11 children, including Elizabeth Key, who married William Howard. (See the Lloyd collateral genealogy in Appendix 2 for more complete genealogical information.)

During the War of 1812 Francis Scott Key, after detention aboard HMS Surprise, was released to the American ship, Minden, in Baltimore harbor. There, on the night of 13-14 Sep 1814, he witnessed the British naval bombardment and American defense of Fort McHenry. His lyrics, The Defense of Fort M'Henry, were written to the melody of To Anacreon in Heaven, a popular English drinking song composed by John Stafford Smith. Henry's lyrics were first printed in the Baltimore American on 21 Sep 1814 to modest attention. The "Defense" received greater recognition and acclaim during the Civil War, inspiring Congress to consider legislation for a national anthem, but it was not until 1931 that Key's lyrics were adopted as the national anthem. Francis Scott Key is buried in Mt. Olivet Cemetery, Frederick, Maryland. (>>Richard E. Mezo, "Francis Scott Key" in American National Biography, John A. Garraty and Mark C. Mount Vernon Place United Methodist Church, Baltimore, Maryland

Rev. Joseph E. Smith assumed the pastorate of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church in March 1896 after a long series of pastorates in the Northeast.

This was the site of the home of Dr. Charles Howard. Francis Scott Key, author of the "Star Spangled Banner", died there while visiting his daughter, Mrs. William Howard. Key had married one of the Lloyds of Queen Anne's County,through whom there is a distant family connection.

the Howard family by 1853, when it was rented by (and eventually sold to) Francis B. Hays, who in turn sold the garden portion of the former Howard property (today this is 8–10 East Mount Vernon Place). In 1863, Mr. and Mrs. Hays sold the home to Charles A. Gambrill (1806-1869), a wealthy miller who died while the house was being enlarged. The property then was then bought by the Charles Street Methodist Church, which sought a new, larger location away from the commercial district in which the church had been (northeast corner of Charles and Fayette Sts.). The Howard mansion was razed, and the cornerstone for the new church on Mount Vernon Place laid on 26 September 1870.

The church, first known as the Mount Vernon Place Methodist Episcopal Church, was designed in the Neo-Gothic style by architects Thomas Dixon and Charles L. Carson and built by Benjamin F. Bennett. Its serpentine and sandstone façade weathered in oddly colored patterns, which required the replacement of some 5,000 pieces of stone. The church remains in use by the same congregation that built it.

She never married. At the time of the 1920 U.S. census, she resided with her brother, Rev. Herbert Scott Smith, at 1859 Mintwood Place, Washington, D.C.

Elizabeth Mack Munger's research included this remark in correspondence:

> My Mother had a cousin, Caroline F. Smith, who went into DAR [Daughters of the American Revolution] on the line of a Capt. James Moore who served with George Rogers Clark. His wife was Catharine Biggs. Their daughter was Susannah, (b. 1777 according to Caroline's papers) and she married a James Smith who had sons James, George, and other children.[195]

Note that this birth date is several years after the death date of the father of the Susannah Moore as listed in the present genealogy.

Rev. Herbert Scott Smith, D.D., never married. He was the second rector (1899-1940) of St. Margaret's Episcopal Church at 1830 Connecticut Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C., situated on the northwest corner of Connecticut Ave. and Bancroft Place. The edifice had been completed in 1896. The following notes about the Smith pastorate are taken from the history pages of St. Margaret's Internet website:[196]

> The Rev. Herbert Scott Smith was called to be the second rector on March 17, 1899 and arrived on April 1, 1899. His salary was $100.00 per month! By 1900, the congregation had grown to the point of needing a larger building. As a result, it was proposed that the structure be shifted to a > north/south axis, so that the two ends of the original structure would become the transepts for the redesigned church. The cost of this extension was to be capped at $2,500. The new configuration of the building with all of its construction was completed in 1904. By 1909, at least one of the three Tiffany windows was place[d], with the others to follow soon there after [sic].

> By 1913, St. Margaret's was feeling growing pains and the available space was deemed insufficient for the needs of the ministry and mission of the parish. It was the Rector's Aid Society, an organization for the women of the church, that proposed to the Vestry the idea of purchasing the Bingham property that was directly adjacent to the sanctuary north on Connecticut Avenue for the addition of a much needed parish hall. And while the vestry was all male, it is interesting to note that the initiative of the women played such a forward looking role in the young parish's development. To punctuate their serious intentions, the RAS also pledge[d] $1000.00 annually to the construction and out-fitting of the hoped for parish hall.
> The Rev. Herbert Scott Smith served St. Margaret's for forty-one years. He brought our young parish a great deal of respectability. A highlight of his ministry was no doubt his officiating at the wedding of President Woodrow Wilson to his second wife, Edith Bolling Galt in 1915. His tenure steered the parish through its hope-filled beginnings to a present that witnessed St. Margaret's as an established, growing, and positive presence in its community within the District of Columbia. In his letter of resignation dated February 8, 1940, he wrote: "St. Margaret's will always have my affectionate regard and earnest prayers for her future prosperity." Saying good-bye to the Reverend Smith gave most of the members of the parish an experience of transition that they had never known before. And yet far from anxious, the leadership faced the future with hope and resolve.

In the 1900 census, a Herbert S. Smith is listed in residence at 1723 H St., N.W. (no longer standing), Washington, D.C., in the home of Joseph J. Susscot[?], a policeman either for the District or for the U.S. Capitol (whether the entry reads "Capital Police" or "Capitol Police" is unclear). He resided also with a Charles Sparks and a Wright; and next door at 1725 H St. resided people named Weight, Traubitzla, Kingsley, Kingsley (again), and Pastor. All of the people in these two households, except for policeman Susscot, have no associated data (no first names other than for Sparks; no genders, dates, places of birth, or occupations). They all may have been boarders, including Rev. Smith.

At the time of the 1920 census, Herbert S. Smith resided at 1859 Mintwood Place (building standing in 2006), also near the church. With him lived his sister, Caroline. His place of birth is listed in this census as Pennsylvania; their parents are listed as having been born in Maryland.

Herbert S. Smith has not been located in the 1910 or 1930 censuses. Although contact has been made with a representative of St. Margaret's Episcopal Church, no assistance has been received from them regarding requests for information about Rev. Smith. [197]

Rev. Herbert Scott Smith officiated at the marriage of President Woodrow Wilson (1856-1924) and Edith Bolling Galt (1872-1961), Wilson's second wife.[198] The wedding took place on the evening of 18

[197] Contacts with an officer of the church in 2006 and 2007 failed to produce further information about, or a photograph of, Rev. Smith; the officer never replied after the initial contact.

[198] Woodrow Wilson was president of Princeton University, his alma mater, 1902-1910; Governor of New Jersey, 1911-1912; and the 28th President of the United States, 1913-1921. He suffered a stroke toward the close of his term in office, when Mrs. Wilson took charge of his affairs and calendar; she in turn has been inferred by some historians to have been deciding presidential matters for the President during his illness.

Rev. Herbert Scott Smith stands behind the choir boys of St. Margaret's Episcopal Church, Washington, D.C., ca. 1908 (St. Margaret's website. No other photo of Rev. H. S. Smith has thus far been found.) On 18 December 1915, Rev. Smith officiated at the wedding of President Woodrow Wilson to Edith Bolling Galt (seen below in their official White House portraits).

THE rite under which the President and Mrs. Wilson were joined in wedlock was that of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and was read by the Rev. Dr. Herbert Scott Smith, rector of St. Margaret's. It contains the vow on the part of the woman to "obey," and is as follows.

President Wilson was a Presbyterian and an elder in his church.

The Wilson–Galt wedding was sensational news, and covered intensely by the press across the nation. In many papers, Rev. Smith's portrait was reprinted, as "The Minister Who United Presidential Couple". In one newspaper at least, his name was misprinted as Herbert Knox Smith.[200] The wedding service itself was a private family affair, although widely publicized after the event.

[204] The muster roll for the 4th Maryland Battery, the "Chesapeake Battery", Confederate States Army, includes Pvt. C. G. Lynch, of Queen Anne's Co. The unit saw served throughout the war, including Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. Lynch was slightly wounded at the unit's last battle, at Fort Gregg, Virginia, 2 April 1865. Lynch recounted on 3 May 1900 some of the events of the war:[205]

> "The death of John H. Gardner, which occurred a few days ago near Queenstown, deserves more than a passing notice. He was a member of the Fourth Maryland Battery, Early's Brigade, Ewell's Division, Stonewall Jackson's Corps, C.S.A. This was known a the famous 'Chesapeake Battery,' which served with signal glory throughout the civil war. * * * This battery occupied a very conspicuously dangerous position at the bloody battle of Gettysburg, and that they suffered from this baptism of fire, the following list of casualties will clearly demonstrate. * * * Engaged in this battle where the following men from Queen Anne's, William Pinder, Gustavus Porter, John H. Gardner, Joseph H. Peters, James H. Sparks, C. G. Lynch and Thomas H. Everngam. The last named was killed in the hottest of the fight and Lynch was slightly wounded. But three of these comrades in awful times now survive, Sparks, Peters and Lynch."

NOTES

88. Mary (Smith) Townsend (1839–after 1908)
"Moll", "Mollie"

The George Smith family Bible records Mary Smith's birth: "Mary Smith daughter of John Smith & Mary Smith was born on the 25th[?] of april at noon[?] 1839." The "Smith Genealogy" gives her birthdate as 9 July 1839. The 1900 U.S. census lists her birth as in April 1839. A family photograph depicts "Molly" Smith with her brother, Rev. John Edward Smith, at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia, a residence acquired by Rev. Smith in 1909. This at least corroborates Mary Townsend being alive at this time.

Samuel Townsend (1836–1904)

In the 1850 U.S. census, Samuel Townsend is listed as Samuel Townsend, Jr.

At the time of the 1870 census, an Eliza Smith, aged 24, resided with the Samuel Townsend family; her relationship, if any, to Mary Smith Townsend is undetermined.

At the time of the 1900 census, Samuel and Mary Townsend resided with their son, Howard.

Occupations of Samuel Townsend (from U.S. censuses):
1860-1880: Farmer
1900: Day laborer

Residences of Samuel Townsend (from U.S. censuses):
1860: Appoquinimink Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware
1870, 1880: North Murderkill Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware
1900: Appoquinimink Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware (with son, Howard)

The "Smith Genealogy" notes about Samuel Townsend: [207]

> Samuel Townsend attended public schools of the district and completed his education at Middletown Military Academy.[208] He worked at home with his father until his majority, when he began farming for himself on the Davis place in 1863. He moved to Kent County, Delaware, and took charge of a farm of 800 acres in East Murderkill Hundred and spent 17 years on the place. Here he harvested large crops of grain and paid particular attention to raising fine cattle. He planted large peach orchards and cultivated and shipped peaches. It was after his father died in 1881 that he went to the Davis farm, Townsend. Like his father, he was popular and respected in the community. He cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln and identified himself with the Republican Party. He married Mary Smith, sister of my father, John Edward Smith, on November 4, 1858, in Chestertown.

Handwritten notes from Edward S. Smith mention the journalist, "Gath", pseudonym of George Alfred Townsend (1841-1914).[209] The notes state only, "Liston A. Townsend says he *think*s Gath was a second cousin of his grandfather, Samuel Townsend." However, there is no indication as to which Samuel Townsend he refers. Liston A. Townsend might be Arthur Liston Townsend (born 1881), who has not yet been linked to our family genealogy. Thus also the link to George Alfred Townsend is not proved. Arthur Liston Townsend resided in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and was alive in 1952 at least, when he is listed in New York immigration records, having returned from Bermuda; and a 1963 letter from Alfred C. Bryan [No. 206, see under Anna Virginia Smith, No. 90] to Edward S. Smith notes that Liston Townsend resided in Haddonfield, New Jersey. [210] Bryan also noted, regarding "Gath":

> I think that George A. Townsend, the author, was a son of George A. Townsend who played quite an important part in the civic and political life of Delaware. As far as I know, he was not connected with the Townsend family of Townsend, Del., tho' Liston's suggestion about them is more apt to be correct than mine.

[208] The Middletown Military Academy in Middletown, Connecticut, originally known as Partridge's American Literary, Scientific and Military Academy. An Internet web search produces numerous returns about individuals who attended the school in the 19th century, and a few returns about the historic buildings in Middletown, but thus far no historical information has been found about the school.

[209] George Alfred Townsend was born 30 Jan 1841 to Rev. and Mrs. Stephen Townsend; his father served numerous parishes in Delaware and Maryland. He first worked for the Philadelphia Inquirer in 1860, becoming city editor for the Philadelphia Press the following year. During the Civil War he was a war correspondent for the New York Herald and the New York World; he also was a ghost writer for the New York Times. He was the sole correspondent at the decisive battle of 31 Mar 1865 that precipitated the Confederate withdrawal from Petersburg and Richmond, Virginia. He also covered the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln, about which he also wrote a book about the assassin, Life, Crime and Capture of John Wilkes Booth (Dick and Fitzgerald, New York, 1865). Later he was a columnist whose material appeared in newspapers throughout the U.S. under a variety of pen names, most notably and popularly, "Gath". He later wrote books about the Delmarva Peninsula. In 1884, he purchased land near Burkettsville, Maryland, where he built an estate he called Gapland, and where in 1896 he built the only memorial to Civil War correspondents, which is near the Antietam Battlefield. The estate today is Gathland State Park. The "Smith Genealogy" also notes, "Samuel Townsend owned a large tract of land in Townsend and when the railroad was put through his land, the railroad built the Townsend Station."[211] Again, it is not clear as to which Samuel Townsend this refers.

195. Anna (Townsend) Gill (1867–)

She may have resided in Townsend, Delaware.

196. Mary Virginia Townsend (1869–1964)
"Mamie"

She never married. As of 1961 she resided in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. An address book of Earle C. Smith (predating 1964) lists her address as 5211 Baltimore Ave., Philadelphia.

Around 1962, Edward S. Smith wrote of her as a "spinster", adding,

> "She is now quite elderly and in poor health. When she was active she was a travelling salesperson and, at one time, had a novelty and card shop in Philadelphia."[212]

In the 1910 Philadelphia city directory, she is listed as M. Virginia Townsend, residing at 2633 N. 17th St. Thus far no information has been located regarding her shop.

Collateral Genealogy
(28 descendants)

The genealogy of the Townsend family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Samuel Townsend

Generation No. 1

1. Samuel[1] Townsend was born about 1781 in Delaware, and died after August 1850. He married Hannah Humphries. She was born 1782 in Delaware, and died 1829.

Children of Samuel Townsend and Hannah Humphries are:

	2	i.	Edmund[2] Townsend.
	3	ii.	Israel Townsend.
	4	iii.	John Townsend, born about 1807; died November 1876 in Townsend, Delaware.
+	5	iv.	Samuel Townsend, born 31 October 1812 in Vance's Neck, St. George's Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware; died 05 December 1881 in New Castle Co., Delaware.

NOTES

1. Samuel Townsend (ca. 1781–after August 1850)

Edward Seville Smith's "Smith Genealogy" takes note that Samuel Townsend

> ". . . came to Sussex County, Delaware, and learned coach making, but later became a sailor and, as Captain, commanded his own vessel which sailed from 'Leston's Landing'. He married Sallie Leston who inherited the Leston Landing, afterwards known as the Townsend Estate."[213]

At the time of the 1850 U.S. census, Samuel Townsend's occupation was listed as "none".

Residences of Samuel Townsend (from U.S. censuses):
1810, 1820, 1840: St. George's Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware
1850: Cantswell Bridge, New Castle Co., Delaware

At the time of the 1850 census, residing in his household were Sarah A. Townsend, aged 45, and Hannah Townsend, aged 35; their relationships have not been established.

2. Edmund Townsend

During the Civil War, Edmund Townsend served in the Union forces as Regimental Quartermaster in the 3rd Delaware Infantry. His rank upon mustering out of the service was 1st Lieutenant and Regimental Quartermaster. When he enlisted and mustered out, however, has not thus far been found in Civil War military records.[214] After the war, he resided in Prince George' Co., Maryland.[215]

3. Israel Townsend

Before the Civil War, Israel Townsend worked with his brother, John, in the timber industry. During the war, until January 1863, he worked briefly as an Army paymaster. After the war, he resided in Capeville, Virginia.

Generation No. 2

5. Samuel[2] Townsend (Samuel[1]) was born 31 October 1812 in Vance's Neck, St. George's Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware, and died 05 December 1881 in New Castle Co., Delaware. He married Anna Maria Hart July 1835 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. She was born 1816 near Chestertown, Kent Co., Maryland, and died 1894.

Children of Samuel Townsend and Anna Hart are:

	6	i.	Jane[3] Townsend.
	7	ii.	James Townsend, born 1836 in Delaware; died 1836. [Twin.]
+	8	iii.	Samuel Townsend, born August 1836 in Delaware; died 1904. [Twin.]
	9	iv.	Henrietta Townsend, born 1838 in Delaware; died 1858.
+	10	v.	Richard Townsend, born 1839 in Delaware.
	11	vi.	Mary Ann Townsend, born 1843 in Delaware; died 1928.
	12	vii.	John Townsend, born 1854 in Delaware.

[214] The 3rd Delaware Infantry was organized at Camden, Delaware, 30 Dec 1861-15 May 1862, after which it was ordered to the defenses of Washington, D.C.; the unit mustered out 3 June 1865. (>>J. Thomas Scharf, History of Delaware, 1609-1888, L. J. Richards and Co., Philadelphia, 1888.)

NOTES

5. Samuel Townsend (1812–1881)

He was the founder the town of Townsend, New Castle Co., Delaware. Regarding him, Edward S. Smith takes note in the "Smith Genealogy":[216]

> "Samuel Townsend, founder of the town of Townsend, was born on Vance's Neck and, in company with his brother John, opened and operated a ship or boat building yard. He soon proved his efficiency and became a captain of a coasting vessel. How owned the vessel he commanded. He gave up the Sea and returned to New Castle County, and bought 400 acres of marl land which was covered with heavy timber near Blackbird, Ap[p]oquinimink Hundred, Delaware. He and his brother, John, cut and processed the timber which they shipped to Philadelphia and New York and laid the foundation for their success. The well-known emigrant ships, "Tonawanda"[217] and "George" of Philadelphia were built with lumber from them.
> "The brothers were successful and kept fifty men constantly employed. After clearing the land, part of it was sold and a general store was opened by them at Ginn's Cove, Appoquinimink Hundred, although they continued to deal in lumber. Mr. Townsend afterward removed to the farm on which his son Samuel resides, and bought 300 acres of land on a part of which the town of Townsend now stands. He built the first house there. He purchased also the Davis property, now the home of his son Samuel, a farm of 250 acres in Townsend. He owned 300 acres in Kent County, Delaware, and 300 acres in Somerset County, Maryland.
> "He was one of the first as well as one of the most progressive fruit growers and shippers in Delaware. He frequently shipped in one season 40,000 baskets of peaches alone. He was known as a Union Democrat, was intelligent, well read, and a forceful and eloquent speaker. He was a member of most of the State Conventions and was one of the organizers of the White Man's Party[218] in the State. He served in the Delaware State Legislature and was a good debater.
> "Samuel Townsend married Anna Marie Hart in Philadelphia, who was an aunt of George Hart, M.D., of Townsend. She was born near Chestertown, Kent County, Maryland, in 1816. He died in his home in New Castle County in 1881 and was buried in Odessa, and his wife, Anna Marie Hart, member of the M.E. Church, died in 1894 and is buried in the cemetery of the M.E. Church, Townsend.
> "Aunt Sallie Smith Taylor, my father's sister, lived with an Ed. Hart in Townsend for along time after the death of her husband. She and her husband had a dwelling there and owned some acres of wooded land which Ed. Hart managed for Aunt Sallie. My recollection is she left her estate to the Harts."

An 1870 newspaper took note of Samuel Townsend's political position, regarding the White Man's Party:[219]

> "Mr. Samuel Townsend, of Delaware, a Democrat of the strictest sect, has resigned his position on the National Committee of the defunct Democratic party, saying that he thinks the white people in the late slave States have had enough of Northern pretended Democracy, high tariffs,

[216] "Smith Genealogy", pp. 31-32.

[217] The packet ship Tonawanda was built for preeminent Philadelphia merchant Thomas Cope, who had begun a business of transatlantic service in 1821 between Liverpool and Philadelphia. (>>Fredric M. Miller, "Philadelphia: Immigrant City", Balch Institute, Balch Online Resources, http://balchinstitute.org/resources/phila_ellis_island.html, accessed 2006.) It is possible that more than one ship was named Tonawanda. The ship George may actually be one of numerous ships named George Washington.

[218] The White Man's Party was spelled both with and without capital letters. It comprised Democrats from the state of Delaware who, following the Civil War, were intent on the political and economic subjugation of the black population. (>>J. L. Miller and Lee Williams, "Delaware's History of Hate", The News Journal (Wilmington, Del.), 12 Feb 2006).

> and other sectional measures, and that an attempt having been made to thrust Salmon P. Chase, the originator of the negro franchise and the Fifteenth Amendment, on to the Democratic party as its candidate for President, their cup of disgrace has, by the ratification of the Fifteenth Amendment, been filled to the brim. He insists that the Democratic party, being dead, ought to be buried, and another party, to be called 'The White Man's Party,' organized, and made sectional, directly to subserve the interests of white men in the late slave States, and the States bordering on and contiguous to the Pacific, where, he says, the Republicans are seeking power through the aid of Chinamen and Indian votes."

Samuel Townsend elsewhere stated, in opposition to freedom for blacks, that "in a short time" the free blacks of Delaware "might equal the white population and cause a massacre".[220]

During a frigid winter in the East early in 1881, a newspaper quoted a letter from Samuel Townsend, which draws on his experience in peach growing. First reported by The New York Times, it was drawn upon and reprinted in a Macon, Georgia, newspaper to encourage the southern planters to capitalize on events:[221]

> "The telegrams raise a fair promise of a boom for Southern peach growers this year in consequence of the reported loss of the trees from cold in all the region of the United States north of Maryland. The New York Times quotes a letter from Samuel Townsend, an old peach grower in Delaware, in which he says:
> "'Zero is too cold for peaches, and four degrees or five degrees below for twenty-four hours will kill the fruit-bearing buds and the limbs they are on.' And further on: 'There is no remedy for peach trees where the thermometer falls to from eight to fifteen degrees below zero.' Mr. Townsend's opinion is pretty generally entertained by growers, and so firmly are some of the Baltimore peach-canners convinced of its correctness that they have already advanced the prices of the stock now on hand and profess to believe that it will prove a profitable investment to carry their stock over for the next season, as the thermometer has been below zero several times all over the peninsula, and on one night fell as low as fifteen degrees below. Should this theory prove correct it will undoubtedly cause peaches to be very scarce next season, because if the peach crop is destroyed by extremely cold weather, it will be destroyed throughout New York State and along the Ohio river, in Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana and Illinois, and the temperature on the peninsula during the extremely cold season has always been higher than in the above mentioned States.
> "If, therefore, the Northern peach crop is substantially cut off, the South may be able to square accounts for the damage of the orange crop from the same cause. This, by turn, is the year for an abundant crop of Southern peaches, an dif the Northern supply fails every one we can ship there will find a ready market."

The 1840 U.S. census lists him as Samuel Townsend, Jr.; and adjacent to him is listed John Townsend.

Occupations of Samuel Townsend (from U.S. censuses and family sources):
ca. 1829: Canal laborer early 1830s: Coastal ship master later: miner and timber merchant
1850-1880 censuses: Farmer [peach grower]

Residences of Samuel Townsend (from U.S. censuses):
1850: Appoquinimink Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware
1860-1880: Townsend, Appoquinimink Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware

He was buried in Odessa, Delaware.

89. James Smith (Capt. James Smith) (1840–1912)

James Smith was educated at the Spaniard Neck School, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. In one Civil War record he has a middle initial, "J.", but the initial appears in no other family records or references thusfar seen. In some family contexts he is referred to as "Uncle Jimmy" or "Uncle Jimmie". He was a Methodist at least during his upbringing. The informant of his death certificate gave James Smith's date of birth as 3 January 1840.

At the age of 23, he was 5′ 7½″ tall, fair complexion, blue eyes, and brown hair.[222]

Edward S. Smith's recollections of his uncle, Capt. James Smith, are included in the "Smith Genealogy":[223]

> Captain James Smith, Uncle Jimmie, was born December 23, 1840, on his father's place on the Chester River, now called "Upper Heathworth["]. He married Emily Christine Reynolds, a school girl friend, both attending the Spaniard's Neck School. She was born July 16, 1842, and was affectionately called "Aunt Teen". He died January 8, 1912, at age 72 years, in Denver, Colorado.
> He was fond of ships and the water and sailed, as a young man, with his father "Capt." John Smith on Chester River and Chesapeake Bay. He and his family had a nice home in Centreville, with convenient shop and buildings for his business of contractor and builder. It is said that he built bridges and, as there is plenty of water and streams in the area, it is natural that bridges would be included within the scope of his business. Aunt Sallie Taylor spoke of a big dinner at his home after completion of one of the bridges, but did not say where that bridge had been constructed.
> He joined the Confederate Army and served with those forces in Company B, 1st Maryland Cavalry, C.S.A. under J.E.B. Stuart, and was an Honorary Member of Robert E. Lee Chapter, U.D.C. of Denver, Colorado, and received the Cross of Honor.[224] He was in a number of battles, including Gettysburg. Taken a prisoner of war, he was held in Fort McHenry near Baltimore.[225]
> It was while we were living in Jacksonville, Florida, 1892-1896 (or shortly before)[226] that he and his family moved to Denver where he continued the building business and specialized in construction of stairways. He patented a brick-laying machine.[227]

[225] He was twice a prisoner, but was never held at Fort McHenry, as discussed later in the present sketch.

[227] To date, details about this reference to a patent have not been located.

> James Smith was religious and he and his family attended the Methodist Church at Centreville. He enjoyed music and had a good singing voice. It is said that while a prison of war he had with him a tuning fork, and he and his fellow prisoners improved their time and voices by joining in singing. He was an architect, and good at mathematics.
> He and his family were active members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Centreville, Maryland, and he was choir leader for many years. He was personally acquainted with General Robert E. Lee. (photos of him and his wife).[228]
> His wife, "Aunt Teen", was born July 16, 1842 in Spaniard's Neck and died in Denver, January 25, 1929. Member of U.S.C. [sic] of Denver and was always remembered by Denver Chapter, U.D.C.
> The children of James Smith and Emily Christine Reynolds, his wife . . . all were born in Centreville, Maryland, and went with parents to Denver.

James Smith was orphaned with the death of his father in 1857. In the 1860 U.S. census, he may be the James Smith who resided in the Joseph B. Hackett household, in Sudlersville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, working as a farm hand.

James Smith enlisted in the army of the Confederate States of America in Charlottesville, Virginia, on 10 September 1862. He served as a Private throughout the war; the title, "Captain", which he used throughout his adult life, is said to have come from work as a Chesapeake Bay merchant sailor.

We have only the family tradition that he was a bay mariner, including a note from Wilbur Edward (Ed) Smith of Tacoma, Washington, grandson of Capt. James Smith, that "Family history states that [before going into building he was] a Capt of a two masted schooner, probably his Father[']s."[229] It seems doubtful that he held a full-time occupation sailing as his father had, given that he was a successful building contractor (as discussed more below). He could have operated one or more sailing vessels for the use of his contracting business; this would be practical especially for obtaining supplies from Baltimore and elsewhere around the bay and delivering them to the maritime locales where he was working.

In any case, one family anecdote indicates circumstantially that James Smith had at least one sailing vessel. W. Ed Smith reported an incident that happened to his father (James Robert Lee Smith, son of Capt. James Smith):

> One of Dad's stories was that he asked to go with him [Capt. James] on a trip, he was asked if he could swim, answering in the affirmative, they took him and a mile off shore they threw him overboard, he made it. He never asked again.[230]

As noted, James Smith might have been a farm laborer in Sudlersville in 1860, but he soon enlisted in the army for the Confederate cause. After the war we know that he was a building contractor; apparently a very successful one. One does have to ask whether he did not capitalize on his bay experience and his father's mariner rank as Captain—an inferential military rank on the return from the war might have had advantage in establishing James in business. That may be unfair to suggest, given that we do not know, but it would be a practical tack for a person intent on success. Capt. James Smith held his captaincy even after he moved to landlocked Colorado; he used the title for the rest of his life and was a proud member of Southern military fraternities in Denver. Even his death certificate, on the line for "full name", gives his name as "Captain James Smith".

In the 1878 directory for Queen Anne's County, James Smith is listed under carpenters in Centreville. In the 1880, 1900, and 1910 U.S. censuses in Maryland and Colorado, and in the 1892 and 1899 Denver city directories, James Smith's occupation is listed as carpenter.

1892 Denver city directory: 2521 Clarkson St.
1899 Denver city directory: 2910 Downing Ave.
1900 census: 2910 Downing Ave., Denver, Colorado
1910 census: 2840 Franklin St., Denver, Colorado

Edward S. Smith in the "Smith Genealogy" recalled the home of Capt. James Smith in Centreville: [231]

> My father's brother, Captain James Smith (Uncle Jimmy) was planning to move with his family from Centreville to Denver, Colorado. They went shortly before or after our Smith family moved to Jacksonville, Florida. We all went to see them in Centreville in their nice home and buildings used in his construction business—it was right in town on one of the main streets.[232] Uncle Jim and Aunt Teed [Teen] were there, the sons and the daughter, Lulu, were there of course. While there we visited our cousins, the Watsons, who lived on their good farm just across the Corsica River.

In the 1899 Denver city directory, and at the time of the 1900 census, also residing with James and Emily Smith are sons James Robert Lee Smith, Edward Watson Smith, and Harry Webster Smith. (In the 1899 directory there are a number of Frank Smiths, none of whom resided at the Downing Ave. address given for James Smith.)

Wilbur Edward (Ed) Smith informs me that he believes that his grandfather never again returned to Maryland.

combat in the First Battle of Manassas, in July 1861. By the time that James Smith joined, the unit had grown to four companies under Maj. Ridgely Brown. During the Winter of 1862-1863 the unit had picket duty, scouted, and participated in some skirmishes on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad in the Virginia Valley. In early 1863 the ranged through West Virginia and the western part of Maryland, participating in a number of battles.

In July 1863, James Smith served at the Battle of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. The 1st Maryland Battalion Cavalry was positioned behind a stand a trees that is today in the East Cavalry Battlefield section of Gettysburg National Military Historic Park. A detailed unpublished map in the Library of Congress[234] delineates the positions precisely; the line of trees still stands today to the northeast of where Cavalry Field Road turns to the south to become Confederate Cavalry Avenue, northeast of Rummel Barn. A monument to Fitzhugh Lee's Brigade is at the turn in the road.[235]

At Gettysburg, the 1st Maryland Battalion Cavalry was part of Brig. Gen. Fitzhugh Lee's Brigade under Maj. Gen. J.E.B. Stuart (Stuart's Division). In hindsight, they were fortunate, being spared the slaughter that took place in the main battlefield south of the town of Gettysburg. On the last day of the battle, 3 July 1863, Stuart's original plan of battle was to circle behind the Union lines in the main battlefield from the north and east, but, stopped by the presence of Union artillery to the south of the Rummel Farm, the relative safety of the wooded line gave welcome protection for continued action. Dismounted troopers were sent to the Rummel Farm to engage Union skirmishers while artillery fired on Union positions. The Union artillery proceeded to knock out the Confederate guns, and cavalrymen from both sides dueled in the farm fields without any gains. A confederate mounted charge was suppressed by a Union countercharge. A final charge was mounted by the 1st Maryland in front of Rummel Woods, which was first met by heavy artillery fire in return. At this point, Union's Michigan Brigade (2nd Cavalry Brigade) under Brig. Gen. George Armstrong Custer (the same who would die 13 years later at the Battle of the Little Big Horn in Montana Territory) rode out toward the head of the advancing 1st Maryland with a shout to his men, "Come on, you Wolverines!" Close-range, hand-to-hand fighting ensued, when the Union army's 3rd Pennsylvania Cavalry charged from under cover into the southern rear, at which Gen. Stuart ordered the 1st Maryland to leave the field.[236]

There is a remote possibility that James Smith may have enlisted at the same time with a distant family relation, Thomas Franklin Yates, whose daughter, Lida T. Yates, married Henry Rembert Graham (1874-1940) [see No. 252 herein]. The Driver book just cited (pp. 306-307) provides the following notation regarding Thomas Franklin Yates: "Pvt., Co. K. b. Leonardtown, St. Mary's Co., Md., circa 1843 [actually 21 Dec 1843]. Enl. Stuart Horse Arty., 8/10/62; WIA [wounded in action] (nose) Carlisle, Pa., 7/1/63 [thus he might have missed the battle at Gettysburg a few days later]. Transf. to Co. K (2nd), 1st Va. Cav., 8/14/64. Transf. to Co. K, 1st Md. Cav., 8/64; issued clothing 9/30/64. Captured in Md.; send to Old Capitol [prison] 3/65. NFR [no further record]." The citation also gives his death date as 7 May 1914, which is corroborated by other records, and that he was buried in Our Lady's Cemetery, Medley's Neck, Maryland.

(Above) Position of the 1st Maryland Battalion Cavalry, C.S.A., at the Battle of Gettysburg, July 1863. James Smith was a Private in the 1st Maryland and was present at this battle (see text). This site is a part of East Cavalry Field, Gettysburg National Miliary Historic Park, in Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. The Confederate States 1st Maryland was a part of Brig. Gen. Fitzhugh Lee's Brigade under Maj. Gen. J.E.B. Stuart (Stuart's Division). The 1st Maryland was positioned to the left of this tree line—the same tree line as which was present during the battle. Today this is where Cavalry Field Road turns to the south to become Confederate Cavalry Avenue, northeast of Rummel Barn (which from this vantage point is behind and to the right of the viewer).

Later in 1863, James Smith was captured and imprisoned for a while in the so-called Old Capitol prison, in Washington, D.C. (see text for more details). The makeshift prison, once having been a tavern or boarding house, and temporary U.S. Capitol after the British burned the actual Capitol in 1814, was at the corner of 1st and A Sts., N.E. Today the site is occupied by the Supreme Court of the United States (right).

During the Civil War, after the Battle of Gettysburg, James Smith was twice captured and imprisoned, as follows [237]: he was captured at Raccoon Ford, Virginia, 10 October 1863, and sent to the Old Capitol prison in Washington, D.C.[238]; later transferred to Point Lookout, Maryland[239]; was exchanged 6 March 1864 and paroled 1 April 1864; captured (again) in Moorefield, West Virginia, 7 August 1864, and imprisoned in Wheeling, West Virginia; transferred to Camp Chase, Ohio,[240] and again to Point Lookout; exchanged 27 March 1865. There is no further official record. According to family history,[241] James Smith had been a prisoner of war in Fort McHenry, Maryland, but National Archives records indicate that he was not.[242] Regretfully, there seem to be no surviving personal accounts of his wartime experiences.

[238] The Old Capitol Prison was a building that had been built in 1800 as a tavern or a boarding house. After the British Army burned the U.S. Capitol in 1814 and the Government returned to Washington, the building at 1st and A Sts., N.E., was leased in Dec 1815 to serve as a temporary Capitol for the legislative branch of government. The U.S. Capitol was rebuilt and occupied in 1825, and for a while thereafter the Old Capitol served as an exclusive boarding house and, later, a school. By the Civil War, the building was in disrepair and was refitted to serve as a prison. A contemporary book about life in the prison is The Old Capitol and its Inmates. By a Lady, who enjoyed the hospitalities of the Government for a "Season" [by Virginia Lomax] (E. J. Hale and Son, New York, 1867). Today the site of the Old Capitol is occupied by the Supreme Court of the United States.

[239] Point Lookout, Maryland, is a peninsula on Chesapeake Bay at the mouth of the Potomac River. In 1857 a summer resort was opened here that was leased by the Army in 1862, when Hammond Hospital was built to administer the Civil War sick and wounded. In 1863 Confederate prisoners were first sent to the site and soon the prison population swelled to 20,000; it was intended to hold 10,000. It was the largest prison camp in the North. By the end of the war more than 52,000 prisoners had been held here, of whom nearly 3,400 died. Prisoners were held inside a wooden stockade, living in tents. Black soldiers were stationed here to serve as prison guards. The dismal conditions were described some years later in Richmond, Virginia, by a former inmate of Point Lookout (Charles T. Loehr, "If it were not for Hope, how could we live in a place like this?", an address before the George E. Pickett Camp Confederate Veterans, 10 Oct 1890, Richmond (Va.) Times, 11 Oct 1890, also in Southern Historical Society Papers, Vol. 18 (1890), pp. 114-120). Another contemporary account mentions Point Lookout as well as the Confederate retreat from Gettysburg, in which our James Smith participated (John R. King, My Experience in the Confederate Army and in Northern Prisons, Stonewall Jackson Chapter No. 1333, United Daughters of the Confederacy, Clarksburg, West Virginia, 1917). Today the site is Point Lookout State Park.

[240] Camp Chase, outside Columbus, Ohio, was first a training camp for Union Army soldiers, but was soon taken over to house Confederate prisoners in cramped, unsanitary conditions; barracks built for 7,000 men soon were occupied by more than 10,000; more than 2,000 died there. Milton A. Ryan of Mississippi wrote of his experiences during the war, including as a prisoner at Camp Chase. He recalled receiving a inch of bread twice a day, a tablespoonful of navy beans, and a finger-length piece of pickled beef or salt pork; prisoners scuffled over apple cores discarded by guards (manuscript posted by Michael Gay, website http://www.izzy.net/~michaelg/mar-txt.htm, accessed 19 Aug 2004).

[242] Scott S. Sheads to Earle E. Spamer, 8 Jul 2004. At the time, Mr. Sheads (Ranger/Historian, Fort McHenry National Monument and Historic Shrine) was working on a complete accounting of prisoners of war who passed through Fort McHenry, which in any case did not serve as a prison but as a detention camp before sending the soldiers on to prisons elsewhere. None of Sheads' information showed that our James Smith passed through Fort McHenry.

When James Smith was captured at Raccoon Ford, it must have been during a skirmish or an inopportune encounter with a Union force; no significant battle took place there at that time. The encounter at Moorefield was a loss for the Confederates, with five men killed and 69 captured. One of those men captured later wrote, "We were marched on foot to New Creek station, and next day sent to Wheeling, where we were quartered in the penitentiary for three days and then sent to Camp Chase, Ohio."[243]

In April 1865, the First Maryland Cavalry made the final charge at Appomattox. Although records show that James Smith had been exchanged the month before, it is not known whether he rejoined his unit in the field and no record has thus far been found that he was at Appomattox. In any case the First Maryland was disbanded on 28 April, although one chronicler said that they never surrendered; rather, they dispersed a few men at a time to return to their Maryland homes.[244]

Years later, in Denver, Colorado, James Smith was an honorary member of the Robert E. Lee Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy[245] and, as noted in Edward S. Smith's recollections, he was awarded the Southern Cross of Honor[246] by that organization. W. Ed Smith noted, "I understand that when grandfather James Smith and grandfather Arnold got together, the North and South [were] loudly discussed."[247]

It was organized in Nashville, Tennessee, on 10 Sep 1894, originally as the National Association of the Daughters of the Confederacy. At their second meeting, in Atlanta, Georgia, in 1895, they adopted their current name. The organization was incorporated in the District of Columbia on 18 Jul 1919. Their current membership is open to "women no less than 16 years of age who are blood descendants, lineal or collateral, of men and women who served honorably in the Army, Navy or Civil Service of the Confederate States of America, or game Material Aid to the Cause." At around this time, James Smith worked as a builder, securing some significant contracts for construction in the county. In September 1876, the "female school board" (that is, the administrative board established for a girls' school) awarded James Smith the contract to build a two-story brick schoolhouse in the southwestern part of Centreville.[249] Most notably, in 1877 Smith won the contract to build the second story and additions to the Queen Anne's County Court House, in Centreville. He also worked on the interior details of the court room.

The courthouse is among the significant historic structures of Maryland, serving as the Queen Anne's County seat of government. The building was constructed between 1792 and 1794, after the county seat had been moved in 1782 from Queenstown to Centreville by Act of the Maryland Assembly. The town of Centreville was laid out and building began at this time. It was located centrally in the county, hence its original name, Centre Ville, which also reflected the adulation of everything French following the Revolutionary War.[250] Although the first cases were heard in the courthouse in 1794, the Court did not accept the building until 1 June 1796, when it was "taken, held and deemed to be the proper Court House of Queen Anne's County."[251] It is the only courthouse in Maryland in continuous use since its construction.

Some seven decades later the courthouse required remodeling. Again, nine years later it needed further rebuilding to "a scale which will change it from one of the most inconvenient to the one of the most desirable of our county buildings".[252] The main building was widened by 30 feet, and the northern wing was doubled in size. The architect for this job was J. Crawford Neilson of Baltimore; James Smith was the builder.[253] Newspaper accounts took notice. A clipping from 26 April 1877 first provided a diagram of the proposed floorplans for the first and second floors. Other articles followed the progress of construction:[254] as follows: Capt. James Smith, $6,800 in money, Mr. Badders, $7,195 in County Bonds at 95 per cent, Messrs. West & Carroll, ———, and Mr. Ogle, ———. The three latter gentlemen are from Baltimore and the bids of the two last were so much above those of Capt. Smith and Mr. Badder that they were not considered as in competition. Upon calculation there was only four dollars difference between Captain Smith and Mr. Badders, the latter being $4 the lowest, but the Commissioners very properly we think, gave the contract to Capt. Smith, who will give employment altogether to our resident mechanics, which would not have been the case had the contract been awarded to a Baltimorian. The contract is signed by all parties and Capt. Smith will in a few days, give bond and proceed to work. The contract stipulates that the building shall be ready for occupation by Oct., 15th 1877.

[4 October 1877] THE COURT HOUSE. The Work Nearly Completed—Public Money Well and Judiciously Spent.

Capt. Smith, the contractor, is having the work on the Court House pushed rapidly to completion. The plastering, done by Messrs. Price and Morgan, was finished the first of the weekend [and] is an excellent job. The walls and ceilings of all the rooms are even, straight and smoothe [sic]. The masterpiece of workmanship is the moulding around the Court room. The entire job will do credit to country mechanics. The inside painting is now being done, and by the last of the week all the rooms will have received one coat. Two coats have already been put on the outside & gives one an idea of the color of the building and the appearance it will make. When the building is entirely completed, we can boast of one of the handsomest and most complete county buildings on the Shore. The fire-proof vaults are commodious and secure and constructed upon the most modern plan. The money appropriated by the county for the construction of this building has been judiciously spent. The Town Commissioners who have the public square in front of the Court House in charge, should begin at once to make arrangements for the removal of all rubbish from the square and prepare it for an evening resort for the inhabitants of the town during the summer months. For time immemorial the square has been a repository of agricultural implements. The nuisance should be abated at once and hereafter nothing of the kind allowed. Capt. Smith thinks he will be ready to turn the building over to the county authorities by the 15th inst. It then remains to furnish the Court room and the several offices. It is thought that ample funds will be left out of the original appropriation to do this. Our people may well be proud of the Court House.

[18 October 1877] THE COURT HOUSE.—The new Court House is about completed. The finishing touches are now being put on by the painters. J. Crawford Neilson, Esq., the architect was here last week and inspected the building and pronounced it a good job and according to contract. The contract for furnishing the Court room and the several officers [sic] have been awarded by the building committee to A. H. Wright, Esq., and Capt. Jas. Smith. In ten days at the fartherest [sic], the building will be ready for occupation.

The Maryland Historical Trust' State Historic Sites Survey of course included the Queen Anne's County Court House. The site survey for the courthouse includes strong focuses that relate to the 1877 addition, as follows below.[255] It is evident from this architectural description that James Smith was a very skilled craftsman, directing local workmen in executing the directions of the architect with aplomb.

Queen Anne's County Court House
Centreville, Maryland

The Queen Anne's County Court House was built 1792–1794 and is the the only county court house in Maryland still in use from the time of its construction. The original construction consisted of a single story and was smaller. In 1868, the court house underwent renovations, but in 1877 its size was deemed "inconvenient" and additional, significant alterations were authorized by the county. The architect was J. Crawford Nielson of Baltimore, and the building work was awarded to the bid placed by Captain James Smith of Centreville. Interior work was done to existing rooms; a second story was added and the building, including its wings, was extended to the rear. Work on the second-floor court room itself was done on another bid awarded to James Smith in October 1877. Although James Smith worked on numerous other civil and private projects throughout the county, and presumably also elsewhere even before leaving forever to Denver in 1890, his work on the Queen Anne's County Court House is probably the most notable of his efforts. (Photo taken in 2006.)

Capt. James Smith won the county contract in 1877 to build second-floor and rear additions to the court house. This view displays the exterior nature of these additions, as shown by the changes in brickwork on the south side of the building (see location arrow on photo above).

In the view at left, the second-story addition can be seen clearly by the change in brickwork in a line just above the windows (vertical white arrow), and the two structural braces along this line. Also seen on closer examination (horizontal white arrows) is the distinct, straight vertical line separating the brickwork of the front part of the building with rear addition.

The Centreville Court House was constructed circa 1792-94 and enlarged in 1876.[256] It is believed to be the oldest court house in Maryland in continuous use. The building is an interesting blend of Colonial and Victorian architecture, with the basic form, fenestration patterns and brickwork dating to the late 18th century, and the window sash, balcony and decorative stonework dating to the 1876 renovation. This renovation enlarged the building to the rear and roughly doubling [sic] the floor area. Subsequent alterations have left little if any visible evidence of the original interior work, but much of the Victorian detail has survived, as well as a complete set of bentwood court room furniture with cane seats.

There is some uncertainty of the exact date for the original building. As early as 1782 a petition was filed requesting that the county seat be moved from Queenstown to a more convenient location. The first significant levy of £1500 for erecting public buildings was ordered in 1788, and in 1791 a further levy of £600 was approved. The Court House was certainly under construction by 1792 and may have been complete by 1794. Dr. Radoff[257] noted in Volume II of his study of Maryland Court Houses and records that one reference may indicate the Court House was still under construction as late as 1796.

Extensive repairs were authorized in 1868 and again in 1876. The latter renovation was undertaken by J. Crawford Neilson, a noted Baltimore architect, and the construction was executed by Captain James Smith, a Centreville builder. The cost of this work came to $6800. In October 1877 a second contract was signed with Smith to complete the court room.

[Site Description]

The Queen Anne's County Court House is located in the center of Court House Square in Centreville. The square is bounded on the east by North Commerce Street, on the north by Broadway, on the west by North Liberty Street, and on the south by Lawyers Row. This square was originally described as the Public Ground and has been the site of the Court House since the town was laid out in 1792.

The Court House faces east toward Commerce Street. It is a brick building with a three part facade, and has been enlarged to the rear to form the present T-plan. The front facade consists of a five bay, two story center block with flanking two bay, two story wings. Evidently the center block was two rooms deep, while the wings were one room deep. When the Court House was renovated in 1876, the building was enlarged by doubling the depth of the wings and by adding a two story rear wing to the central block, forming the present T-plan.

The front facade of the main block is five bays wide, with the three center bays set forward about four inches from the rest of the wall. A pedimented gable is centered above these three bays, increasing the sense of frontality. The principal entrance door is centered on this part of the face, flanked by large 6/6 windows on each side. There are matching 6/6 windows on the north and south bays, flanking the projecting portion of the wall. On the second floor, five 6/6 windows with segmentally arched upper sach arranged in similar fashion. These windows clearly date to the 1876 renovation, but probably reflect the original fenestration pattern. The jambs of most of the openings appear to be reworked, and were presumably enlarged for the present windows. Carefully dressed stone sills with beveled surfaces and lintels with chamfered edges also date to the 1876 work. On the second story, the stonework forms a plain belt course and is carried across the tops of the windows, forming a peak above each arched opening. Other changes include an added water table constructed of smooth machine made brick laid in a stretcher bond with a two-course beveled cap, and a cast iron balcony across the center three bays of the second story. The late 19th century brickwork is in stark contrast to the original work, which is carefully laid in Flemish bond with hand-made bricks. An original four-course belt course at the base of the second story has been interrupted by the enlarged second story windows. A heavily molded cornice with large scrolled modillion blocks is carried across the entire facade of the central block and up the raked eaves of the pedimented gable. In the center of this pediment, a circular wooden panel with a carved figure of an eagle is set into a circular opening in the brickwork. This feature is of uncertain vintage, but certainly dates to the 1876 period at least, and may be early if not original.

[256] Ridout's references to the "1876" renovation pertain to the date when the county commissioners put the job out for bid; the construction work was performed in 1877.

The south flanking wing serves as the Clerk of the Court's office. There is a door in the center on the first floor flanked by single 6/6 windows on each side, and two 6/6 windows on the second floor. The first floor openings have also been fitted with dressed stone sills and lintels, and the second floor openings with stone sills, leaving the original splayed jack arch lintels visible just below the cornice. The original Flemish bond brickwork remains relatively undisturbed except for the applied water table, and the addition of the stonework around the openings. The sills of the second story windows cut down into the top course of an original three-course belt course. The cornice on this section of the building is boxed in with a plain frieze board below the soffit and a complex crown mold above.

The south gable wall of the south wing offers clear evidence of the 1876 enlargement. A seam runs vertically up the center of this wall, with Flemish bond brickwork to the east and six-course bond using smooth machine-made bricks to the west. The water table added in 1876 was also carried across the south gable. There are two original 6/6 windows with later granite sills on the first floor of the original wing, and one 6/6 window n the second floor of the west addition. The box of the front and rear facades returns at the corners and is carried up the gable eaves.

The rear or west facade of the wing dates entirely to 1876. There is a single 6/6 window centered on both the first and second floor. The first floor window is fitted with heavy iron shutters. The brickwork is laid in random common bond with a water table; the cornice matches the front and south wall.

The north flanking wing serves as the Register of Wills office. There is a door in the south bay on the first floor with a 6/6 window to the north and two 6/6 windows on the second floor. In detail this wing is virtually identical to the south wing.

The north gable wall of the north wing evidently was originally uninterrupted by windows. He brickwork is laid in Flemish bond and the general line of the original gable remains visible. In 1876 this wing was doubled in depth. The seam between the original section and the addition is clearly visible, and the later brickwork is laid in common bond with machine-made brick. A water table was also added, extending across the entire gable wall. A large 2/2 window was cut in near the center on the first floor and a small, paired four-light window was added on the second floor. The gable eaves are closed in with an overshot box cornice that returns at the corners, and matches the cornice on the front facade of the wing.

The rear facade of the north wing dates entirely to 1876. There are two 6/6 windows on both the first and second floors. The openings have segmental arched lintels and granite sills. The brickwork is laid in six-course bond with a water table; the cornice matches the front facade of the building.

The rear or west wing was constructed in 1876. The brickwork is laid in six-course bond but without a water table. On the north wall, there are three 6/6 windows on each floor. The south wall is essentially identical, except that the east window on the first floor has been blocked. On the west wall, facing Liberty Street, there is a recessed panel in the center bay on each floor flanked by two 6/6 windows on each side. All of the window openings have segmental arched lintels and granite sills. The cornice is a continuation of the early modillion block cornice found on the front and side walls of the original central block. Mitered seams in the cornice correspond to the original rear wall of the building. The roof of the rear addition is hipped and covered with slate.

The interior of the Court House is divided into three principal areas on the first floor. A central hall in the main block leads back to office space in the later rear wing, and to a narrow stair leading to the cellar and a modern records room. The stair to the second floor rises against the north wall of the hall, just inside the front door. It is an open-string stair with a hewn Victorian newel, turned balusters and a molded rail. All of the trim in the hall dates to the Victorian period, with the possible exception of the front double doors, which are constructed of diagonal beaded boards with a heavily molded frame applied to the exterior surface.

The Clerk's office, to the south of the hall, occupies the original south wing and a second large room to the west that was added in 1876. The latter room was evidently intended as a vault, as the windows are shuttered with heavy iron shutters, and the interior door opening is fitted with a heavy vault door with a lock made in Baltimore. The floors in both rooms are paved with brick, all of the trim is Victorian.

The Register of Wills office occupies the north wing, and cannot be reached from the central hall. This office is divided into a large room in the wing, with a narrow vault across the north end of the Court House. The floor of the vault is lined with brick; the ceiling is vaulted. A door at the west end of the office opens into the vault and is fitted with a heavy vault door. All of the trim is Victorian. A chimney shaft on the north gable wall of the original wing has been paneled over.

On the second floor, a narrow hall stretches across the front facade of the central block. Doors open off of this hall into a large rectangular court room in the center of the building, a grand jury room over the south wing, and a law library over the north wing. Details of interest on the second floor include a coffered tin ceiling with cast iron column supports and a variety of Victorian furniture in the court room. Of particular significance are the twelve jury chairs, three chairs behind the bench, and the witness chair. All are bentwood chairs with tightly caned backs and seats.

According to the report prepared by Perry, Shaw and Hepburn[258], portions of the original roof framing survive. The roof over the main central section of the building is not readily accessible. The only access point is a small trap secured with screws in the high ceiling of the court room. A second trap in the north end of the building allows a limited view of the roof of the enlarged north wing. The framing all dates to the post-Civil War enlargement, but a small section of the masonry wall of the central section is visible, as well as one portion of the original dentil block cornice.

As noted in the "Smith Genealogy" (above), James Smith also did bridge construction.[259] Presumably he contracted all kinds of building work throughout the county and elsewhere. Also see Additions & Corrections

In 1883, a "James Smith" and a "G. M. Smith", who presumably were Capt. James Smith and George Moore Smith of this genealogy, were among the Trustees elected on 15 January to oversee the Wye Camp Ground of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The Wye Camp was a part of the Centreville Charge, Easton District of the Wilmington Conference. The first church-camp meeting at "Head of Wye" was in 1807, which since 1810 was known as Wye Camp. The land was eventually given to the Centreville M.E. church in 1879.[260]

James Smith in Denver

Other than his marriage to Emily Reynolds (possibly in 1865 after returning from the war) and the information we have of his contract and church work in the county, little else is known of James Smith's time between the Civil War and 1890.

By 1890, one James Barcus enticed James Smith with contract work in Denver, Colorado. Although there is evidence that the Barcus family of Queen Anne's County, who were millers, was related to the Barcus family of Colorado, who were brick masons, they appear to represent separate genealogical branches of that family.[261] James Barcus was of the Colorado branch. His incentive to the building contractor James Smith must have been a great one because James moved his family to Denver permanently. An Eastern Shore newspaper clipping, dated 25 February 1890, comprised the following succinct note:

> Captain James Smith and his oldest son, James, will leave Centreville tomorrow (Wednesday) for Denver, Col. Captain Smith has secured contracts for the erection of two buildings in Denver, for Mr. James Barcus[,] and will probably locate permanently in that city.

This indicates that James Smith and his eldest son traveled to Denver first, and brought the rest of the family at a later time; but just when the family left Centreville is not known.

James Smith's grandson, W. Ed Smith, has noted to me in correspondence that his grandfather built homes in Denver and in Englewood, Colorado. James Smith was foremost a carpenter, and it stands to reason that joining with a family of brick manufacturers and masons would be lucrative in the building contractor business in western communities that were rapidly growing.

However, business might not have been all that good at times. W. Ed Smith related that Capt. James Smith, with his son, James, and James Lugg (who became Capt. James' son-in-law when he married Lulu Smith) were involved in a land-rush in Oklahoma, although Ed Smith did not know when this was.[262] Many of the family members must have had adventurous spirits, as another family story recalls that George W. Arnold he looked for gold in the Rockies west of Denver, where he had a claim in Russell Gulch near Rolinsville, Gilpin Co., near Central City; but this was more of a hopeful matter, as it was [261] As determined by an examination of U.S. census data, the Barcus family had ties both in Denver, Colorado, and Centreville, Maryland; in Denver they were in brick manufacturing and masonry, and in Centreville they were millers. The Denver contingent seems to have originally come from Ohio and Missouri; the birthplaces of the children indicate that the family moved to Colorado around 1870. The Maryland contingent was native to Maryland from at least ca. 1800. In the 1892 Denver city directory, James T. Barcus is listed as a brick manufacturer on 26th Ave. between Murdock and Clayton Aves.; his residence was at 2759 Josephine St. Also listed in this directory are (take note of the interleaved residential addresses): Arthur S. Barcus, clerk for J. L. Russell, 425 S. Pennsylvania Ave.; Delbert C. Barcus, bricklayer, 425 S. Pennsylvania Ave.; J. Mason Barcus, "sub books" [seller of subscription books?], 44 Good Block; Lake Barcus, laborer, H. J. Heinz Co., residence 2755 Josephine St.; Solomon Barcus, bricklayer, 425 S. Pennsylvania Ave.; and William Barcus, bricklayer, 2755 Josephine St. Although James Barcus has not been located in the 1880 census, the Solomon Barcus household is listed in Arapahoe Co., Colorado, where Solomon and son, William Barcus, are brick masons, and sons Delbert and Arthur Barcus are boys in school. Also in the 1880 census for Colorado there is another William Barcus, brick mason, who resided in a boarding house in Denver. In the 1880 census for Maryland, Lake Barcus is in [another] William Barcus household in the 3rd District, Queen Anne's Co., where William Barcus is a miller and Lake is in school.

during the early part of the Depression era.[263] James' son, James Robert Lee Smith, had been instructed by his father and grandfather Arnold where to jump from a train, stakes in hand to mark a claim.[264]

Emily (Reynolds) Smith (1842–1929)
(wife of Capt. James Smith)
"Teen"

In some family records she has been referred to as Christine. In the 1850 U.S. census she is listed as Emily Jane Reynolds; and her death certificate gives her name as Emily J. Smith. To some members of the family she was known as "Aunt Teen", suggesting that this was a contraction of Christine. One or other of these names might have been a baptismal name, or perhaps a third given name such as sometimes was used in the Smith family. In any case, her name of record is Emily, and she was known affectionately as "Teen".

Her father, Saulsbury B. Reynolds, was born about 1806 in Maryland; in the 1850 census he is listed as a farmer residing in the 3rd District, Queen Anne's Co. Her mother, Catherine D., was born about 1816 in Maryland. Her siblings, as of 1850, were John N. Reynolds, born about 1834; Mary C., born about 1847; and Ann Augusta, born about 1849. The Queen Anne's Co. Marriage Records, 1817-1858, list a marriage on 12 May 1831 between Saulsbury B. Reynolds and a Mary E. Long or Mary E. Holding, officiated by Rev. Offley.

At the time of her death she resided at 2424 Vine St., Denver, Colorado, where she died. She had resided with her daughter, Lulu Smith Lugg, under her care. Family records indicate that she died in Englewood, Arapahoe Co., Colorado, which was an incorrect assumption based on the fact that James Robert Lee Smith had moved to Englewood. She was buried 28 January 1929 in Fairmount Cemetery, Denver, Colorado.

198. Frank Reynolds Smith

The only record of Frank Reynolds Smith, without dates or further remark, appears in the "Smith Genealogy".[265] Although he is listed there as the fifth child in the list of children of James and Emily Reynolds Smith, the list is not in chronological order so the placement of this child with respect to his siblings is unknown. W. Ed Smith had not heard of Frank Reynolds Smith when he learned of this record in 2007; presumably Frank died at an early age.[266]

201. Edward Watson Smith (1875–1848)
202. Harry Webster Smith (1877–)

Neither man married. They both lived with their parents until the parents' deaths, and then lived with James and Lulu Lugg where they had separate basement rooms.[267]

In the 1899 Denver city directory Edward Watson Smith is listed as a stenographer with Acheson and Warren, residing at his parents' home. Acheson and Warren was a firm of investment bankers at 210-211 Ernest and Cranmer Building, Denver. At the time of the 1900 and 1910 U.S. censuses his occupation was listed as office clerk; in these censuses he resides with his parents. The "Smith Genealogy" records that he "was with a wholesale drug firm in Denver".[268]

No occupation is listed for Harry Webster Smith in the 1899 Denver city directory, at which time he resided with his parents. At the time of the 1900 U.S. census his occupation was listed as salesman; not employed at the time of the 1910 census. At the time of these censuses he resided with his parents. The "Smith Genealogy" records that he "was [a] clerk with an apartment hotel in Denver, Colorado."[269]

90. Anna Virginia[7] Smith (John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 11 May 1843 at Upper Heathworth, Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died 11 October 1924. She married [Rev.] James Edmund Bryan 13 March 1862, son of James Bryan and Sarah Carville. He was born 10 July 1831 at Beach Farm, Kent Island, Kent Co., Maryland, and died 17 October 1895 in Baltimore, Maryland.

Children of Anna Smith and James Bryan are:

+	203	i.	Elma Howard[8] Bryan, born 28 January 1863 in Maryland; died 29 August 1926 in Merchantville, Camden Co., New Jersey.
+	204	ii.	[Dr.] Mary Smith Bryan, born 26 May 1865 in Maryland; died September 1951.
	205	iii.	[Dr.] James Edmund Bryan, Jr., born 09 September 1869 in Cecil Co., Maryland; died 18 December 1951 at 124 S. Springfield Ave., Merchantville, Camden Co., New Jersey. He married May Barratt Martindale 28 December 1893 in Newcastle, Newcastle Co., Delaware; born 05 April 1867 in Maryland; died 06 June 1934.
	206	iv.	[Dr.] Alfred Cookman Bryan, born 21 November 1871 in Delaware; died 30 March 1964. He married Edna Alice Birch; born 22 August 1873; died after 1960.
	207	v.	Anna Watson Bryan, born 08 February 1874 in Delaware; died after 1964. She married Samuel Taylor Wilson; born 11 October 1868.
+	208	vi.	William Whitley Bryan, Sr., born 27 August 1876 in Delaware.

NOTES

The "Smith Genealogy" contains a separate section on the Bryan family, compiled by Emerson Bryan Roberts, grandson of Anna Virginia (Smith) Bryan. It is reproduced in its entirety at the end of this sketch about Anna Virginia Smith.

90. Anna Virginia (Smith) Bryan (1843–1924)
"Annie"

At the time of the 1860 U.S. census, Anna Smith resided in the household of "William Watson" [Joseph William Wesley Watson, her cousin (No. 94)] in District 3, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. In the slave schedule for the District 3 census, she is listed adjacent to "William Watson" as the owner of one slave (male, aged 17), who probably was her share of the inheritance received from her father, who died in 1857.

James Edmund Bryan (1831–1895)
(husband of Anna Virginia Smith)

Another date of birth for Rev. James Edmund Bryan is given as 21 July 1831. He has not been located in the 1850 or 1860 U.S. censuses.

It is possible that he is the Rev. J. E. Bryan, Methodist minister, who was noted to have preached not wholly against slavery at a 31 July 1860 meeting in Centreville, Maryland. Frederic Emory's history of Queen Anne's Co. relates:[270]

> The slavery question was also the cause of much trouble among the Methodists of the county owing to the adoption by the General Conference of a chapter denouncing slave-holding. * * * Revs. E. Miller and J. E. Bryan, preachers on the Circuit, had, however, already declared that the Chapter on slavery which declared slaveholding to be a sin was unconstitutional and void and asserted that non-slave-holding had never been a test of membership in the church.

The "Smith Genealogy" indicates that Rev. Bryan had a daughter, Florence, but in fact she was a daughter-in-law, whose husband is not identified here. In any case, her husband was not James Edmund Bryan, Jr., whose obituary lists Florence as his sister-in-law.

Rev. Bryan twice served as pastor to the Whatcoat United Methodist Church[271] in Camden, Delaware, during 1857-1858 and 1871-1873. In 1875, he officiated at the marriage of Samuel Ringold and Florence Z. Carville at the Methodist Episcopal church in Stevensville, Kent Island, Kent Co., Maryland; whether or not this was his pastorate at the time has not been determined. He also served the Methodist Episcopal Church in Rising Sun, Maryland, 1891-1895.

[271] The original frame church, built in 1796, was razed when a new, brick structure was dedicated 26 July 1857 and the congregation moved to that new location. At about this time Rev. Bryan assumed his pastorate here. The 1857 brick building still stands, west of the intersection of Main St. and Camden-Wyoming Ave. (Delaware Rt. 10), Camden, Delaware. This church was used until June 1967 when a new church was occupied at 16 N. Main St. At that time, the 1857 building was sold to the Church of Christ, and then in 1981 sold to the New Hope Baptist Church. The building had been vacant for several years when it was bought in 1986 by the Morning Star Institutional Church of God in Christ.

In 1857, the ministerial circuit for the church comprised Camden, Bethbrier, Canterbury, Magnolia, St. Jones, Gum Swamp, and Leipsic, but by 1888 had been reduced to two charges. The church was renovated in 1865 and 1940. Its stained-glass windows, original from 1857, were imported from England. There is circumstantial evidence, both in oral tradition and in some architectural features in the church's foundations discovered around 2000, that it served in the Underground Railroad when slaves were secreted to safer havens in the North. The 1880 U.S. census lists in the Bryan household a Catharine G. Smith, aged 24, working as "Servant"; it is doubtful that she is related to the Smiths here.

205. James Edmund Bryan, Jr. (1869–1951)

He had no children. He attended Wilmington Conference College (later Wesley Junior College), Dover, Delaware; B.A., Johns Hopkins University, 1890, and graduate work there 1890-1891; Ph.D., University of Pennsylvania, 1908.

James Edmund Bryan, Jr., was first employed as a principal and school superintendent in Houghton, Michigan and in Danville and Litchfield, Illinois. In 1899 he was hired as a teacher in the Camden, New Jersey, city public schools, with which he remained affiliated for the rest of his career. By 1910 he was a high school principal, and by 1920 he was Superintendent of Schools. He retired in September 1931.

From 1895 to 1944 James Bryan, Jr., owned an interest in a grain and dairy farm in Kent Co., Maryland.

In the 1910 census, a lodger in their home was Helen M. Bleakley, also a high school principal.

Occupations of James Edmund Bryan, Jr. (from U.S. censuses):
1900: School teacher
1910: High school principal
1920: "manager city schools"
1930: "Superintendent Camden Public Schools"

Residences of James Edmund Bryan, Jr. (from U.S. censuses):
1900: 427 Penn St., Camden, Camden Co., New Jersey
1910, 1920: 412 Linden St., Camden, Camden Co., New Jersey
1930: 124 Springfield Ave., Merchantville, Camden Co., New Jersey

James Edmund Bryan, Jr., is buried in Rising Sun, Maryland.

A brief biographical sketch of James Edmund Bryan, Jr., was published in 1924, as follows: [272]

> James Edmund Bryan, Jr., A.B., Ph.D., is superintendent of the public schools in the city of Camden, which office he has held since 1899. Prior to coming to Camden, he held the position of superintendent in the schools of Danville, Illinois, for three years, and in Litchfield, Illinois, for a similar period. He began his educational work as principal of the high school in Houghton, Michigan, from 1891 to 1893. During the period of Dr. Bryan's superintendency of the Camden Schools, there has been rapid development and growth. The enrollment has increased form less than twelve thousand to more than twenty-two thousand; the number of teachers from less than three hundred to seven hundred and fifty; and seventeen new school buildings have been erected, including the new Senior High School in Forest Hill Park and two junior high schools. The organization of the school system has been completely modernized and developed along the lines of the most advanced educational thought and experience.

He attended the public schools of Maryland and Delaware until fifteen years of age, when he entered the Wilmington Conference Academy, now known as Wesley Collegiate Institute. Upon graduation from the Institute, he matriculated in Johns Hopkins University, where he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1890. The year 1890-91 was spent in graduate work in Johns Hopkins upon a University Scholarship awarded for high scholastic standing in undergraduate work. After teaching nine years, he entered upon a course of graduate work in the University of Pennsylvania and was awarded the degree of Doctor of Philosophy in 1908.

Dr. Bryan was born September 9, 1869, in Cecil County, Maryland. He is the son of Rev. James Edmund Bryan, of the Wilmington Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Anna Virginia Bryan, both of old Maryland families, and both now deceased. He was united in marriage with May Barratt Martindale, also a native of Maryland, on December 28, 1893, at Newcastle, Delaware.

Dr. Bryan was president of the New Jersey Teachers' Association in 1908 and of the New Jersey Council of Education in 1908 and 1909. For ten years he was a trustee of the Teachers' Pension System of New Jersey. He is a life member of the National Education Association, and a charter member of the New Jersey Schoolmaster's Club. He affiliates with Trimble Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, and is a member of Centenary-Tabernacle Methodist Episcopal Church of Camden, of which church he has been a trustee since 1902. He is also a Rotarian.

Upon his retirement as superintendent of Camden City schools, James E. Bryan, Jr., received a grandfather's clock, which in his will he bequeathed to the school system to be placed in the superintendent's office: [273]

My hall clock is a very handsome one, presented to me by the teachers and office assistants of Camden City Schools upon the occasion of my retirement in September, 1931.

It has been to me, and was to Mrs. Bryan, a source of real enjoyment and pride. My appreciation of the generous and cordial spirit that prompted this gift has grown as the years passed.

When I can enjoy it no longer, I desire that it shall be placed where some, at least, of those who participated in making the gift may see it from time to time, and where it may stand as a memorial of the many years of my service in the schools where I received the most cordial cooperation of the teachers and the highly intelligent and public spirited support and counsel of the members of the board of education from 1899 to 1931.

The 1900 census lists her birth as in April 1868, and that her parents were born in Delaware.

206. Alfred Cookman Bryan (1871–1964)
"Cook"

He had no children. In 1930 he resided at 292 Clinton Ave., Brooklyn, New York. In 1951, when his brother, James, died, he resided in Wayne, Pennsylvania. In 1963 his address there was 224 South Wayne Ave., Wayne, Pennsylvania; and an undated letterhead gives his address as 224 Audubon Ave., Wayne, Pennsylvania.

Historical information provided by Alfred Cookman Bryan to Edward S. Smith, narrator of the "Smith Genealogy" provides a little historical insight into the early relationships of the family in Kent Island, Maryland. Shipping Creek, in the lower portion of Kent Island, was where a landing was made for a trading post established by Capt. John Smith of Virginia Colony, and where William Claiborne, agent of Clobberly and Company, London, became its agent under Royal Grant. Edward S. Smith wrote in the "Smith Genealogy": [274]

> Our cousin, Alfred Cookman Bryan of Wayne, Pennsylvania, son of one of father's sisters, Anna Virginia [Smith] Bryan, wife of Rev. James Edmund Bryan, wrote that the Claiborne Trading Post was on Shipping Creek, which was on the farm of his uncle Louis Bryan, and after his death the farm was sold by his daughter, Lynda.
> Kent Island Point farm on which Claiborne's Fort was built, was at one time owned by his cousins, the Ringgolds. Cookman and his cousin Roland Ringgold roomed together in Baltimore when attending school in 1895-6.
> The names of these first settlers on Kent Island will be found in the family names of these descendants of James Smith and his wife Margaret [of Generation No. 1 in the current genealogy].

Alfred C. Bryan wrote more specifically, though briefly, about the trading post: [275]

> The Claiborne trading post on Kent Island was Shipping Creek, Uncle Louis Bryan's farm until he died. His daughter, Cousin Lynda, sold it, maybe 15 or 20 years ago [thus ca. 1945]. She died two or three years ago. Claiborne's Fort on Kent Point Farm was owned by my Cousin, Roland Ringgold, when we were rooming together in Balto[more]. At school in 1895-6.

207. Anna (Bryan) Wilson (1874–after 1964)

In 1951, when her brother, James, died, she resided in Easton, Northampton Co., Pennsylvania. An address book of Earle C. Smith lists her as "Aunt Anna Bryan, 322 Reeder St., Easton, Pa."

Bryan Family
Collateral Genealogy
(28 descendants)

The genealogy of the Bryan family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Matthew Bryan

Generation No. 1

1. Matthew[1] Bryan

Children of Matthew Bryan are:

	2	i.	Ann[2] Bryan.
	3	ii.	Arthur Bryan, died 1792. He married Rachel Brookson 02 May 1757 in St. Lukes Parish, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.
	4	iii.	Frances Bryan. She married John Clayland.
	5	iv.	John Bryan.
	6	v.	Susannah Bryan. She married Richard Grasson.
+	7	vi.	William Bryan, of "Wye Manor" and "Sayer's Forest".

NOTES

The will of Matthew Bryan [No. 1], recorded in Will Book 36, folio 4, 1767 (Queen Anne's Co., Maryland), notes that his residence was in Christ Church Parish, Queen Anne's Co. [Kent Island].

Arthur Bryan (–1792) [No. 3] had a large estate on the Eastern Shore and active in affairs of Talbot, Queen Anne's, and Caroline Counties. He was among the first to subscribe to the Oath of Fidelity, Talbot Co., 1776, along with other lineal ancestors of the Bryans, James Lowe and William Lambdin. He died intestate, and his properties were adjudicated by proceedings in Partition in the High Court of Chancery

7. William[2] Bryan (Matthew[1]) was from "Wye Manor" and "Sayer's Forest". He married (1) Catherine Lowe, daughter of James Lowe. He married (2) Elizabeth Dixon Carville. She died 1841.

Child of William Bryan and Catherine Lowe is:

+	8	i.	James Lowe[3] Bryan, born 10 October 1785; died 09 April 1861.

NOTES

William Bryan [No. 7] had ten children, of whom James Lowe Bryan [No. 8] was their first. Catherine (Lowe) Bryan, his first wife, was the mother of all ten children.

William Bryan is in the muster roll of the Talbot Select Militia, 1776.[276]

The will of William Bryan was entered for probate March 1831.

Elizabeth (Carville) Bryan (–1841), second wife of William Bryan, was a Quaker. Upon her death, her estate was administered by Edmund Carville (Sr.).

Wye House is the seat of the Lloyd family of Talbot County, having remained in the family for nearly three centuries. (See in Appendix 2 for most of the Lloyd family connections to this genealogy.) The house and its occupants are of great historical significance in the history of Maryland.[277]

Generation No. 3

8. James Lowe[3] Bryan (William[2], Matthew[1]) was born 10 October 1785, and died 09 April 1861. He married Sarah Carville, daughter of Edmund Carville and Elizabeth Carville.

Children of James Bryan and Sarah Carville are:

	9	i.	Mary Ann[4] Bryan, born in Beach Farm, Kent Island, Maryland. She married Thomas R. Carville 02 October 1845.
+	10	ii.	Louis Bryan, born 1824 in Beach Farm, Kent Island, Maryland; died 23 October 1880.
+	11	iii.	James Edmund Bryan, born 10 July 1831 in Beach Farm, Kent Island, Maryland; died 17 October 1895 in Baltimore, Maryland.

NOTES

James Lowe Bryan (1785–1861) [No. 8] was a lieutenant in the War of 1812, apparently in the U.S. Army. Edward Smith's "Smith Genealogy" notes that James Lowe Bryan "served in the Battle of Slipper Hill, near Queenstown, when the British captured Centreville and the Court House there."[278] According to the family history, Miss C. Lynda Bryan and, later, James Edmund Bryan (Sr.) and James Edmund Bryan (Jr.) each at one time owned the sword said to have belonged to James Lowe Bryan. James Lowe Bryan was active in civic affairs and was secretary of the school district. Edward Smith history notes, "He and his wife are buried on Carville lands on the Western Shore of Kent Island on Coppage's Ridge."

James Lowe Bryan resided at "Beach Farm", on the northern end of Kent Island, opposite the mouth of the Chester River.

Mary (Bryan) Carville [No. 9] had three sons and one daughter.

Generation No. 4

10. Louis[4] Bryan (James Lowe[3], William[2], Matthew[1]) was born 1824 in Beach Farm, Kent Island, Maryland, and died 23 October 1880. He married Sarah Ann Legg 03 February 1848.

Children of Louis Bryan and Sarah Legg are:

	12	i.	C. Lynda[5] Bryan, born in Kent Island, Maryland; died after March 1916.
+	13	ii.	J. Lemuel Bryan, born 13 October 1847 in Kent Island, Maryland; died March 1916 near Stevensville, Maryland.

11. James Edmund[4] Bryan (James Lowe[3], William[2], Matthew[1]) was born 10 July 1831 in Beach Farm, Kent Island, Maryland, and died 17 October 1895 in Baltimore, Maryland. He married Anna Virginia Smith 13 March 1862, daughter of John Smith and Mary Smith. She was born 11 May 1843 in Upper Heathworth, Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's, Maryland, and died 11 October 1924.

See main listing for notes about Rev. James and Anna (Smith) Bryan and their descendants.

[278] This statement has not been verified.

Generation No. 5

13. J. Lemuel[5] Bryan (Louis[4], James Lowe[3], William[2], Matthew[1]) was born 13 October 1847 in Kent Island, Maryland, and died March 1916 near Stevensville, Maryland. He married (1) Ellen Legg, daughter of Henry C. Legg. He married (2) Ann Cecelia Buena Vista Shawn, daughter of William Shawn and Susan Legg. She was born 10 July 1867, and died 06 June 1944.

Child of J. Bryan and Ellen Legg is:
20 i. [Capt.] Norman L.[6] Bryan.

NOTES

Capt. J. Lemuel Bryan (1847–1916) [No. 13] was a Chesapeake Bay merchant mariner, operating a freighting vessel between Kent Island and Baltimore.

Ann (Shawn) Bryan (1867–1944), wife of Capt. J. Lemuel Bryan, was a nurse at the private Bancroft School, Haddonfield, Camden Co., New Jersey.

Generation No. 6

21. Emmett Bryan[6] Knowles (Elma Howard[5] Bryan, James Edmund[4], James Lowe[3], William[2], Matthew[1]) was born 19 December 1883 in Delaware. He married Alice Victoria Henry in possibly Merchantville, New Jersey. She was born about 1894.

Children of Emmett Knowles and Alice Henry are:
27 i. Virginia Alice[7] Knowles, born 23 October 1928.
28 ii. Barbara Ann Knowles, born 19 February 1934.

NOTES

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, Emmett Bryan Knowles (1883–) [No. 21] resided in Pennsauken, Camden Co., New Jersey.

End of Bryan Family collateral genealogy

Bryan Family History

The following text is from the "Smith Genealogy", which included an introductory paragraph by Edward S. Smith. Although Smith indicates that this is an abstract of a 1930 report by Emerson Bryan Roberts, it is apparent that Smith edited it, including, but not necessarily limited to, his own interjections. Although some of the information replicates data that are presented in the present Smith Family genealogy, the passage is reproduced here in its entirety (interjections in square brackets are those of the present compiler).[279] (See above for the Bryan Family collateral genealogy.)

[279] "Smith Genealogy", pp. 38-45. For clarity, the passage is typographically reorganized here. Edward Smith's notes made from this report indicate that the original report was dated 30 Apr 1930 and sent to Dr. Alfred C. Bryan, 292 Clinton Ave., Brooklyn, New York; and at that time Emerson Bryan lived at 174 Woodside Rd., Wilkinsburg, Pennsylvania.

[Edward S. Smith's introductory note:]

Dr. Emerson Bryan Roberts in 1930 prepared a report on the ancestors of his Bryan family, from which this account has been abstracted. Dr. Albert Coopman Bryan of Wayne, [Pennsylvania], his uncle, loaned us the report. Emerson Bryan Roberts was the grandson of Rev. James Edmund Bryan who married Anna Virginia Smith, sister of our father, John Edward Smith. Their daughter, Mary Smith Bryan, married Rev. Emerson Roberts, who were Emerson's parents. His sister is Miss Elma Roberts of Moorestown, New Jersey.

[Emerson Bryan Roberts report, as edited by Smith:]

While the Isle of Kent was yet completely under the sway of the Commanders of the Isle of Kent and belong to the family of Brent, Lords of Kent Manor, the Bryans were in Anne Arundel County, then Talbot, and later in Queen Anne's County, Maryland. They were Scotch-Irish. There were fourteen Bryans in Maryland, 1657-1678, eleven of whom were men.

The earliest Bryan Will in Maryland was that of a Daniel Bryan, dated June 10, 1693, who lived in Anne Arundel County, recorded Will Book H.6-folio 76, Annapolis. His sons were Matthew and William, and daughters Margaret and Mary.

The Will of Matthew Bryan, recorded in Will Book 36 folio 4, 1767, describes the testator as "Matthew Bryan of Christ Church Parish, Queen Anne's County." Christ Church Parish is on Kent Island. He left the bulk of his property to his oldest son, Arthur Bryan, and other property to his sons John and William; also property to his daughters, Ann and Susannah, wife of Richard Grasson, and Frances, wife of John Clayland. No further evidence of record has come to hand to show clearly that Matthew Bryan was related to Matthew and William Bryan, sons of the above-mentioned Daniel Bryan, deceased, but such may be the case, as no further public record appears as to them in Anne Arundel County.

This Arthur Bryan, one of the sons of Matthew Bryan, built up a large estate on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. He was a citizen of influence in Talbot, Queen Anne's and Caroline Counties, and was one of the first to subscribe to the Oath of Fidelity taken in 1776 [sic] in Talbot County.[280] This oath was against the Crown and to defend the State of Maryland, and to support, maintain, and defend her freedom and independence. Other signers were: James Lowe, Henry Lowe, William Lambdin, and Joshua Wrightson. James Lowe and William Lambdin are also lineal ancestors of the Bryans in this sketch.

Arthur Bryan married Rachel Brookson on May 2, 1757, in St. Lukes Parish, Queen Anne's County, Maryland. He died, intestate, and at the time of his death in 1792 owned twenty-five slaves and 1500 acres of land in Queen Anne's County; also land in Caroline County and in Kent County, Delaware. As he died intestate, proceedings in Partition, in the High Court of Chancery, were necessary, so that division could be decreed to his heirs-at-law. There also was pending at [280] By act of the Maryland General Assembly, October Term 1777, required all men 18 years of age and older to subscribe to an oath of fidelity; exceptions included men of some religious faiths and those in the military service. Failure to take the oath, and enforced through a special census, required that "he had to pay triple the amount of his assessment for taxes each year during his lifetime. He was not allowed to file any suit in any court, nor could he be a tradesman, practice law, medicine, or surgery, preach the gospel, teach in any school, or hold any office, civil or military." The oath stated: "I do swear I do not hold myself bound to yield any Allegiance to the King of Great Britain, his heirs or successors and that I will be true and faithful to the State of Maryland and will to the utmost of my power, support, maintain and defend the Freedom and Independence thereof and the Government as now established against all open enemies and secret and traitorous conspiracies . . . ." (>> "Understanding Maryland Records; Oaths and Censuses of the Revolutionary Period", Maryland State Archives website, http://www.msa.md.gov/msa/refserv/html/oaths.html; accessed 7 Apr 2007.)

[the] time of his death an uncompleted contract for the exchange of land, to be adjudicated. His heirs-at-law were: his sister, Susannah Tate, wife of Robert Tate; his brother, William Bryan; and the following nephew and nieces [sic]: Richard Grasson, Thomas Grasson, John Grasson, and Amelia Hobbs.

Chancellor Hanson appointed William Richmond, James A. Blont, Gideon Emory, and Robert Dawson, commissioners to schedule the estate and recommend a division into three equal parts. Included in the estate was 1,002 acres, the lower moiety of Fort Manor, which came to Arthur Bryan on May 7, 1798, by deed from Philip Barton Key. It was on this land that had stood Claibourne's Fort.

The decree of the High Court of Chancery was handed down in February Term 1803, and decreed division of the land as follows:

Part I to William Bryan, Wye Manor—1519 acres and a large part of "Sayer's Forest".

Part II to Susannah Tate—the lower moiety of Kent Fort Manor, 1002½ acres, part of Bayer's Forest, "Plain Dealing"; "Bluff Point" and ["]Homestead".

Part III to the Grasson heirs,—"Ar-Bry" Manor. Each of the three parts was valued at pounds—10,186.

William Bryan, brother of said Arthur Bryan, lived at "Sayer's Forest". His first wife was Catherine Lowe and was the mother of all of his children. His second wife was Elizabeth Bryan (nee Carville).

William Bryan was on the Rolls— Talbot Select Militia in 1776, Archives of Maryland, Vol. 18. Others on the Muster Roll were Lowe, Wrightson, Lambdin and Auld, all in the ancestry of Catherine Lowe. William Bryan died and his will was probated in March 1831. His wife Catherine Lowe was the daughter of James Lowe of Grafton Manor. They had ten children. In his will William Bryan directed that his slaves be freed, the males at 30 years of age and the females at 28 years of age. His widow, Elizabeth Bryan (nee Carville) renounced the will and took her dower. She died in 1841. Edmund Carville, Sr., was administrator of her estate.

The parentage of this Elizabeth Carville (who was born Elizabeth Dixon, a Quakeress) is of interest, as she is an ancestress of my Bryans, because her oldest daughter, Sarah Carville, married James Lowe Bryan and was the mother of his children.

William Bryan and Catherine Lowe, his wife, had ten children and Emerson gave the names of each, with pertinent information as to each. The first of their children was James Lowe Bryan, born October 10, 1785 and died April 9, 1861. He married Sarah Carville, daughter of Edmund and Elizabeth Carville, nee Dixon, and had 14 children. Emerson in his notes gave the names of each of these children and pertinent family information as to each.

James Lowe Bryan lived on "Beach Farm" on the northern end of Kent Island, opposite the mouth of Chester River. All of their children were born there. He was active in civic affairs, secretary of the School District, was a Lieutenant in the War of 1812[281], and served in the Battle of Slipper Hill, near Queenstown, when the British captured Centreville and the Court House there. He and his wife are buried on Carville lands on the Western Shore of Kent Island on Coppage's Ridge. For the purposes of this abstract, we mention three children of that family.

Louis Bryan, born in 1824, died October 23, 1880, who married Sarah Ann Legg, on February 3, 1848. They had one son and three daughters, including C. Lynda Bryan of Kent Island, who has been referred to several times.

Mary Ann Bryan, who married Thomas R. Carville on October 2, 1845. They had three sons and one daughter.

Rev. James Edmund Bryan, born July 21, 1831, died October 17, 1895. He married Anna Virginia Smith, daughter of Capt. John Smith of Queen Anne's County, Maryland. She was born in Spaniards Neck on the place now called "Upper Heathworth", the home of Mr. John McKenney. They had three sons and four daughters:

Mary Smith Bryan married Rev. Emerson Roberts.

Elma Howard Bryan married William H. Knowles.

James Edmund Bryan married May Martindale.

Dr. Alfred Cookman Bryan married Edna Alice Birch.

Anna Watson Bryan married S. Taylor Wilson.

Florence Bryan died in infancy.

William Whitely Bryan married Florence E. Shimer.

James Edmund Bryan, son of James Edmund Bryan, had the sword said to have belonged to James Lowe Bryan, War of 1812. Sword came to him from his father.

Miss C. Lynda Bryan had a sword said to have belonged to her grandfather, James Lowe Bryan, 1812 Services.

The family of Rev. James Edmund Bryan was one of the first to settle on Kent Island, and a member of his family owned the farm on Kent Island on which was "Shipping Creek" and on which Creek was the "Trading Post" for the Indians and early settlers.

Rev. James Edmund Bryan and his wife, Anna Virginia Smith Bryan, raised a fine family:

(a) Elma Howard Bryan born January 28, 1863, died August 29, 1926, at Merchantville, New Jersey. She married William Edward Knowles. After living in Philadelphia for some years, they had a nice home of their own in Merchantville. Her husband was for many years associated with a large wholesale anthracite coal firm with its main offices in Philadelphia. The Knowles, and sometimes Aunt Anna Bryan, were often at the home of my parents in Philadelphia and helped to make a merry time, especially at Thanksgiving time. Aunt Sallie Taylor was there, too.

(b) Mary Smith Bryan, born May 26, 1865, since deceased. Married Rev. Emerson Pierce Roberts, a Methodist minister of Delaware, and parents of Emerson Bryan Roberts, who assisted ably in assembling material for this family recital. Her husband predeceased her by a number of years, and at the time of her death she lived in Merchantville with her daughter, Elma Roberts, sister of Emerson Bryan Robe[r]ts.

(c) Florence Bryan, who died in infancy.

(d) James Edmund Bryan, born September 9, 1869, who died after reaching the age of 90 years. He married May M. Martindale, who was born April 5, 1867 and died on June 6, 1934. For many years and at the time of his death he was Superintendent of Public Schools in Camden County, New Jersey.

(e) Alfred Cookman Bryan, born November 21, 1871. He married Edna Alice Birch who was born in 1873. He is an educator and was, until his retirement, engaged in this profession in New York State. About two years ago Laura [Edward S. Smith's wife] and I spent a delightful afternoon with this charming couple at their lovely resident [sic] in Wayne, Pennsylvania.

(f) Anna Watson Bryan, born February 8, 1874, married Samuel Taylor Wilson who was born October 11, 1868. She is living in Easton, Pennsylvania, where she and her husband have lived for years. He is now deceased.

(g) William Whitely Bryan, born August 27, 1876, now deceased. He married Florence Katherine Shimer. They lived and raised a family in Easton, Pennsylvania.

(a) Emmett Bryan Knowles was the son of William Edward Knowles and Elma Howard Bryan Knowles, and was born on December 19, 1883. He married Alice Victoria Henry and lived in Merchantsville [Merchantville], New Jersey. Their children were: Virginia Alice Knowles, born October 23, 1928, and Barbara Ann Knowles, born February 19, 1934.

The Knowles family is an old Delaware family. The churchyard at Barrett's [Barratt's] Chapel, Delaware, shows grave stones as follows: Sarah Knowles, born September 17, 1825, died March 8, 1878, and William E. Knowles, died March 8, 1878, age 60 years.

(b) Emerson Bryan Roberts, was the son of Rev. Emerson F. Roberts and Mary Smith Bryan Roberts, and was born October 10, 1890. He married Helen McCain Cooley of Wilkinsberg, Pennsylvania. They lived in or near Pittsburgh where he was in business and later became a Professor at Carnegie Institute of Technology. When he retired, he and wife bought a farm in Broad Neck of Kent County, Maryland, the Price Farm, not far from Chestertown, where they raised cattle. This location is about two miles from Quaker Neck Wharf, from which they could look across the Chester River to "Capt." John Smith's place [Upper Heathworth]. Their daughter, Mary Elizabeth Roberts, was born October 2, 1920. She married William Brown and they have several children, and live in the Pittsburgh area.

(c) Mary Elma Roberts, sister of Emerson, was born March 10, 1892, and lives in Merchantville, New Jersey. She holds the degree of Ph.D. from the University of Pennsylvania and, until her retirement, taught in the public schools of Moorestown, New Jersey. She was interested in civic affairs and was at one time the Woman of the Year in New Jersey.[282]

In 1950 Emerson B. Roberts wrote to Lathrop Mack that Lynda Bryan, a cousin, had died. She lived on Kent Island was the last of the Bryans on Kent Island. She died at the age of 88 years and was unmarried. Before she was buried, Jennie Owens, a niece with whom she had lived all the life of the niece, also died. Jennie Owens was of Morman [sic] breeding and lived on the Morman farm, just below Stevensville, Kent Island.

(g) William Whitely Bryan and his wife, Florence C. Shimer, had three children:

1. Josephine Shimer Bryan, born September 1, 1906, who married Harry Siebert.
2. James Edmund Bryan, born July 1, 1909, and
3. William Whitely Bryan, Jr., born December 31, 1911.

92. John Edward[7] Smith (John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 17 March 1848 at Upper Heathworth, Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died 31 December 1930 at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He married Ella Seville 27 February 1873 at Barratt's Chapel, Frederica, Kent Co., Delaware, daughter of Nathan Sevil and Rebecca Wells. She was born 23 January 1854 in Kenton, Kent Co., Delaware, and died 20 January 1931 in Indiana (probably in Michigan City).

Children of John Smith and Ella Seville are:

+ 209 i. Lora Rebecca[8] Smith, born 12 October 1874 in Lincoln, Sussex Co., Delaware; died 02 June 1952 in Hahnemann Hospital, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

210 ii. Mary Mabel Smith, born 24 November 1875 in Milton, Sussex Co., Delaware; died 25 June 1954 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

+ 211 iii. Roberta Covington Smith, born 28 July 1877 in Denton, Caroline Co., Maryland; died 30 April 1945 at 440 E. Eighth St., Michigan City, LaPorte Co., Indiana.

---

[282] Thus far no information has been found regarding the award as a New Jersey "Woman of the Year".

+	212	iv.	Edward Seville Smith, born 02 March 1880 in Denton, Caroline Co., Maryland; died 26 September 1963 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
	213	v.	Florence Wells Smith, born 04 April 1881 in Greensborough, Caroline Co., Maryland; died 19 December 1927 in Greenville, Pitt Co., North Carolina. She married Guy Vernon Smith, Sr. 04 October 1906 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, son of John H. Smith and Julia Belcher; born 17 June 1881 in Pitt Co., North Carolina; died 19 June 1956 in Bladen Co., North Carolina.
+	214	vi.	Gilbert Haven Smith, born 27 December 1882 in Greensborough, Caroline Co., Maryland; died 14 December 1958 in Shaftsbury, Bennington Co., Vermont.
+	215	vii.	Earle Covington Smith, born 19 February 1885 at 1701 Mt. Salem Lane, Mount Salem, Wilmington, New Castle Co., Delaware; died 12 June 1965 in Wilmington, New Castle Co., Delaware.
	216	viii.	Ralph Parmelee Smith, born 08 July 1889 in Easton, Talbot Co., Maryland; died 18 May 1898 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
+	217	ix.	Elouise Smith, born 03 May 1891 at 520 Greensborough St., Easton, Talbot Co., Maryland; died 31 August 1979 at 24 Halcyon Dr., New Castle, New Castle Co., Delaware.

NOTES

92. John Edward Smith (1848–1930)
"Jack", "Missionary Smith"

Rev. John Edward Smith's mother died the year he was born on Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. He was orphaned upon the death of his father nine years later. His uncle, George Moore Smith, was one of his legal guardians, together with two cousins of George; but John was looked after by his sisters and aunts. Edward S. Smith's "Smith Genealogy" notes,

> "He and his brother, James, and their sisters were cared for by an elderly maiden great-aunt, Sallie Smith, for several years after the mother died, and then by cousins of their father, Susanna and Elizabeth Ratcliffe, who also lived with the Baynards for a while."[283]

By 1860, the orphaned children had been separated into the care of others. See under Capt. John Smith [No. 46] for a summary of the next-known events in the children's lives.

In the 1860 U.S. census, John Edward Smith, aged 13, resided in the household of John H. Covington and his wife, Catherine (Smith) Covington, near Church Hill in District 2, Queen Anne's Co. (She was a sister of Capt. John Smith.) Also in the household was another of John Edward Smith's aunts, Rachel Smith (never married), aged 39, whose brother was George Moore Smith. The 1866 map of Queen Anne's Co. by J. G. Strong, which locates many property owners, shows "J. Covington" just southwest of Church Hill;[284] today the location is approximately east and southeast of the junction of Maryland Rt. 213 and Main St. J. E. Smith presumably still lived there at the time when the map was published.

In the 1870 U.S. census, J. E. Smith is enumerated as a student at Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pennsylvania. He is listed with other students who resided in the West Ward of Carlisle. The head entry for all of the students is Shadrock Bowman, "Prof in Dickinson College". The dormitory domestic staff is included in the census, one of them being a Sarah Smith (no relation), who at the age of 10 was a "Domestic Servant"!

After graduating from Dickinson College[285] in 1871, at age 23, J. E. Smith received his ministerial charge in the Wilmington Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Kenton, Delaware, and was a junior preacher on the Smyrna Circuit in Delaware.[286] This began a life of service, almost all of it as a travelling minister, whether riding a circuit or serving as a missionary on the eastern seaboard. His son, Gilbert, said that his father was known as "the preacher who 'preached with his coat-tails.'"[287]

According to area and church histories and church records, John Edward Smith had appointments in the Methodist Church as follows:[288]

1870	Licensed as Local Preacher (in Cantebury, Delaware?)
1871-1872	Smyrna, Delaware, circuit (as assistant to E. Miller)[289] Also see Additions & Corrections
1873-1874	Lincoln, Delaware, circuit[290]
1875-1876	Milton, Delaware, circuit[291]
1877-1879	Denton, Maryland, circuit[292]

[285] Dickinson College in Carlisle, Pennsylvania, included a theological school teaching Methodist Episcopal doctrine. Dickinson was established in 1773 as a grammar school and became a college in 1783, the first college to be founded in the new Republic. The school's charter was written by Dr. Benjamin Rush of Philadelphia, a signer of the Declaration of Independence; he asked that the school be named in honor of John Dickinson, a signer of the recent Constitution of the United States. The Treaty of Paris was signed less than a week later, formally ending the Revolutionary War. Carlisle was a frontier locale at the time, near the Appalachian Mountains, inspiration for liberty, education, and faith; the seal of the college, created by Rush and Dickinson, depicts these themes, portraying a liberty cap, a telescope, and an open Bible. The school's motto is Pietate et Doctrina tuta Libertas (Religion and Learning, the Bulwark of Liberty). The school today remains a private liberal arts college, situated on 170 acres in Carlisle. [287] Gilbert Smith, "The Hick from the Eastern Shore" (typescript, 15 pp.) This typescript is transcribed herein under Gilbert Smith [No. 214].

[288] This list is compiled from the "Appointments" section of the annual published Minutes of the Wilmington Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church.

[289] Note that this is the Smyrna circuit, and not the Smyrna church-proper, which was a separate appointment, presumably with a pastor to itself. The circuits comprise smaller congregations in the vicinity of the town mentioned.

[290] The Appointments in the Minutes of the Fifth Annual Session of the Wilmington Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, for 1873, list Rev. Smith as "J. E. Smyth".

[291] His ministry in Milton was conducted until the Spring of 1877, according to Edward S. Smith's "Smith Genealogy", p. 49. Alternatively, a list of ministers in the Milton church list him there in 1877-1879 (J. Thomas Scharf, History of Delaware, 1609-1888, L. J. Richards and Co., Philadelphia, 1888, Vol. 2, Chapt. 59, Broadkiln Hundred). Given the evidential authority of the M.E. Church Wilmington Conference's own Minutes, they are given credence over both family information and other printed sources. Furthermore, as a matter of note, the circuit nature of Rev. Smith's ministries, his pastorates and residences need not coincide.

1880-1882	Greensboro, Maryland, circuit Also see Additions & Corrections
1883-1884	Mt. Salem, Wilmington, Delaware[293]

The 1871 published Minutes of the Wilmington Conference record that John Smith was in 1870 licensed as a Local Preacher, which was during the time when he also attended Dickinson College. The Minutes report that he resided in Cantebury, Delaware (today at the intersection of U.S. Routes 13 and 40). He would have had to have been recommended to the position by his home church; thus presumably this was in Cantebury. A "Local Preacher" may have been a position like that of an internship, and in John Smith's case it was probably conducted during times when he was home from school. Local Preachers were not given ministerial appointments, but worked (with or without pay) at the direction of the preacher appointed to the charge. The position further substantiates comments about John Smith's oratorical skills (of which note is made at several places in the present genealogy). The Cantebury Methodist church was built in 1856, although a society had existed there for years before that; it closed and was torn down in the 1950s. The records of the Cantebury church, held at the Barratt's Chapel and Museum in Frederica, Delaware, unfortunately begin only in 1873.[294]

Soon after being received into the Methodist Church, J. E. Smith married Ella Seville (the "Smith Genealogy" gives their marriage date as 23 February 1873, rather than the 27th, apparently a typographical error). They were married at Barratt's Chapel[295], the founding seat of American Methodism, which is north of Frederica, Kent Co., Delaware.[296] Although no immediate family members are known to be buried in the Barratt's Chapel cemetery, some distant relations are there.

[292] The Caroline Co., Maryland, directory for 1878 confirms Rev. Smith is in the Methodist Episcopal church for Denton.

[293] The Mt. Salem church was a separate appointment, not part of a circuit. It seems to have been the only fixed pulpit ever occupied by Rev. Smith.

[294] Information about John Smith at Cantebury, and the Cantebury church, was received from Philip Lawton, Barratt's Chapel and Museum (28 Jun 2007). On 21 June, I had stopped at Barratt's Chapel with my wife and sister. We were conducted through the chapel and museum by Mr. Lawton, on his own initiative, even though they were not open that day. He also shared much of his time by offering to look up Rev. Smith's appointments during the period that he was a Methodist preacher. The information about John Smith's position as a Local Preacher in Cantebury was hitherto unknown to present generations of the family, and there is no mention of it in the "Smith Genealogy".

[295] Typewritten notes about the Sevil family by J. Lathrop Mack (no date but probably 1930s) specify that John Edward and Ella (Seville) Smith were "Married at Bethel Chapel, near Kenton, Del." This is the only such notation found that differs from all other family information that the marriage was performed at Barratt's Chapel. Various family members were indeed affiliated with the Bryn Zion Baptist church east of Kenton, Delaware, and where also some family members are buried, including Sevils, which may have misled Lathrop Mack. Given that John Edward Smith had been recently been ordained into the Methodist Episcopal church it was ecclesiastically more appropriate and no doubt more meaningful that the marriage took place at Barratt's Chapel, the seat of American Methodism.

[296] Barratt's Chapel is the historic locale at which began the Methodist church in America. It is located north of Frederica, Kent Co., Delaware, on the east side of Delaware Rt. 1/U.S. Rt. 113. As remarked in an informational brochure from Barratt's Chapel and Museum:

> "Barratt's Chapel . . . was built in 1780 on land donated by Philip Barratt. It is known as the 'Independence Hall of American methodism' because it was at a Quarterly Conference held here on November 14, 1784, that American methodists first officially celebrated the sacraments of communion and baptism, a symbolic declaration that they intended to have their own church independent of the Church of England. At this same Conference Dr. Thomas Coke and Francis Asbury formulated plans to organize the Methodist Episcopal Church, the forerunner of The United Methodist Church and of a number of other modern American denominations which trace their heritage to the Wesleyan movement.

Spamer 2958

It is a little difficult to determine Jack Smith's age in this view. However, given the formality of his attire, one might expect that this was at some milestone age or meritorious event, perhaps his twenty-first birthday, or upon his graduation from the Methodist theological school at Dickinson College, in Carlisle, Pennsylvania.

Note that this studio view required a long exposure, as testified by the head brace used to keep the subject still while the photograph was taken; the feet of the bracing stand can be seen behind Jack's feet. Also note the hand-painted backdrop.

The Sevil family, into which John Smith married, resided in the vicinity of Hare's Corner, which is just a mile to the northeast of Cantebury in Newcastle Co. However, many of the Sevils were of the Baptist faith, who attended the former Bethel Church a mile west of Hare's Corner.[297] Accordingly, we may presume that John Smith did not live with a Baptist family when he was a Local Preacher in nearby Cantebury, but with whom he did live is not known at this time; there is no family record of his residence in the Cantebury area.

As noted in the Sevil Family collateral genealogy [farther below], due to travel distances some Sevils transferred from Bethel Church to Bryn Zion Church, a Baptist congregation near Kenton, Kent Co., Delaware, which also indicates that Sevils were more widely spread. The cemetery of the Bryn Zion church[298] holds some of the Sevils and members of the more extended family. Notably, Rev. Smith's own nine-year-old son, Ralph, was buried there, although Ralph was born and died after his father had withdrawn from the Methodist Episcopal church and was received into the New Church (about which more is discussed below).

The Denton circuit of the Methodist Episcopal church was large enough to require an assistant. In the 1877 appointments, Rev. Smith's assistant was J. M. Collins. In 1878, an assistant was "to be supplied"; that is, he had not been appointed by the time the annual Minutes of the Wilmington Conference were assembled for publication. In 1879, Smith's assistant in the Denton circuit was L. C. Andrew.[299]

In 1884, Rev. Smith received a new calling, to the Church of the New Jerusalem (also referred to as the New Church, or Swedenborgians). Exactly when he left the Methodist Episcopal Church for the Maryland Association of the New Church is not known now, but it was before the 12 March 1885 annual meeting of the Wilmington Conference of the M.E. Church, where under the Appointments section he was listed as "withdrawn".[300]

New Church adherents follow the Bible as do other Christian faiths, but are further guided and instructed through the writings and biblical interpretations of Emanuel Swedenborg (1688-1772) of Sweden.

> "The Chapel is a Heritage Landmark of The United Methodist Church, and is listed on the National Register of Historic Places. It is the oldest house of worship still in use in the U.S. built solely by and for a Methodist Society. Although there is no longer an active congregation at Barratt's, since 1956 it has been maintained as a museum by the Commission on Archives and History of the Peninsula-Delaware Conference."

[298] The Bryn Zion Church was earlier called the Old Duck Creek Church. Land was given for a Baptist church in 1747, to serve as a branch of the Welsh Tract Church whose members had founded a settlement at Duck Creek, Kent Co., Delaware, but the church was never built. Independents built the Mount Zion Church at the present site, which in 1771 was in disrepair and was conveyed to the Baptists who rebuilt it of brick, 30 × 25 feet. The congregation and church were incorporated 22 Jul 1794. (Thomas J. Scharf, History of Delaware, 1609-1888, Vol. 2, Chapt. 60, "Kenton Hundred".) The church was also known as the Old School Baptist Church. It was rebuilt in 1871, but was destroyed in a storm in 1942. The cemetery is still maintained at the crossroads of Wheatley's Pond Rd. (Delaware Rt. 300) and Bryn Zion Rd.

Although Swedenborg published prolifically during his lifetime, the Swedenborgian tenets did not even become a matter of public assembly until 15 years after his death, when the New Church movement was founded in England. Swedenborg had written that he was given insight into the true, spiritual meaning of the Word, and through it revealed that the Trinity of Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are in fact one. From these revelations, Swedenborg interpreted that a new church, Jerusalem, had been proclaimed by the Lord, the message of which was delivered to mortals through the writings published by Swedenborg.

Rev. Smith, in his new calling, served as a missionary to a circuit of congregations in Maryland and Delaware; and in fact, for the rest of his life he was a missionary. He served mostly in the Maryland–Delaware–Pennsylvania–New Jersey area, although for a few years he served also in Florida, Georgia, and spuriously elsewhere (such as in Tennessee). He came to be known informally as "Missionary Smith", although he was affectionately known as "Jack Smith". The tag of "Mrs. Missionary Smith" was given to Ella. On the Eastern Shore, he attracted some of his former Methodist Episcopal congregants to the New Church. When some of the small societies later disbanded, some individuals stayed with their new faith in other societies while others retired to their former faith.

By certificate, John Edward Smith was ordained into the General Convention of the New Church on 30 May 1886.[301] Although his ministerial seat and personal residence moved from town to town, and later state to state, he usually ministered concurrently to many congregations, or "societies". At first based at the Preston society, he ministered to congregations there as well as in Williston, Easton, and elsewhere as occasion required. He may have lived for a while in Preston, but his known residence during this early part of his New Church ministries was in Easton, at 820 Goldsborough St.[302] He seems to have arrived in Easton in mid-1885, as is noted elsewhere herein, which is prior to his formal ordination in the New Church. Also see Additions & Corrections

The "Smith Genealogy" notes that Rev. Smith "had built a small church at Preston"[303], which more likely means that he had assembled a small congregation there rather than having put up a church edifice. Congregations were generally small ones, and in some cases the New Church congregants shared worship space with other faiths. Two such places were the small church near Williston, and the now-historic Peachblossom Meeting House just south of Easton. (See additional comments about these churches farther below.)

Rev. Smith was always involved in missionary activities, and served officially within the church in such a capacity.[304] From 1892 to about 1895, Rev. Smith undertook missionary work in Jacksonville, Florida, and Savannah, Georgia, during which time he also made annual visits to Chattanooga, Tennessee. In 1891, a New Church convention at the church at 22nd and Chestnut Sts., in Philadelphia, included reports by various church missionaries. Rev. Smith made the report for the South, which is an indication that he was already involved in work there, prior to his move South.[305] And on the final day at this same meeting, the Jacksonville (Florida) Society of the New Church was admitted to the convention.[306] No doubt this was the time when Rev. Smith was given to the new society to serve its needs. When he did move to the South, the family lived in Jacksonville. More is said about the Smiths' time in Jacksonville in some of the narratives that follow. After just a few years, though, the family removed permanently to Philadelphia. Also see Additions & Corrections

In the Northeast again, John Smith was a missionary of the Pennsylvania Association of the New Jerusalem, serving at Montgomery's Ferry and Lancaster, Pennsylvania, as well as in Vineland, New Jersey[307]; but details about these pastorates are not known at this time. In 1900, at the centennial celebration of the New Jerusalem church on Calvert Street in Baltimore, Maryland, Rev. Smith spoke on "'New Church Missionary Work,' in which he dwelt upon the importance of earnestness and activity in this work."[308]

At around this time it seems that Rev. Smith may have remained closely involved with church affairs in Maryland. In 1900, Maryland considered changes to the Sunday "blue laws", which met with resistance in some pulpits. At the Night Session of the Maryland House of Delegates for 19 February 1900, petitions and protests against the changes in Sunday laws were read and heard, one of them specifically being "The petition of Rev. J. E. Smith and 80 others against any change in Sunday laws." The petitions were referred to the Committee on Judiciary. [309]

In his elder years, although he resided in Philadelphia, he continued as a missionary for the church.[310] He was a pastor to the church at Williston, Maryland, about 1915-1920. He is in fact listed in the 1910 and 1920 U.S. censuses for Philadelphia, and in city directories, which indicates he maintained a commuting relationship with the Williston church and others on the Eastern Shore. He is not known to have maintained a separate residence on the Eastern Shore, and probably lodged with congregants. Rev. Smith's ministry to the Eastern Shore officially ended on Sunday, 21 September 1924, although he continued some of his Church activities until his death.

Rev. Smith was a member of the "General Convention" of the Church of the New Jerusalem. He did not align himself with the New Church ecclesiastical organization known as the "General Church", which had separated itself in the 1890s and established its seat in Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania.[311] However, Rev. Smith's son, Gilbert, married Nora Potts, the daughter of Rev. John Faulkner Potts of the General Church, a prominent member of the Bryn Athyn sect. Their intentions must have been astounding news to the parents and the families, not to mention church members. Rev. Smith did attend the marriage ceremony, but returned immediately to Philadelphia; his wife, Ella, may not have attended (according to anecdotal information). Noticeably, none of the parents of Gilbert and Nora appear in the wedding photograph taken on the front steps of Stancot. (See more about this with Gilbert Haven Smith, No. 214.)

Known residences of Rev. Smith after beginning his attendance at Dickinson College are listed below. He and his family seem always to have lived in rented properties, at least 15 different ones, until they finally settled down at 820 South St. Bernard Street, in Philadelphia, around 1909.

[311] The first Swedenborgian society in America was a short-lived organization in Halifax, Nova Scotia, in 1791. In the United States a society first formed in Baltimore, Maryland, in 1792 and reorganized in 1798. Other independent churches were founded at first in Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Boston, and New York, and the General Convention formed in Philadelphia in 1817. Separate conferences also have been established elsewhere in the world, in England, South Africa, and Australia for example. In America, the General Convention suffered a schism in the 1890s, and the "General Church" established a seat in Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania. Whereas the church government of the General Convention was congregational, without an episcopal seat, the General Church did institute an episcopal system of governance. The General Convention held that the writings of Emanuel Swedenborg were "inspired", but they reflected personal and cultural biases, and the General Church held that the writings were authoritative and equivalent to the Bible. Educationally, the General Convention instructed youth through Sunday schools and church camps; the General Church instituted a traditional, structured school system from elementary school to college. In the present genealogy, one will see these differences reflected in the recollections of family members; those of the General Convention, like Rev. John Edward Smith and some of the Spamer relations from Baltimore, note Sunday schools, church camps, and similar religious congregations, whereas recollections by and about family members of the General Church, like Rev. John Faulkner Potts and Rev. Gilbert Smith, frequently note the Academy of the New Church in Bryn Athyn, both its traditional school and its theological school. The positions and practices of the General Convention and the General Church now extend into modern concerns, taking divergent stands on such matters as the ordination of women, social and political activism, open preferences of sexuality in its members and clergy, and abortion. The Borough of Bryn Athyn was formed from what then was Moreland Township, 8 Feb 1916. The borough is two square miles and today still includes a large proportion of open space and woodlands. The Academy of the New Church, the Bryn Athyn Church School, and the New Church college occupy more of the Bryn Athyn real estate than do its residents. McCarraher relates that when the Smiths lived in Clayton they resided in a house across the street from the railroad station, at the southeast corner of Main St. (Delaware Rt. 300) and Bassett St. Helen further relates that her grandmother, Ella, would never know whether her husband would bring guests (or how many) for dinner; so she always kept an eye out for him when he stepped down from the train upon returning from a preaching circuit. The house still stands today, although it has been added to since the time the Smiths lived there. Helen also indicated that Rev. Smith had preached at the Ewell's St. Paul Methodist Church, a short distance east on Rt. 300, and across the street. (The church was later moved and expanded; it is situated today at Clayton Ave. and East St.)

[313] Denton, Maryland, is the seat of Caroline County, situated on the Choptank River. After Caroline County was created in 1773, land was set aside on the Choptank to serve as the site of the county seat, and although the county court first met in 1774, the intercession of the Revolutionary War postponed the establishment of a town It was not until 1791 that the first public grounds were surveyed and a wharf built on the riverfront. The first steamboat to arrive in Denton came in 1850, but regular service took a while longer to be established. Denton served as a center for merchant business, first through maritime commercial activity on the bay, then by land as transportation methods improved. A toll bridge over the Choptank was built in 1811 by the Denton Bridge Company. The bridge was sold to the county shortly before the Civil War, and in 1875 it was replaced by an iron bridge–which the Smith family would have known–that stood until it was replaced by another iron bridge in 1913. This bridge was in use until 1976, when it was reinforced, and remained in use until a new concrete bridge was dedicated in 1981. (>>"A Brief History of Denton", Town of Denton website, http://www.dentonmaryland.com/ history.php; accessed 14 Dec 2005.) The Denton Historic District was added to the National Register of Historic Places. A complete description is at website http://www.mdihp.net (accessed 4 Aug 2006).

[314] Greensborough, Maryland, also known as Greensboro, was originally known as Choptank Bridge. In 1732, an act of the Maryland legislature was passed for the establishment of a town at the bridge near the head of the Great Choptank River. At the time that Rev. Smith resided here, he was still a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church, which had a presence in Greensborough since 1785. The church in which Rev. Smith probably preached was the one near the center of the town, on North Main St. (later, in 1903, the congregation had outgrown the church and the North Main St. church was vacated in favor of a new church on Railroad Ave.). (>>History of Caroline County, Maryland, From Its Beginning: material largely contributed by the teachers and children of the county, rev. and supplemented by Laura C. Cochrane, Lavinia R. Crouse, Mrs Wilsie S. Gibson, A. May Thompson, Edward M. Noble of the Caroline County schools, J. W. Stowell Printing Co., Federalsburg, Maryland, 1920.)

[315] If this large home was not the parsonage of the Mt. Salem M.E. Church, a block from the church at the other end of the Mt. Salem Cemetery, then probably it was a rented property.

[316] Easton, Maryland, finds its beginnings in the building along an old Indian trail the Third Haven Friends Meeting House, in 1682. Shortly afterward, Talbot Court House was established by the Maryland legislature, and in Dec 1788 the town was renamed Easton when it was designated the seat of Talbot County. The town is also known as the Colonial Capital of the Eastern Shore. The third of three town fires occurred in 1878, shortly before Rev. Smith's arrival, in which many structures were destroyed in the center of town. Thereafter, Easton grew commercially and in population. (>>Easton, Maryland, informational brochure.) For a history of Easton mostly in the 18th century, see "Early History of Easton" in Martin M. Higgins, History of the Reincarnation of Easton, Maryland (Press of the Easton Star-Democrat, Easton, 1926), Chapt. 1, pp. 6-12.

[317] We have circumstantial evidence that the Smiths had arrived in Easton by September 1885 (see details mentioned with Gilbert Haven Smith [No. 214]). If those suppositions are correct, then the Smiths moved to Easton

The pamphlet, "Peachblossom Meeting House" (Mid-Atlantic Association Newsletter, Mid-Atlantic Association of Swedenborgian Churches, Washington, D.C., no date [ca. 1977]), notices that about 1888-1890 Rev. Smith traveled out to his parishioners from Preston, Maryland; but this seems to be in error. Although he did minister to the Preston Society, he seems to have kept his family in residence in Easton. Preston was founded as Snow Hill about 1845, which later confused matters since there was already an older, larger town of Snow Hill in Maryland. The name was changed to Preston in 1856. [318] The Oak St. site seems to have been obliterated by Interstate 95, as part of the approach to the Fuller Warren Bridge. Rosselle St. is (in one area) one block north of the Oak St. address; it continues intermittently westward, interrupted by Interstate highways 95 and 10. Barnaby seems not to be a surviving street name now In any case, none of the original homes survive because they were likely destroyed in the Great Fire of 1901 that struck the Riverside section of Jacksonville. Whether the fire also affected later street alignments has not been investigated.

[319] The date 1895 is as given in the incomplete autobiography of Gilbert Haven Smith [No. 214]; he also had indicated that the family had been in Florida for seven years, but that recollection seems to be incorrect. The family had moved to Florida around 1892, and they were reestablished in Philadelphia by sometime in 1897 since J. E. Smith is listed in the 1898 city directory. A newspaper article taking notice of the 75th annual meeting of the General Conference of the Church of the New Jerusalem, in June 1895 in Cincinnati, Ohio, reported in passing that "Rev. J. E. Smith, of Jacksonville, Florida" was present ("Will Be More Liberal, Proceedings of the New Jerusalem Church General Conference", The Philadelphia Inquirer, 4 Jun 1895).

[321] The 1906 city directory does list a Rev. John Smith at 5182 Media St. Although this address is in the same general part of western Philadelphia, it does not seem to make sense that this is John Edward Smith.

The home of John Edward Smith in Clayton, Delaware, corner of Main St. (Delaware Rt. 300) and North Bassett St., as it was in 2004. This may have been the Smiths' first home, in the mid-1870s. The Clayton railroad depot is across the railroad tracks from this house (which run to the right of this view and behind the viewer).

Between about 1892 and 1895, Rev. Smith served as a missionary of the New Church in Florida and Georgia. The family resided at this house at 743 Oak St., Jacksonville, Florida. The house was likely destroyed in the great fire of Jacksonville, which occurred in this neighborhood on 3 May 1901. The site itself was destroyed when Interstate highway 95 was built through the neighborhood.

By 1897, Rev. John Edward Smith's missionary work in the South was concluded, and he moved his family to Philadelphia. During the next decade they resided in several households in this city, while Rev. Smith undertook missionary work in the region, mostly in southeastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey.

Between 1901 and 1904, the Smith family resided at a house on the southeast corner of 33rd and Baring Sts., in the Powelton Village section of West Philadelphia. Its address is given today as 3218 Baring St. At left is the house as it appeared at the time the Smiths lived here.

After the death of Rebecca Wells Sevil, the Smith family moved to its final home; one for the first time ever a purchased home rather than one rented. This was at 820 South St. Bernard Street, in the Southwest Philadelphia section of the city. It was affectionately recalled as "Eight Twenty", where many members of the extended family resided at one time or another, as children and as adults, during about thirty years. It was here, too, that the celebrated poet, Edwin Markham (inset, right) came to dinner at Rev. Smith's invitation.

1935/1936 city directory lists [note this is years after Rev. Smith's death]: "Smith John E clergyman", 820 South St. Bernard St.; also listed are Mabel Smith and Lora R. Spamer (Rev. Smith's daughters) and Edward Spamer (Lora's son). [The city directories for 1931–1934 ceased, and it seems that the 1935/36 directory was not strictly updated.]

After Rev. Smith removed to Philadelphia in 1895, this city remained his principal residence for the rest of his life.

The home at 3218 Baring St. is noted in the inventory of houses on the National Register of Historic Places, in the Powelton Historic District of Philadelphia. The description is brief:[322]

> Circa 1870, stucco over brick Italianate house, paired and triple arcuated windows, mansard roof on east tower wing, ogee dormers, first floor polygonal bay on main section, first and second floor window alts, enclosed porch to the west.

The home at 820 South St. Bernard Street, acquired probably in 1909, has taken on an almost iconic status in the family. It was always referred to as "820"—said "eight-twenty"—and was at one time or another home to many of the members of the extended family, both Smiths and Spamers, including Rev. Smith's children, grandchildren, cousins, and spouses. The home remained in the family until around 1940 at least, and it never seemed to have been at a loss for activity; some incidents are related in various places below.

Rev. Smith died at "820". His funeral was held from the Church of the New Jerusalem, 22nd and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia, with Rev. Charles W. Harvey officiating.[323] Rev. Smith was never a pastor in this church, but he was at times a guest preacher. Here also his daughter, Lora, was wedded by him to John Ward Spamer on 23 January 1901. Other family members, both immediate and more distant, had ties to this church as well. The church, built in 1883 and on the National Register of Historic Places, and its adjacent church house, was sold in 1986 and converted to business offices.

John Edward Smith is buried in lot 715, River Section, West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Bala Cynwyd, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania. His wife, Ella, died just three weeks later, following a brief illness after she had gone to her daughter's home in Michigan City[324], Indiana. Her son, Gilbert, accompanied her remains home to Philadelphia, and she was buried in the same lot with her husband.

An unidentified, clipped Philadelphia newspaper obituary noticed the funeral services for Rev. Smith:

REV. JOHN E. SMITH

Hold Funeral Services for Eighty-Two-Year-Old Clergyman Today

Funeral services for the Rev. John E. Smith, 820 S. St. Bernard st., this city, will be held at 2 P. M. today from the First Church of the New Jerusalem, 22d and Chestnut sts. The Rev. Charles W. Harvey, pastor, will conduct the services.

Mr. Smith, who was eighty-two, was a home missionary of the Swedenborgian Church of this district more than sixty years. He was graduated from Dickinson College at twenty-three, and was appointed a junior preacher on the Smyrna Circuit of Delaware, where he married Miss Ella Sevil, and settled at Mt. Salem, Del. Later he resigned from the Methodist Church and was engaged as missionary by the Maryland Association of the New Jerusalem Church, his parishioners of Preston and Williston following him in his new affiliation.

Still later he became the missionary of the Pennsylvania Associa[t]ion and served at Montgomery's Ferry, Lancaster, and Vineland, N. J.

The New Church Messenger noticed the passing of Rev. John Edward Smith and his wife, Ella, with the following obituary by Rev. Charles W. Harvey, minister of the Church of the New Jerusalem, in Philadelphia. It is transcribed in the "Smith Genealogy" [325] (also compare the General Convention's own official version, which follows afterward):

The Rev. John E. Smith (Missionary Smith) passed to the other life on Wednesday, December 31, 1930, in his 83rd year. The services were held at the First Jerusalem Church of Philadelphia, on Saturday, January 3, 1931, the Rev. Messers [sic] Charles W. Harvey and Antony Regamey officiated.

The following brief obituary notice of this well known and beloved missionary appeared in the Philadelphia papers:

"In the death of the Rev. John Edward Smith, late of 820 S. St. Bernard Street, this city, the Swedenborgian Church of this district loses one of its most devoted home missionaries. He was a born preacher, starting as a country boy, sitting on a gate, with the nodding grain for approving audience. He graduated from Dickinson Methodist College at twenty-three and was appointed a Junior Preacher on the Smyrna Circuit of Delaware. Here he married Miss Ella Sevil and later he made his headquarters at Mt. Salem, then a suburb of Wilmington. There he became acquainted with the Rev. J. B. Parmalee [sic], the Swedenborgian minister of Wilmington and at the age of 32, with a family of 7 children, he resigned from the Methodist Conference with little more to go on than his assurance that "The Lord will provide". His Methodist parishioners in the District of Eastern Maryland, where he was serving the towns of Preston and Williston, interested in his change of faith, invited him to deliver lectures on the subject in their neighborhood, especially at successfully developed, but the advent of railroads opened up the transportation arteries needed to send products to markets. Early settlers came west from Massachusetts and New York; and eventually European economic refugee immigrants arrived. Today, Michigan City experiences economic and architectural revival throughout its business district. Denton, under the direction of Mr. William Potter Richardson. [326] (Note: Mr. Richardson whom Mr. Smith had previously brought over from Roman Catholicism). This lead to Mr. Smith's being engaged under the Maryland Association of the New Jerusalem (Swedenborgian) Church as their Missionary, the Preston and Williston Churches following him in his new affiliation. Later he became the missionary also of Montgomery's Ferry, Lancaster, Vineland, N.J., and other centers. He passed on at the age of 82 years, having spent upward of 60 years in active preaching service. He is survived by his wife and a family of seven children out of a family of nine. C.W.H."

"Ella Seville Smith, widow of John E. Smith, departed this life on January 20, 1931, surviving him by 20 days. Services were held at Michigan City, Indiana, conducted by the Rev. Donald C. Gustafson; also at her late residence, 820 S. St. Bernard St., Philadelphia, on January 23, 1931, her 77th birthday. The Rev. Messrs. Charles W. Harvey and Antony Regamey officiated. Gilbert came East with his mother's remains. At the time of Mr. Smith's death, Mrs. Missionary Smith, as she was affectionately known, seemed wonderfully well, especially considering her constant and unwearying attendance upon her beloved husband during his gradually increasing disability. A week after his funeral, upon the invitation of Roberta, she went on a visit to her daughter, Mrs. J. Lathrop Mack of Michigan City, Ind. Her son Gilbert Haven Smith of Glenview, Illinois, came to see her there also. After a day or two of apparently good health and cheerful resignation, a sudden attack of pneumonia seemed to develop out of a slight cold, accompanied by symptoms of stroke, and she passed peacefully on, but 10 days after her arrival. We hear of few such strikingly blessed Providences, as the taking to the other world of this devoted couple, within so short a time of one another, with their lifelong mutual affection and dependence. CWH"

The General Convention of the New Jerusalem offered its own memorial to Rev. J. E. Smith, read into the minutes of the General Convention by Rev. Charles W. Harvey. It was printed as Minute 105 of the proceedings of the Convention, signed by George Henry Dole and Charles W. Harvey, as follows:

105. The following memorial to the late Rev. John E. Smith was read by the Rev. Charles W. Harvey:

IN MEMORY OF THE REV. JOHN EDWARD SMITH.
(1848-1930)

Rev. John E. ("Missionary") Smith passed to the other life on Wednesday, December 31st, 1930, in his 83rd year. An obituary, substantially as follows, appeared in the Philadelphia newspapers and the New-Church Messenger.

In the death of the late Rev. John E. Smith the Church of the New Jerusalem of this district loses one of its most devoted Home Missionaries. He was a born preacher, starting as a country boy sitting on a gate with the nodding grain for approving audience. He graduated from Dickinson (Methodist) College of Pennsylvania. He made his first headquartes at Mt. Salem, then a suburb of Wilmington, having married Miss Ella Sevil of that locality. Here he became acquainted with the Rev. J. E. Parmalee [sic], and after long discussions became convinced of the truth of the teachings of Swedenborg. He resigned from the Methodist Conference, therefore, being then 32 years of age, with a family of seven children, and with little more to go upon than his assurance that "the Lord will provide." His Methodist parishoners around Easton, Md., where he was serving Preston and Williston, interested in his change of faith, invited him to deliver lectures on the subject. This he did, especially at Denton, Md., with the help of a Mr.

[326] William P. Richardson (born 1828) was a farmer residing in Hillsboro, Caroline Co., Maryland, about six miles from Denton. At about the time of his conversion by Rev. Smith, he had six children. He was reasonably well to do, with real estate valued at $10,000 at the time of the 1870 U.S. census. Richardson is a name fairly well represented in the civic affairs of early Caroline County, but whether W. P. Richardson was a relation has not been determined.

William G. Richardson, whom Mr. Smith had previously brought over from the Roman Catholics. This led to Mr. Smith's being engaged by the Maryland Association of the New Church as its missionary, his Preston and Williston congregations following him in his new affiliation. Later he became the missionary of the Pennsylvania Association also, serving their societies at Montgomery's Ferry, Lancaster, Vineland, N. J., and other centers. When he passed on, he had spent upwards of sixty years in active preaching service. His beloved and devoted wife, who seemed quite well at the time of his decease, survived him, however, only by twenty days.

Mr. Smith was distinguished for his analytical and deeply penetrating mind ; for his ability to express profound truths clearly and simply ; and also for being an exceptionally effective reader of the Word. He was particularly blessed in his wife, who was in every way a helpmeet. Both of them are held in tender and lasting remembrance, not only by the members of their Church, but also by all who knew them.

We record the deep sense of loss experienced by the Convention, and request that this resolution be spread upon its minutes, and a copy sent to the members of his family.[327]

Church of the New Jerusalem, 22nd and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia

Rev. John Edward Smith was never a minister at the Church of the New Jerusalem at 22nd and Chestnut Sts. in Philadelphia.[328] He did, however, officiate at some family functions there and attended services when he was not traveling. He was a guest preacher from time to time, too.[329] Nonetheless, this church is central to the lives of many people mentioned in these genealogical sketches; Spamers, Smiths, and others alike worshipped, married, and mourned here. Others were among the parishioners who saw its final service, when the church was closed and sold. So it seems reasonable to take note of this church, so widely important to many of the extended family, by attaching these comments to the sketch about Rev. Smith, whose last service was held there.

The church, founded in 1881, survived as a place of worship from 1883 to 1986, when diminished resources and congregation brought its ecclesiastical life to an end. Its use continued in the form of corporate offices, with much of its exterior and interior designs preserved.

[327] The copy from which this text was transcribed is the very copy mailed to the family, care of Miss M. Mabel Smith, by the Secretary of the General Convention, B. A. Whittemore, 24 Jun 1931 (received by Earle Spamer from Helen McCarraher, February 2008). The cover letter from Whittemore stated: "At the meeting of the General Convention of the New Jerusalem held in Cincinnati, Ohio, on May 16th-19th, memorials to the various ministers of the Convention who had passed on to the Higher Life during the preceding year were read, and were adopted by a rising voite for incorporation in the records of the Convention. The memorial to Rev. John Edward Smith, thus finding place as Minute 105 in the proceedings of the Convention, reads as on the slip attached below."

[328] Sometimes referred to as the First Church of the New Jerusalem since it was a part of the First New Jerusalem Society of Philadelphia. As a corner property, its lot addresses are 2129 Chestnut St. and 27-41 S. 22nd St. A garden occupies the corner itself; the church fronts on 22nd St., and the adjacent parish hall, accessed through the church yard, has frontage on Chestnut St.

[329] Thus far the only certain record of Rev. J. E. Smith preaching at the church at 22nd and Chestnut Sts. is in 1898, when The Philadelphia Inquirer (28 Mar 1898) reported on one of his informational sermons. This is quoted later herein.

The program from the church's final service, 23 November 1986, provides a brief summary of the church's history, which serves to introduce the current reader to it:

> Early in the morning of August 22, 1881, Mr. William MacGeorge and Mr. Richard A. Lewis met in the old stone yard[330] at 22nd and Chestnut Streets and each turned over seven spades of soil to break ground for the new house of worship of the First New Jerusalem Society of Philadelphia.
> Work proceeded rapidly and the new church building was dedicated on March 11, 1883, with a sermon delivered by the president of Convention, James Reed, on "The Beauty of Holiness."
> An early document describes the buildings: 'The church is in outline simple and dignified, belonging to the early English Gothic style of architecture of the 13th century. It is built without any clere-story, the church being spanned by one large truss. The orientation is correct, the chancel end facing east. The south and north sides are broken with windows and gables, which have the appearance of transepts.
> 'At the southwestern corner, a picturesque porch vaulted with tone, gives entrance to the main edifice. This porch in itself is an architectural gem of much beauty, as it is something never done before in this city; in fact it is only seen in the cathedrals and churches abroad.
> 'The Sunday School building belongs to a later style of Gothic architecture than the church. It is of the same material and two stories in height The windows are peculiarly striking, the mullions being also of stone and filled with glass leaded into the stonework. There are no wooden frames either outside or inside. A stone cloister connects the two buildings near the chancel end of the church. The interior of both church and Sunday School is finished in hard woods, cherry being used in the church and butternut in the Sunday School building.'
> Theophilus Chandler was the architect for both buildings. He remodeled the chancel in 1897 and designed the angels' staircase in 1908.

By April 1882, the church was nearly completed, as noticed in The Philadelphia Inquirer (spellings thus):[331]

> New Jerusalem Church.
> The new building for the new Jerusalem Church, now in process of construction, is nearly completed. The property will have a frontage of ninety-two feet on Chestnut street and 164 feet on Twenty-second street. The building is on the northern end of the lot, and is 92 by 73 feet, and the Sunday School building in the east is 64 feet by 42 feet. The church can be entered either from Twenty-second street or from Chestnut, and the style of architecture is English Gothic of the thirteenth century. A porch, vaulted with stone, will give entrance to the main building at the southwest corner. The stone arches run up to a Gothic groin, of which there are very few examples in America. The roof will be relieved by pinnacles at the corners and between the windows. The material used in the construction of the church is Trenton and Newark brownstone. The church will have a seating capacity for 900 persons. The Sunday school building will be two stories in height.

The architect of the church, Theophilus Parsons Chandler, Jr. (1845-1928), was a notable Philadelphian whose works often reflected high-style designs and European influences.[332] He strongly influenced the architectural climate of Philadelphia as a founder of the Department of Architecture in the University of Pennsylvania. After spending a year at Harvard University, he studied at Atelier Vaudremer, in Paris, returning to America to work in Boston architectural firms. In 1872 he was persuaded by landscape architect Robert Copeland to come to Philadelphia, and he established an office at 705 Sansom St. He was supported by strong family ties through the Chandlers of New England (he was a member of the Society of Mayflower Descendants and the Sons of the Revolution) and, through some family members, professional ties to the Du Ponts of Delaware, which working together positioned Chandler for lucrative commissions in Philadelphia projects. He became most well known for his ecclesiastical works, partly from the influence of his grandfather, William Schlatter, who was a founder of the Church of the New Jerusalem in Philadelphia. The styles he contributed to the church at 22nd and Chestnut Sts. included Gothic, Renaissance, and Late Gothic Revival. A view of the church as it appeared when new appears in King's Views of Philadelphia (1900).[333] At about this time, Gilbert Haven Smith [No. 214], then a student at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, painted a impressionistic view of 22nd St.,with the church steeple in the background.[334]

The Angel Staircase was added to provide direct access from the church yard to the second story of the parish house. The staircase is in architectural keeping with the church and parish house, with angels atop the two supports, one at the landing and one at the top. The angel sculptures are no longer present on the staircase; presumably they were removed and sold as architectural elements after the church was sold and converted to business offices (as noted below).

In 1985, the church congregation faced rising maintenance costs and declining membership and sought a buyer for the property who would not raze the buildings. After a year's search, involving the Preservation Fund of Pennsylvania and the Preservation Coalition of Greater Philadelphia, the Edward S. Brown Group of developers purchased the property for $850,000 and planned a $3 million conversion into a corporate office complex. The façades of the buildings remain intact; and the carved limestone altar, cherrywood pulpit, and stained glass windows remain.[335] The buildings were developed into corporate offices for Graduate Health System, which owned the property, most of which was occupied by the Weightman Group, an advertising firm who vacated the offices in 2005. At that time, lease or sale arrangements were considered by Graduate Health System,[336] but the structures remained vacant. As of late 2007, a new tenant seems to have occupied the structure.

The National Trust for Historic Preservation, in conjunction with Partners for Sacred Places, produced a brief site significance report for Graduate Health System in May 2005.[337] Curiously, it notes a "date of closure" as "mid-1980s" and "date of fire" 1985, although there is no mention of a fire in either the report or in newspaper accounts of the closing of the church in November 1986. The National Trust report provides the most accurate summary of the alterations that were done to the buildings:

> The cruciform-shaped church situated on the corner lot had been designed by the founder and first dean of the University of Pennsylvania's School of Architecture. Modeled after the Gothic cathedrals of Europe, the church featured ornately carved woodwork, carved stone tracery, granite floors and arched stained glass windows. The vaulted barrel ceilings were an immense sixty-five feet high, supported by carved granite buttresses. The adjacent parish hall, designed in a similar English Gothic Revival style, provided additional space for the commercial tenant to grow and also provided a view shed through a large garden with its quaint vaulted roof and chords.
> The building was in adequate condition and, fortunately, completely structurally stable. The wood ceiling had accumulated candle soot, and areas such as doors and walls had experienced obvious wear and tear from the building's use by the congregation for over a hundred years. The interior plaster on the walls was coming off the lath and the stone on the exterior was spalling. Structurally, the building was sound since some walls had footings that ran twenty feet below ground, although during the installation of additional floor space, some shoring and reinforcing of the walls was temporarily required.
> The church space was converted to executive offices with room for expansion. Since office use would require additional floor space, the ground floorboards that had begun to slant were removed and the sub floor was excavated four to five feet. Two balconies were added in four of the six bays, leaving the altar area unchanged as a space for receptions. Additionally, a large spiral staircase and an elevator were placed to give access to all levels.
> A glass wall was inserted in the interior to define the space and muffle noise. The transparent wall encases the chancel framed by granite arches, an altar chiseled from stone and stained glass windows.
> The building has successfully accommodated different tenants over the years. The key to achieving continual occupancy for the owner has been to tastefully decorate the interior. Square chairs, sofas, and low-walled cubicles augment the configuration of the cruciform plan and echo the box pews of the original church space. Allowing light to funnel through the stained glass windows, supplemented with soft, indirect overhead lighting, gives a uniquely ephemeral quality to the non-traditional office space. The picturesque atrium, oriental carpets, and restored wood detailing provide an impressive and memorable sight to office workers and visitors.

In addition to the structural and aesthetic modifications, updated heating and air conditioning, electrical systems, and emergency equipment were installed.

The final service in the church, 23 November 1986, ended with a postlude by Bach, "Toccata in F Minor", while the ministers participating the service recessed from the sanctuary carrying the Word of God from the altar. During the postlude, members of the congregation were invited to kneel at the chancel steps to give thanks and bid farewell. The participating ministers were Rev. Ernest O. Martin, Rev. Randall E. Laakko, Rev. Dr. Dorothea Harvey, Rev. Richard M. Baxter, and Rev. Dr. Robert H.

Kirven. During the time of the church, ten ministers had made their work here, including Rev. Laakko (1965-1967) and Rev. Martin (1984-1986).

The congregation of the Church of the New Jerusalem relocated to the Swedenborgian Church at Temenos [Temenos Retreat Center] in West Chester, Pennsylvania, which is still an active congregation.

Rev. John Edward Smith's Conversion to the New Church

Rev. Smith withdrew from the Wilmington Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church probably during the latter part of 1884, but certainly by early 1885. He had been appointed to the Mt. Salem church in Wilmington for 1884, but by 12 March 1885, the annual meeting of the Wilmington Conference, he had left the ministry; in the Appointments section for the meeting he is listed as having "withdrawn".[338] Also see Additions & Corrections

The reasons for Rev. Smith's conversion are one of the enduring personal mysteries of the family, which apparently were never explained to his children, nor to anyone from whom we might have had a written record. Edward Seville Smith's comments in the "Smith Genealogy" offer personal reflections on the matter. It is clear, nevertheless, that Rev. Smith had believed that the doctrines as written by Emanuel Swedenborg provided greater clarity as to the nature of the Trinity, the heavenly host, and the work that we have here on earth. We must assume that Rev. Smith also gained great personal insight from the Swedenborg writings.[339]

[339] An 1872 book by Philadelphia minister E. R. Keyes of the First New Church Society, formerly a Methodist minister, might have been instrumental in Rev. Smith's decisions, as well as was the personal intervention of Rev. J.B. Parmelee, of Wilmington, and others, as is discussed elsewhere herein. Whether or not the book actually was seen by Rev. Smith is unknown, but it seems highly unlikely that it would not have been brought to his attention. That book is E. R. Keyes, Wesley and Swedenborg. A Fraternal Appeal to Methodist Ministers, Inviting Them To Consider the Relations of Methodism to the New Church (J. B. Lippincott and Co., Philadelphia, 1872).

It is a daunting task even to suggest some "basic" works about the writings of Emanuel Swedenborg and Swedenborgian philosophy. The depth of scholarship in any of dozens of available interpretive works varies from general to exhaustive, for laymen and academics alike. Swedenborg's own writings have gone through numerous critical reprintings and translations; a New Century edition of his works in English, retranslated and with critical notes, is currently in progress. Most of Swedenborg's writings were originally in Latin and are voluminous. Among his postulates, the Trinity is proved, in Swedenborg's view, to be misconstrued by religions of the day; that there is but one unified deist entity who was, in corporeal form, Jesus. Perhaps Swedenborg's most-often reprinted and edited work is his mnemonically retitled Heaven and Hell, in which he describes the structure and phenomena of the world of spirits who intervene between earth and those realms; and indeed, the nature of heaven and hell diverge from the perceptions held by traditional Christian theologies. Swedenborg's magnum opus is the series, Arcana Coelestia (Heavenly Secrets), a verse-by-verse study of the biblical books of Genesis and Exodus, comprising some seven thousand pages in its original form; a work which has gone through critical editions and reprintings. Rev. John Faulkner Potts, who is noted in this genealogy of the Smith family (see the Potts Family collateral genealogy), was the compiler of The Swedenborg Concordance: A Complete Work of Reference to the Theological Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg, Based on the Original Latin Writings of the Author (Swedenborg Society, London, 1888). This work comprised six stated volumes, although, as it was originally issued in fascicles, it is traditionally bound in 12 volumes. This monumental reference work, occasionally misreferred as the "Potts Concordance", is now long out of print; still it remains indispensable to the serious scholar of Swedenborg.

Edward Smith's narrative in the "Smith Genealogy" attempts also to explain New Church doctrines, and how they may have influenced Rev. Smith's new calling. Edward's descriptions (below) are neither precise nor authoritative, but they are kept here for the historical perspective they provide, as explained by one of Rev. Smith's sons. John Smith's decision was not sudden, nor rash as we see, but such a remarkable change in one's faith and ministerial charge must have been for profoundly felt reasons. The change would affect not only his occupation, but his whole family; his return to a missionary ministry, after briefly serving from a fixed pulpit in Wilmington, Delaware, would take them once again amongst a far-flung flock. Edward Smith wrote:[340]

> In the writing of this branch of the Smith family, we should write particularly now of Rev. John Edward (Jack) Smith and what was probably the most important decision of his personal life and of his service in the Church. He had been preaching in the Methodist Conference for years on the Eastern Shore and had advanced in respect, affection, and esteem and was now the minister at Mt. Salem M.E. Church, Wilmington, Delaware.
> He came to the realization that he was preaching doctrine in which he did not believe. He was a forceful speaker, a lover of logic and debate, logician and theologian, and lived according to his belief. In fairness to the Conference he should preach according to the doctrines of the Church he had served so long. In fairness to himself and his religious convictions, he could not preach doctrines which he did not believe. The Church, his friends, and family were patient and tolerant and heard him fully as to his position, but he felt there was no choice for himself but to resign his pastorate, which he did about 1886.
> That there was this variance between the Church doctrines and his own convictions he had realized for some time, and he had talked with friends concerning it, and to J. B. Parmelee of Wilmington, Delaware, and a lawyer there by the name of Hinckley [sic].[341] They told him of and interested him in the writings of Emanuel Swedenborg, on which are based the doctrines of the Church of the New Jerusalem, which name has relation to the vision of John, "He saw the Holy City New Jerusalem descending out of the Heavens," etc. By Certificate dated May 30, 1886, John Edward Smith was ordained into the ministry of the New Church in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the General Convention of the New Jerusalem in the United States of America.

I have never heard particularly wherein he differed, or as to what or which doctrines of Methodism he did not subscribe. Before decision was made, he discussed the subject with Rev. James Edmund Bryan, his brother-in-law, and the ministers and members of the Conference, and with his wife, Ella, upon whom the result of the change by him would eventually bear heavily. She encouraged him and concurred in his decision.

This is not a preachment, but the differences may have arisen from interpretations of the doctrine of vicarious atonement. One interpretation, and it is proclaimed even today, is that the Lord sent his beloved son, Jesus, into the World to died [sic] on the cross for the sins of the World, and thereby atone for the sins of others, of the World.

Another interpretation is that He sent his beloved son to redeem the World. He redeemed the World. This He did by overcoming the power of evil and the Hells, during His long sojourn in the Wilderness, and thereby restoring to mankind the power to choose between good and evil; to choose between a life of love of the Lord and his neighbor according to the Ten Commandments and the two Great Commandments, or to live a life of the love of evil and lust and hatred, removed from the light of love, good, and truth according to Divine precepts.

Each soul has the sole choice of his eternal destiny, with the grace of the Lord, and intercession by earthly [342], is only possibly, a comfort for those remaining on earth.

There were tribes of people in the World, at the time of the coming of Christ, which had for centuries been waiting for the coming of the King of the Jews, according to the Prophets and prophecies of old. To them, the coming of the King of the Jews, as they knew and contemplated kings and emperors, would bring them power and prestige and release from bondage they had known so long. They could not accept Christ as the King foretold by the Prophets and could not comprehend the teaching of Christ, that his kingdom was a spiritual kingdom, wherein people lived in love of the Lord and of the neighbor and fellow-men, according to the Ten Commandments and the Two Great Commandments. Some are still waiting for the King proclaimed by the Prophets and deny the Divinity of Christ, the Son of God.

Some eminent researchers, who are of the same tribes and peoples, and who know the ancient customs and traditions of their people, have written learned treatises and books about the people of the days of Christ and the state of the people of those days and have portrayed the idolatry, adultery, vice, and degradation, hatred, and baseness of the world at the time of the coming of Christ. His coming was opportune and necessary to bring about the redemption of the world, by the subjugation of the power of evil and Hell, thus restoring to the world the knowledge of good and evil and to restore to mankind the power to choose for themselves between the two.

[341] Rev. J. B. Parmelee was "an indefatigable lecturer on Swedenborgian topics" who led the Wilmington society of the New Church (Ophia D. Smith, "Daniel Lammot and His Roll in the New Church in Delaware", Delaware History, Vol. 8, No. 4 (Sep 1959), p. 339 [Ophia Smith is no known relation to the family]). The lawyer, "Hinckley", was certainly Edward Otis Hinkley (1824-1896) who founded the Edward Hinkley law firm in Baltimore. The firm went through several name changes as partners changed; one of these firm names being "Hinkley, Spamer and Hisky", when Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer (1843-1912) was offered a partnership. Spamer was himself also very involved in New Church activities nationally (see Part I, Spamer Family, No. 81).

> The Second Coming of Christ is the acceptance by each of us of his Divine teaching to do good and shun evil and to live according to the Ten Commandments and the Two Great Commandments, for the love of the Lord God and to live in faith and good works for the love of the Lord and our fellow man.
> John E.—Jack—Smith was sent out as Lecturing Messenger or Preacher, and after leaving Mt. Salem Church we lived a short time on Lincoln Street and on Rodney Street, near Rockford Park in Wilmington, Delaware, and then moved to Easton, Maryland.
> People recognized his sincerity; some thought he had deserted them and some accepted with him the doctrines of the New Church. In 1940, Edwina Hoyt[343] had a program of a meeting of ministers at Milton, Delaware, dated October 14, 1872, which showed James Edmund Bryan[344] and John Edward Smith as Speakers.[345] John Edward Smith spoke on the subject: "Will the Jews who persist in the rejection of Christ be lost".
> The Cross is inseparably associated with the crucifiction [sic] of Christ. The Jews had two means of punishment long before and after the Crucifiction [sic]. One, the cross with the victim nailed to the cross, alive, and another, the stoning, the victim being taken to a depression in the area and stoned by all who wished to and left alive or dead. Could anything more fiendish, intolerable and inhumane be imagined? Burial alive would seem more humane. Was it not time that the Lord send His beloved Son?

One of the forceful ideas for Rev. Smith's decision to enter the New Church is conjectural, of course, but seems to be revealed by his love for people, logic, and debate. The Writings of Swedenborg provide startling, even convincing, interpretations of Christian doctrine and universal being; bordering even on the philosophical. It seems that it would have been just this kind of allowance for the interpretation and discussion of doctrine that would have been very attractive to Rev. Smith; less favored, even contradictory, in the Methodism in which he had been raised and trained. So attracted by the logic of Swedenborgian tenets, and using his own given talents for speaking and debate, it may be that Rev. Smith's conversion is less of a wonder than it was a necessity. And this same ecclesiastical climate seems also to have led Rev. Smith to remain with the General Convention of the New Church, when the unfortunate division of the church came about by the 1890s.

In November 1908, Rev. Smith signed a 33-page tract, which seems to be his only publication, distributed by about March 1909. It is "A Vindication of the Hon. Emanuel Swedenborg and the New Church" [346], as it relates to a recent legal opinion of the Orphans' Court of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. The court had ruled in the adjudication of a legacy left by Frederick J. Kramph, intended to found in Philadelphia a university under the General Church of the Church of the New Jerusalem. The court had voided the [345] Note that this sentence and the previous one seem to be confused temporally. The 1872 date antecedes by more than a decade Rev. Smith's calling to the work of the New Church. Inasmuch as Rev. Bryan was a Methodist preacher, as was Rev. Smith at first, it is more likely that the two preachers spoke under mutual circumstances. Thus the sentences are out of place, their juxtaposition well-meant in defining Rev. Smith's congregational audiences.

B. Lippincott, Philadelphia, 1908). The March 1909 distribution date is noticed in the Academy of the New Church's history of the Kramph case, The Kramph Will Case (Bryn Athyn, 1910) legacy, finding that Swedenborg's writings—specifically, his Conjugial Love[347]—as taught by the Academy of the New Church was contrary to morality laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. A specific point of objection by the court was found in the doctrine wherein conjugial love may sometimes be permissive outside the bounds of legal marriage. Rev. Smith wrote, "This is perfectly shocking to me. I knew there were ideas in the General Church and Academy tending that way, but I never thought I would see them so boldly stated on paper."[348] The tract refutes the General Church's position, and Rev. Smith states that the joint council erred because their declaration does not reflect, nor quotes, the Divine Revelation expressed in the writings of Swedenborg. Two years later, the General Church produced a lengthy review and discussion, The Kramph Will Case, which is a history of the debate based on documentary evidence, although favorable to the position of the General Church.[349] It comments specifically on the Smith tract, noting that it is "utterly at variance" with the General Church's views, and that it "shows abundant signs of the influence of the Convention's 'interpretation,' which is a very different thing" and that some of his review embraced "gross slander against the members of the Academy." [350]

In Rev. Smith's own words is preserved what could be the only transcript—albeit a partial one—of his innumerable sermons and lectures. In 1898, at the church at 22nd and Chestnut Sts., he delivered a talk about the "afterlife". The Philadelphia Inquirer reported on this talk in the next day's newspaper. It contains purely ideological Swedenborgian tenets, made a bit more easy to understand by those who are not deeply indoctrinated in the teachings. Presumably, the quotations are precise, and thus are the words of Rev. Smith, but surely the newspaper record is only a synopsis of a much lengthier and informative presentation:[351]

THE FUTURE LIFE

Discourse on Immortality by Rev. John E. Smith

> "The Future Life and How We Live It" was the subject of a lecture by the Rev. John E. Smith last evening at the Church of the New Jerusalem, Twenty-second and Chestnut streets. He said "Immortality seems to be the hope of all men. Some think they can see the truth of it with the clearness of rational demonstration, other see no sign of it from the evidence of things about them. Yet none, maybe, are without the hope of it. With many the belief in it is a mere matter of persuasion, education or preference, without rational thought concerning it; indeed, with little or no care about it, because the loves of this world absorb their interest.
> ["]By two considerations, immortality may be said to be the logic of creation. First, the general conspiracy of nature, in that it shows how each lesser thing contributes to the existence of a larger thing. Second, these faculties are themselves the prophecy of immortality, for faculty means what is possible to the creature. The life of everything is according to its faculties.

"The fact so probable to rational thought is clearly taught to us in the Sacred Scriptures, as is also the presence of a spiritual world in the midst of the natural world, but invisible to natural eyes, in which we shall live after death. Peter, James and John, at the scene of the transfiguration, are said to have seen Moses and Elias, and to have heard them talk. The spiritual world is, therefore, shown as simply the naturally invisible side of the world in which we are, and those who have gone from us by death are still living and active human beings. The angel who appeared to John on Patmos disclosed his identity, saying, 'I am thy fellow servant and of thy brethren the prophets.'

"Psychology and Sacred Scriptures agree in saying that that the human psyche or soul is a positive entity, having its personality vested in will and understanding, and its own spiritual body organized within the covering of the natural body. 'There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body.'

"Science and revelation agree in saying that there is no such thing as death, in the sense of extinction. It is only relative, and means separation, thus change of form, and is always the bringing forth of the internal by putting on the external.

"Human consciousness and human reason, so far as they are reason and consciousness, confirm the same truths. Death is to man the gateway to a higher and broader life. He is raised at death into the spiritual world, and there exists in a human form of spiritual substance with more perfected capabilities in that which constitutes the whole of his life summed in three terms—loving, thinking and doing.

"His life hereafter will and must cover all that is implied in the idea of human life, less his materiality, which, strictly speaking, is not human. And the world into which he passes at death implies all that belongs to the conditions of a world, except natural matter.

"Our reception into that world will be cordial, our entrance angel-guarded. Recognition of those gone before is amply provided for, according to laws well understood by those who have knowledge of the relations of the two states of life, natural and spiritual. Judgment is the operation of the Divine truth upon the minds by which falsity is separated from truth and evil from good: first, in man subjectively and individually; second, collectively, good people from bad people; thus heaven and hell from each other."

Notes About Rev. John Edward Smith (by J. Lathrop Mack)

J. Lathrop Mack left brief typewritten notes as part of his genealogical work on the Smith family, parts of which also were included in Edward S. Smith's "Smith Genealogy". Mack's notes about John Edward Smith, which are a fragment of lengthier notes not located at this time, are as follows: [352]

His chief relaxation was mental and devoted to invention; a corn-husker model was stolen, altered and patented before he could perfect his claim for a patents; he also invented a Button-hole worker for a sewing-machine which he did not patent. His greatest effort was upon a peculiar type of motor.[353] In his later years he had the oversight of a "fine" farm located near Centreville, Md. which belonged to his wife, having been purchased with money she received from her mother's estate. This he called "Poverty Hill", the chief crops were wheat, tomatoes, peaches, which were > shipped from Price's Station, Md. This farm was later sold but during the World War [World War I]. He had the admiration [as] of a southern Gentleman for fine and fast horses, and in his earlier pastorates needed them. He was always delighted with hard arguments and was an accomplished debater. As a boy he had his own body-servants, but did not approve of the institution of slavery, and expressed his determination to free them when he became of age; being 13 when the Civil War started and 17 when it ended, he was denied the opportunity.[354]

Ironically, John's brother, James, supported the institution of slavery and went to fight for the Southern cause during the Civil War. After John married and started his family with Ella, they sat for a portrait around 1876 with their first-born, Lora. In the photograph is a black woman, identified years later as a nurse or servant[355]; regretfully, her name is not known today. It may not be notable that a black woman is in the photo, but it is clear that by her inclusion in the family portrait she was treated by John and Ella as a member of the family.[356]

Notes on John Edward Smith's Youth and Young Adulthood (by his son, Edward)

Edward Seville Smith included a number of thoughts and stories about his father's early life, which he included in the "Smith Genealogy" as follows: [357]

> As a boy and young man, as his father's place adjoined "Readbourne", he visited and played with the young folks of the Holliday family and spent some time with his sisters, Mary Townsend and Sallie Taylor.
> John E. Smith went to school at the Spaniards Neck School and Washington College[358], Chestertown, and studied banking at Bryant and Stratton's Business College[359] in Baltimore, before he entered Dickinson College. He visited the Bryans during vacations.
> His guardian and members of the family wanted him to study law, but as a boy he was inclined to the ministry. It is said that as a boy he would stand on the rail fence and preach to the waving corn field. He graduated from Carlysle [sic] Theological School in 1869.[360]
> There is a story told of him and one of his fellow students while at Carlysle: One of the Professors was Prof. Peck.[361] He and his wife raised some chickens, and John E. and his friend sometimes referred to the chickens as Prof. Peck and Mrs. Peck and the Peck family. Hearing of this, Prof. Peck invited Jack Smith and his friend to the Peck home for Sunday dinner. Chicken was served and Prof. Peck asked the young men if they would have a piece of Mr. Peck or Mrs. Peck for dinner. They were embarrassed, but the incident was laughed off as a good joke on the boys.

Ella Seville and John Edward Smith were married February 23, 1873, at Barrett's [Barratt's] Chapel[362], Delaware, and he received his first ministerial charge in the Wilmington Conference of the Methodist Church at Kenton, Delaware. He served as Regular Pastor at Lincoln, Milton, Delaware, and Greensboro, Maryland, Denton, Maryland, and at Mt. Salem Church, Wilmington, Delaware.

Jack Smith as a boy and young man was husky, strong, and athletic. He was a fast runner, and one of his stunts was the barrel stunt. He would stand on one rail of the railroad track, jump into one barrel, then the next, and out on the far rail of the railroad.

While at Dickenson [sic] College there was some hazing of the students. "If you want to haze someone" said the professor, "why not tackle young Smith. He will be ready for you."

Papa had an inventive mind and, when still in the Methodist ministry, invented a sewing machine attachment for sewing and making button-holes, which he had patented. Also, he invented a machine for harvesting corn which, from the nature of the work, was large; this he did not patent and I never knew whether it was really practical.[363]

Later he tried to develop power, the idea being based on the wheel within a wheel of the vision of Ezekiel, referred to in the Bible; but he was not successful in this.[364] I expect lack of

[362] Barratt's Chapel is north of Frederica, Kent Co., Delaware, on the east side of U.S. Route 113 north of the Murderkill River, just south of Barratt's Chapel Rd. and Skeeter Neck Rd. This historic chapel, a Heritage Landmark of the United Methodist Church, was founded by the Methodist Society; it takes its name from Phillip Barratt, land owner, merchant, farmer, and county sheriff, who in 1780 donated a plot of land for the church. The church is significant in Methodist history where on 14 Nov 1784 Thomas Coke and Francis Asbury met, and when "holy communion and baptism were offered for the first time by duly authorized Methodist clergy, Thomas Coke and Richard Whatcoat". Members of Methodist societies had emigrated from England to America, including lay preacher Francis Asbury; but the Revolutionary War devolved the Methodist presence in America and Asbury became the effective leader of American Methodists. After the end of the war, John Wesley charged Thomas Coke to go to America, find Asbury, and work on refounding Methodism in America; and they met for the first time at Barratt's Chapel. Phillip Barratt had died just two weeks before the historic day. Coke noted in his journal, 14 Nov 1784, "In this chapel, in the midst of a forest, I had a noble congregation . . . ." Although no longer in the midst of a forest, the area is still largely farmland. "The chapel exterior is much as it was in 1784, except for a gable window added on the west end and the conversion of two large first floor windows into doors. On the inside there have been several changes, but a metal star on the floor marks the historic meeting of Thomas Coke and Francis Asbury on November 14, 1784. Some of the original furnishings are in the museum." The present chapel interior dates from 1842 and is the interior as it was seen when John E. Smith married Ella Seville in 1873. [364] The vision of Ezekiel has been the inspiration for many attempts to explain the motions of beings and things as well as cyclical events; as such it has deep philosophical symbolism that has been taken up even by metaphysical and magical adherents. The vision is written as follows (Ezekiel 1: 4-25):

"4. ¶ And I looked, and, behold, a whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire infolding itself, and a brightness was about it, and out of the midst thereof as the colour of amber, out of the midst of the fire. 5.

My father, John Edward Smith (Jack Smith) was presented a cane by Captain Reuben Pennewill[366], as a token of esteem, in the Milton, Delaware, Methodist Episcopal Church, as he was leaving his pastorate there in the spring of the year 1877, he having been transferred as Pastor

Also out of the midst thereof came the likeness of four living creatures. And this was their appearance; they had the likeness of a man. 6. And every one had four faces, and every one had four wings. 7. And their feet were straight feet; and the sole of their feet was like the sole of a calf's foot: and they sparkled like the colour of burnished brass. 8. And they had the hands of a man under their wings on their four sides; and they four had their faces and their wings. 9. Their wings were joined one to another; they turned not when they went; they went every one straight forward. 10. As for the likeness of the faces, they four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion, on the right side: and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; they four also had the face of an eagle. 11. Thus were their faces: and their wings were stretched upward; two wings of every one were joined one to another, and two covered their bodies. 12. And they went every one straight forward: whither the spirit was to go, they went; and they turned not when they went. 13. S for the likeness of the living creatures, their appearance was like burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of lamps: it went up and down among the living creatures; and the fire was bright, and out of the fire went forth lightning. 14. And the living creatures ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning. 15. ¶ Now as I beheld the living creatures, behold one wheel upon the earth by the living creatures, with his four faces. 16. The appearance of the wheels and their work was like unto the colour of a beryl: and they four had one likeness: and their appearance and their work was as it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel. 17. When they went, they went upon their four sides: and they turned not when they went. 18. As for their wings, they were so high that they were dreadful; and their rings were full of eyes round about them four. 19. And when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them: and when the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up. 20. Whithersoever the spirit was to go, they went, thither was their spirit to go; and the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels. 21. When those went, these went; and when those stood, these stood; and when those were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up over against them: for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels. 22. And the likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creature was as the colour of the terrible crystal, stretched forth over their heads above. 23. And under the firmament were their wings straight, the one toward the other: every one had two, which covered on this side, and every one had two, which covered on that side, their bodies. 24. And when they went, I heard the noise of their wings, like the noise of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech, as the noise of an host: when they stood, they let down their wings. 25. And there was a voice from the firmament that was over their heads, when they stood, and had let down their wings." (>>Text from The Holman New Self-Pronouncing Sunday-School Teacher's Bible, A. J. The pastor was Rev. William Loring Worcester (1859-1912), who had been Assistant Pastor of the Philadelphia New Church Society, 1885-1894, and Pastor, 1894-1911. [365] Katharine S. Spamer recalled on several occasions that her grandfather worked at his desk and tried to create a "perpetual motion machine" using bits of aluminum. Scientifically, success was impossible, but it seems likely that his use of aluminum may have been inspired by newly available aluminum foils and other aluminum products in the first two decades of the twentieth century. The desk is presently in the possession of Earle Spamer.

to the church in Denton, Caroline County, Maryland. He always regarded it highly, and it was in his possession as long as he lived. It is now in my possession, 1962. [367]

Captain Pennewill was one of several ship carpenters from Milton who came to Philadelphia Navy Yard in 1875 and were engaged in the repair of the ship Constitution "Old Ironsides", and he told my father this cane was made by him from original timbers of that ship as he had been permitted to retain pieces removed in the making of such repairs. The cane is made of "Live Oak". "Old Ironsides" was in the Philadelphia Navy Yard in 1875, undergoing repairs, preparatory to being on exhibit here at the World Fair, at the centennial of 1876.[368]

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph A. Conwell were lifelong friends of my parents and, though they lived in Vineland, New Jersey, they often visited Milton, Delaware, and were originally from there.[369] In September, 1927, he wrote mother that they had just visited Milton and while there had called on Mr. Eli Lamb Collins, then in his 92[nd] year, and Mr. Collins told him that he and one or two other Miltonians were employed in the Philadelphia Navy Yard in the year 1875. They worked on the ship "Constitution" putting her in shape for the Centennial held in 1876, and that he and the others were permitted to take some of the wood home, and he made two or three canes out of his piece and showed Mr. Conwell one that he had made. Mr. Collins felt sure that the cane given to Papa was genuine. Mr. Collins was known as "Lamb" Collins and Pennewill's wife was Miss Lamb. [370]

Mr. Conwell, as I remember "Judge Conwell", wrote also that Rev. Wells W. Wilson had preached the Sunday evening while he was in Milton on his "Fifty Years in the Ministry", and [367] In the 1970s, I examined the cane when it was in the possession of Elouise (Smith) Montgomery, sister of Edward Smith, when she lived with her daughter, Helen Mummert (later McCarraher), in New Castle, Delaware.

[368] In 1871, the U.S.S. Constitution had been moved to the Philadelphia Navy Yard for critical repairs. It was intended to have the ship ready for exhibition during the 1876 national centennial, but "work delays prohibited this from happening–and in any event the restoration [was] incomplete and marred by poor workmanship". The Constitution is one of six historic frigates commissioned by the 3rd U.S. Congress, in effect creating the U.S. Navy; the Constitution was built in Boston in Edmund Hart's shipyard. Launched 21 Oct 1797, she first sailed 22 Jul 1798 under command of Capt. Samuel Nicholson and cruised to the West Indies. In 1805, President Thomas Jefferson sent the Constitution to the Mediterranean as the flagship of the third Mediterranean squadron, to force the Barbary pirates to desist their attacks against U.S. merchant shipping. Commodore Edward Preble mounted five attacks against Tripoli, and on 3 Jun 1805 the peace treaty was completed in the Captain's cabin of the Constitution; with a similar treaty signed with Tunis on 14 Aug. In the War of 1812, in an engagement with H.M.S. Guerriere on 19 Aug 1812, about 600 miles east of Nova Scotia, a British shot was witnessed bouncing off the side of the Constitution, inspiring her nickname, "Old Ironsides". After rescuing the surviving British crew, the Guerriere was sunk. The Constitution circumnavigated the world, 1844-1846 under Capt. John Percival. Today, still the oldest commissioned ship of the U.S. Navy, she is completely refurbished to her 1812 appearance, docked in Boston harbor. (>>Capt. Steven Maffeo, USNR, "USS Constitution Timeline", U.S. Navy historical website, http://www. ussconstitution. navy.mil/historyupdat.htm, accessed 20 Jul 2006.)

[369] At the time of the 1900 and 1910 U.S. censuses for Vineland, New Jersey, Joseph Conwell's occupation was listed as a druggist. In the 1920 and 1930 censuses his occupation is listed as "None"; at the age of about 64 in 1920 he may have by then retired. His wife's name was Lillie.

[370] These people are here identified as Ely Landon Collins and his wife, Comfort. His middle name is taken from the 1870 census in Philadelphia, where he is listed as "E. Landon Collins". Possibly, his nickname might have been "Lan" Collins, and his wife, "Miss Lan"; thus "Lamb" may be a misunderstanding in Edward S. Smith's narrative. Ely and Comfort Collins resided in Philadelphia at the time of the 1870 census; however, the census sheet is a "second enumeration", which omits all personal data such as occupation, and the Collinses were not tallied in the first enumeration. (The second enumeration was in response to allegations that the census had been undercounted; and in fact the Collinses seem not to have been included in the first enumeration..) The Collinses have not been located in the Philadelphia city directories of the time. At the time of the 1880 census, Ely and Comfort Collins resided in Milton, Sussex Co., Delaware; his occupation is there listed as "Ship Carpenter". Both appear in the 1920 census for Broadkiln Hundred, Sussex Co., but neither are listed in the 1930 census.

recalled that while Papa was in the ministry still in Milton, Rev. Wilson had preached but he spoke for about 15 or 20 minutes, and the next day Papa referred to it as a "bob tailed sermon".[371]

Joseph A. Conwell was a fine gentleman and was often spoken of with esteem and admiration by my parents.

Rev. Wilson had married a wealthy lady and, as the story went, his brothers in the ministry asked whether he would have loved Mrs. Wilson as much had she not been rich, to which he replied, "I never knew Mrs. Wilson when she was not rich."

There were nine children, five girls and four boys. Mother's Mother, Rebecca Wells Sevil, lived with us too, so there was always a full table. [372]

I [Edward S. Smith] was about five years of age when father was sent as a Lecturing Missionary to Easton, Maryland. He lectured in Easton, Preston, Denton, Potter's Landing [Williston], and Peach Blossom, and found followers and listeners in this area. He objected to the members of the family calling him "father" and preferred "Papa". For him there was only one father.

He hated people who mistreated animals, especially horses. At Mt. Salem[373], we were on the front porch when a man driving a horse and wagon drove past. He was beating the horse with a heavy whip and finally the horse stumbled and fell. So outraged was Papa that he ran across the street and gave the driver a good trashing with his fists and got the horse to his feet. The driver finally gathered himself together and, after resting the horse, drove off.[374]

When the family lived in Jacksonville, Florida, during Rev. Smith's missionary work there and in Savannah, Georgia, Edward Smith recounted: [375]

In 1894, Papa learned that Robert G. Ingersoll, the New York lawyer who claimed to be an infidel, was planning a trip south. He challenged him to debate in Savannah or Jacksonville on the subject of "Divinity of Christ". However, under date of "New York, Sept. 27, 1894" he received the following letter from Mr. Ingersoll:

"Rev'd J. E. Smith, My Dear Sir: During my southern tour, I have appointments for every evening, and consequently could not stop at Jacksonville or Savannah to debate anybody. Yours truly, R. G. Ingersoll". [376]

[371] I have not located any information regarding Rev. Wells W. Wilson.

[376] The location of this letter today is not known. Robert Green Ingersoll (1833-1899) was a well-known agnostic. He was a prominent attorney, serving as Attorney General for Illinois after the Civil War, although he never acceded to other public office. He held radical views on religion and other significant social subjects. A recent critical edition of his writings and speeches is What's God Got To Do With It?: Robert G. Ingersoll on Free Thought, Honest Talk, and the Separation of Church and State, edited by Tim Page (Hanover, New Hampshire, Steerforth Press, 2005). Some of the titles of his works (among numerous others) are "The Agnostic Christmas", "Should Infidels Send Their Children to Sunday School?", "Jesus Christ", and "Some Mistakes of Moses". From what we know of Rev. Smith, a debate between them would have been spirited.

Notes on Growing Up with Rev. John E. Smith
(by his son, Gilbert)

Gilbert Smith included a few observations about his father's work in the New Church, which Gilbert included in an incomplete autobiography:[377]

> Several wonderful visits I made with Father to Perry Hall, vividly recalled today by pictures of the mansion and its fire-place in Mr. Shepson [Swepson] Earle's "Chesapeake Bay Country."[378] This is a brick mansion of Georgian beauty and simplicity in Talbot County, home of Wm. Perry Esq. a man of wealth, brother-in law to Wm. Hindman, Member of Congress. But in my childhood we visited a wonderful woman, Mrs. Mary Hindman Perry Cox, and her four daughters, all of them accomplished, and in my eyes beautiful.[379]
> The hand-carved mantel, the fire-place beneath, with its brass andirons and fenders, the portraits above the mantel, the high ceiling, the quaint furniture, the woven rugs, all the charm of authentic colonial things, stick vividly in my memory. * * *
> Father had a special reason for vi[s]iting this place. He was a preacher, and these people, I suppose, were part of his scattered flock. For Mrs. Cox, as I had heard from my parents very often, without knowing what it meant, was a "New Church Woman." How that made her so different I did not know, except that it meant some spiritual kinship with us, who also were "New Church People." * * *
> I did not know what it meant to be "New Church People," at that early age. Still I realized that our family was ecclesiastically different from our neighbors, that we had no nice church building to go to on Sundays, but that my father preached sometimes at "Odd Fellows' Hall" in Easton to a very small group . . . .

> When we visited Perry Hall I remember my father had long and animated talks with Mrs. Cox. He was positive and eloquent in conversation, and she seemed a woman of great culture and wit. Apparently they had many problems to straighten out; and without understanding a word, I liked to hover near. There was something here that bordered on majesty. But somehow it seemed that the fate of the New Church hung in the balance.

Notes on Growing Up with Rev. John E. Smith
by his son*, Edward

Edward Smith concluded his "Smith Genealogy" with a lengthy recollection of childhood life, mostly as a discussion of his father, ending with some of his father's later-life events:[380]

> Speaking of bricks, brings to mind an incident when we lived in Easton, Maryland. Mr. Sherman, our neighbor who owned the house,[381] wanted to relay a small brick walk in our back yard, so he and Papa hit upon a plan to get the old walk up. They put some pennies under some of the brick and slyly raised some bricks and when the youngsters saw the pennies underneath the walk came up quickly, or at least a good portion of it.

> A year or so ago Laura and I spent an afternoon at Wayne [Pennsylvania], visiting our Cousins A. Cookman Bryan and his charming wife, Edna, in their lovely home on Wayne Avenue.[382] It is a large, white house, its wide front facing the street, with hedges and large flower beds, furnished in wonderful taste. Cookman got to talking about Papa, his mother's brother, when he was a growing boy. Cookman used to play with him and the other boys at Townsend, Delaware. He said Papa was athletic, strong, and a fast runner.
> It was at Townsend too that Papa's sister, Aunt Mollie Townsend, asked him to shoot a guinea-hen for her for dinner. He took the gun and went out to oblige her. When he came in he asked if she could use more than one bird, or maybe five or six. She said "Jack, how many have you shot, take a basket and get them in here quick". It seems that the birds were perched on a rail-fence and he took a bee-line along the fence and blazed away, killing most of the flock. He didn't live down that story.
> He enjoyed hunting rabbits and partridge and did quite a little [sic] of it when we lived in Easton. When we were living in Philadelphia (512 South 47th Street) he brought home a puppy on a trip from Maryland. The puppy was a Gilderslove Setter, with a double barrel or split nose, indicated excellent breeding. He grew to be a full size bird dog and a good hunter. He got too big for a house dog and so he could really be a hunter Papa took him back to the Eastern Shore. His name was "Shot". His pal, a small dog next door at the Atkinson's, "Teddy" and he one day got a whif[f] of a neighbor's roast that was set outside, one Sunday. The dogs were puffed and stiff an could hardly move and at first we did not know what was the trouble, but a neighbor said she had seen the dogs with her roast, too late, so did not disturb their feast. Good hearted neighbor! After several days and numerous walks, the dogs recovered, but you could not tempt them with roast beef for some time.
> Papa had some stories of his days in the Methodist ministry. This one about a "Sister" Jones. Methodists, you know, are all "brothers" and "sisters". Sister Jones was ill and one day asked her husband whether he would remarry, were she to die. He said he certainly hoped she would not die, but did not want to promise not to remarry. She said "All right, John, if you will not promise, I will not die". She didn't.
> While he was in the Methodist ministry one bright day a well dressed couple drove up to the Parsonage in a carriage drawn by a pair of fine horses, a really good looking rig, to arrange for Papa to perform their marriage ceremony. Arrangements were made and the date set; Mother of course would be a witness as it was to be at the Parsonage and, of course, Mother made a cake.[383] After the wedding all were happy and best wishes extended for a happy life for the young couple. The groom took out of his pocket a roll of bills and ruffled through them until he found a $20.00 bill, which he charmingly presented. Thanks for everything. The couple drove away but the bill remained. It was a counterfeit.

At another wedding the groom promised to give Papa a pair of young pigs, which was satisfactory, of course, so in due time Papa had a pig-sty built in anticipation. But the little pigs never came. You can always find all sorts of people, sometimes in the most unexpected places, for that particular variety.

It was while we lived at 33rd and Baring Streets[384], Philadelphia, that Mr. Hollis, a good friend of the family, a carpenter and cabinet maker of Preston, Md., made and sent to us a sturdy, double-seated garden swing. Two seats faced each other and wide enough for two grown people. It was placed in Baring Street side yard. We all enjoyed it, and I wondered why at times it seemed so deeply settled in the earth. The answer came unexpectedly one day when I was talking to a big good-natured Irishman, then a traffic officer at Penn Square and Juniper Streets[385], but had previously been on the Baring Street beat. He told me that he and one of his buddies, some times at night, sat in the swing. He said they had sometimes helped Gilbert up to the shed roof so he could get in, if he had forgotten his key. We had a good chat and a good laugh.

Speaking of seats and people, they used to say some people were so narrow minded they could sit five in a buggy. Remember the old Buggies.

As to traffic officers, it was Mayor Rudolph Blankenberg, Philadelphia, who first assigned policemen to the duty of regulating traffic in Philadelphia, and it created a strong protest form the force. The force that felt it was to enforce the peace felt it would be going soft with an assignment merely to regulate traffic. Steve Murphy was his director of police and within a short time adjusted to the idea. You know the traffic problems of today.

One Sunday we had an honored and distinguished guest in our home, 820 S. St. Bernard Street, a quiet and very likeable little Englishman, Sir Edwin Markham, author of "The Man with the Hoe" and other literary works.[386] We enjoyed this charming and genial guest. He had attended some event at the Church and we were delighted when he consented to come to our home for dinner and the evening.

[386] Edwin Markham (1852-1940), born Charles Edwin Anson Markham, was neither a knight nor even English, having been born in Oregon City, Oregon Territory. In 1872 he taught in California, and during the 1880s and 1890s established himself as a widely published and insightful poet. As a champion of the American working class, he was inspired by an 1862 illustration, L'homme à houe, by the French artist Jean-François Millet, which portrays a moving harvest scene of a farmer's fatigue and his broken spirit. Markham's poem, "The Man with the Hoe", was first published 15 Jan 1899 in the San Francisco Examiner. He referred to the man with the hoe as "a brother to the ox". He asked, pointedly, "Whose was the hand that slanted this brow? / Whose breath blew out the light within this brain?" The poem was reprinted and translated in thousands of newspapers, to instant acclaim and criticism. It was taken up in conversational circles as well as in pulpits and classrooms everywhere. Since then, it has become the subject of scholarly criticism, included in anthologies of poetry and American writing, and it has been the foundation for essays and poems inspired by The Man with the Hoe. Markham's first book of poems was published in 1899, The Man with the Hoe and Other Poems (Doubleday and McClure Co., New York), the first of several collections he published during his lifetime.

Mother's farm was in Queen Anne's County, between Centreville and Church Hill, but was not one of the main highways, and as a shipping station Papa usually used Price's Station. I never heard definitely, but believe that when Grandfather Sevil died, Mother and her brother, Uncle Abel Sevil, each received some inheritance with which this farm was purchased and Uncle Abel purchased his farm near Clayton, Delaware. We never lived on the place and there was usually a tenant farmer. It had a good water well which never "went dry", a most desirable thing for a farm. Some of the tenant farmers did well on it and, later, were able to own their own farms; others did not fare so well. I never could understand why they called it "Poverty Hill". I remember being there once with Papa. The farm had about 250 acres.

On this farm was a great many black walnut trees which, as years advanced, probably created quite an asset. In the early days, many families buried on the farm and a family by the name of Carter had their burial lot there. The farm at one time probably belonged to a family of that name.

One winter Papa learned that the tenant was cutting fire wood and selling it in Centreville. Tenants always had the right to cut wood from the Wood Lot, for their own use on the farm, but not for sale. He secured an attorney, had the tenant arrested, and the case came to jury trial. In spite of the evidence against him, a white man, had done has charged, the jury acquitted him. Papa's witnesses were colored and, in talking to one of the jurors, a cousin, he was told "Jack, you know juries do not listen to their evidence".

The people from "down home" came to Wilmington or Philadelphia to shop and do some visiting. Plenty of Philadelphia people gave a special meaning to the expression "down home" and you knew what they meant and they knew what they meant. A spot near to their hearts and yearnings. They would say when planning a trip to the city, that they were "going abroad".

On the railroad, the conductors were friendly, helpful, and courteous. One figgity [fidgety] lady told the conductor she wished to get off at Middletown. He said he would let her know when they got there and help her with her bundles. He called her station and went to her assistance. She was most excited and exclaimed "which way shall I go?" The conductor said, "Lady, it don't make a darn bit of difference, the train stops at both ends".

With our family growing up, each with friends, there was usually a good number of people there. They all loved Mother and to most she was affectionately "Mother Smith". Kinfolk and friends from the Eastern Shore often swelled the numbers. While living at 614 N. 43rd Street, 26 people came one summer day. Mother said to Aunt Etta (Marietta, her brother's wife[387]) "Come on Etta, let's go kill another chicken". In the back yard we had chickens in the old piano case. All were welcome and when they asked Mother how she slept so many, she said she put them to sleep on the floor and then stood them in the corners. Gilbert and his family would stop in on their way from Glenview [Illinois] to Bryn Athyn. Nora would say, "Don't worry, Mother Smith", as the children came in, "any little thing you have in the refrigerator will be fine".[388]

Papa had a little jingle that he would chant as we kids came down for breakfast and continued it, even when we were grown, especially if we were late in arriving. Others joined in, of course. The jingle: "Dangling, dangling, the old cow's tail is dangling, dangling down behind".[389] Mrs.

[388] The family lived at 614 N. 43rd St., Philadelphia, around 1900. The time when Gilbert Smith would have arrived with a large family would have been about twenty years later, when Rev. Smith lived at 820 South St. Bernard Street.

[389] As recounted (in song) by Katharine S. Spamer, the jingle began with four "dangling's", with a slowing cadence and a final emphasis on "be-hind".

Miller[390], our good neighbor on St. Bernard St., would hear it but could not make out the real words. One morning she asked Mother if it was one of our religious rites.

In 1896 Rev. John E. Smith (Jack Smith) moved from Jacksonville, where he had served in that city and Savannah, Georgia, with an annual visit to Chattanooga, Tennessee. From Philadelphia he visited Preston and Williston and Potter's Landing in Maryland[391], and Montgomery's Ferry, Duncannon, Lancaster, and Allentown, Pennsylvania, and Vineland, New Jersey. Several times a year he preached at the Masonic Home, Elizabethtown, Pa.[392] His ministry to the Eastern Shore was discontinued on Sunday, September 21, 1924.

The golden anniversary of their wedding came in 1923. Mother and Father were in good health and all helped to make this great event a happy and memorable one. Mabel and I took over the arrangements, some music was secured, and excellent photographs [393] of the happy couple were taken and distributed in the family. No formal invitations were issued, but all were notified through friends, family, and church associates. Rev. Mr. Harvey, Mr. Ezra Hyde Alden and Walter Rodman, Esquire[394], saw that people were informed and they responded whole-heartedly. The bride and groom were home at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia, a caterer, music behind the palms, and Miss Jeannette Wescott[395] poured.

Guests came in good numbers and the bride and groom responded with their happy and generous personalities. A collation was served and the affair ran well into the evening. I wish I had a list of the names of the lovely and loyal friends who graced this occasion. It remained in the memories of all. There were many thoughtful and lovely gifts, including gold coins, appropriate for the occasion. The bride and groom lived to enjoy their 57th wedding anniversary.

Summer Church Camps

Summer church-camp meetings were an important part of life with the religious faithful when the Smith children were growing up. It was an opportunity to engage families and congregations evangelically while in the cooler recreational climes of the country; and it was at these camps

[392] The Masonic Home in Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania, was established in 1910 as a retirement community and children's home. It is today the "Masonic Village at Elizabethtown", offering continuing care residences in apartments and cottages. Its grounds are serene with stately granite buildings, gardens, and ponds. An old postcard shows the "Grand Lodge from Formal Gardens", an inspiring sight reminiscent of a rambling English country estate or a first-class rural resort. It is maintained by the Free and Accepted Masons.

[394] Rev. Charles W. Harvey was minister of the Church of the New Jerusalem at 22nd and Chestnut Sts., Ezra Hyde Alden was the vice president of a railroad, and Walter Rodman was a lawyer; all acquaintances of Edward S. Smith, also a lawyer.

[395] Miss Wescott is otherwise not identified. There was a Jeannette E. Wescott, born about 1911, who at the time of the 1920 and 1930 U.S. censuses resided in Spring City, Chester Co., Pennsylvania; she could be Miss Wescott who poured drinks at the Golden Anniversary of John and Ella Smith, 27 Feb 1923. She might also be a relation of the Lovell family (about whom see the Lovell Family collateral genealogy, herein).

where many people, who could take vacations, took them. Rev. Smith's family participated in the camps affiliated with members of the General Convention of the New Church, about which Edward Smith recounted some of the experiences in the "Smith Genealogy: [396]

> A story is told of Papa while in the Methodist ministry. It was raining and in places the tent was leaking. In the singing service he announced the hymn, not thinking of course, some lines of which are: "even me, let some drippings fall on me", etc. This almost broke up the meeting. Some of these Camp Meetings were evangelical and emotions would rise to a high pitch of devotion and enthusiasm and shouting.

Some years after Rev. Smith had accepted the New Church as his calling, he returned to the Eastern Shore following several years in Florida and Georgia; this would have been in the mid-1890s, before or at about the time he moved to Philadelphia in 1895. At that time he held a summer church camp along with Rev. Thomas Allibone King, another New Church minister, from Baltimore. Edward Smith wrote of this camp: [397]

> The summer vacation of the Smiths and Kings on the Linchester River[398], near Preston, and the Choptank River and Wright's Landing:
> The "Minnie Wheeler",[399] one of the river boats plying the Choptank River between Cambridge and Denton, had as her captain Captain Perry[400], whom Papa met through his friend, William Potter Richardson of Tuckahoe Neck, Caroline County. Papa asked Captain Perry to recommend a spot for a summer camp, where there would be found good fishing and crab[b]ing. He recommended a site near Wright's Landing not far from Preston on the Linchester River

[398] The Linchester River was formerly known as Hunting Creek. Its name was changed by act of the General Assembly of Maryland, approved 18 Feb 1890. (>>"An Act to change the name of Hunting creek, a navigable stream of water dividing a part of the counties of Caroline and Dorchester, to that of Linchester river." General Assembly of Maryland, Session Laws, Vol. 396, p. 35.)

[399] The Minnie Wheeler was a steamer launched in Baltimore in 1881. She was 260 tons, 124 ft long, 24-ft beam, and 8-ft draft. She carried 42 first-class passengers and 54 deck passengers (even in the weather), with separate men's and women's cabins fore and aft of the salon, respectively, and a separate cabin aft of the main deck for non-white passengers. The cargo hold could carry 5500 bushels of grain. She was named for Capt. Caleb Clark Wheeler of the Wheeler Transportation Line, headquartered in a granary on Hillsboro Wharf, Hillsboro, Maryland, and serving the lower Choptank and Tuckahoe Rivers. The Wheeler Transportation Line also provided service to Baltimore; the fare between Hillsboro and Baltimore was 50 cents, with staterooms and meals each being an additional 50 cents. Fare for deck space on short journeys on the rivers was 30 cents. Wheeler's was the only steamboat service then based on the Eastern Shore. When Capt. Wheeler died intestate in 1901, the Minnie Wheeler and two other vessels were sold to the Baltimore, Chesapeake and Atlantic Railway Co., and thereafter she carried only freight. In 1916 she was sold to the Bethlehem Steel Co., Baltimore, and used as workers' quarters. She was scrapped soon after World War I. (>>Ralph E. Eshelman and Carl W. Scheffel, Jr., Maryland's Upper Choptank River and Tuckahoe River Cultural Resource Inventory (April 1999); "Steamboats and Their Captains", from Preston News and Farmer, 24 Sep 1942, in "Choptank and Tuckahoe RiverGuide", website http:// www.Riverheritage.org/Riverguide/; accessed 21-24 Jul 2006.)

[400] Captain William H. Perry joined the Wheeler Line in 1881; after 1896 he commanded the steamer Easton until the boats were sold; then he worked for the B.C. & A. Railway. (Source as for previous note.)

The Minnie Wheeler

(sometimes called Hunting Creek).[401] Linchester River is a tributary of the Choptank River and empties into that river near Wright's Landing.

Through friends in Preston, Papa made arrangements with a farmer whose land was on the Linchester River to use the site selected for a summer cottage. It was a joint project by Papa and Rev. King of Baltimore, as I remember the name was John Otis King; he and his family were also Swedenborgian.[402] The farmer agreed to allow the land to be used for this purpose and to allow access thereto, in return for the lumber used in the construction of the cottage. The cottage was built along the lines of the cottages used for Camp meetings in the area. It had to be good sized because both the Kings and Smiths had growing children. It was rectangular, with side walls about five feet high. The roof was a peak high enough for a second floor room and the wings extended to take care of bunks on the first floor off the space for adequate living quarters and the dining table, made of boards and extending from the front to the back of the cottage. A lean-to was at the back for cooking, in which was a kerosine [kerosene] stove. At some distance from the back was also a tripod on which hung an iron kettle. It was comfortable and accommodated all, but it was not painted and had no special water-proofing on the roof—when it leaked we just rubbed the knots with soft yellow soap.

There was a row boat of which we had use. All of the King family came and the Smith family too, except Grandmother and my sister Lora. The idea did not appeal to Lora, and Grandmother stayed in Easton with her. All seemed to enjoy the summer. Quinine was doled out regularly because of the nearness of the water and marshes across the river. Roberta did not enjoy the quinine.

After a stormy day a single masted sail boat, no sails, drifted past our camp and we tied her up to our little landing. There was a fence to the edge of the water and extending a little into the river, so we had a little landing. The sail boat was great fun until the owner recovered it.

Suitable table scraps were dumped in at the landing, so soon we had a good supply of crabs. White and yellow perch were caught, and one of the regular fishermen gave me a couple of fine Pike fish.

Papa and Rev. King carried drinking and cooking water across the field from the farm house in large buckets. For kerosine [sic] they would row to the wharf on the Choptank. Mr. King and Gilbert went one day when the Choptank was quite rough, and Gilbert remarked that is "looked as if they would soon be in the Heavenly Kingdom". In relating this, Mr. King said it looked as if they would.

The Preston people, Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Whitby, Colonel Ed Douglass and his wife and daughter, Mattie, and others came down on Saturday or Sunday and would bring friend[s] chicken and an abundance of food. As summer wore on Mother found along the river bank quantities of wild plums and grapes, which we picked with the assistance of the boat.

Vacation time was ending and we were planning to return to Easton when word came that a fire had damaged the basement of the school and that it would not open on time, so we stayed on. Prof. Murdaugh had discovered the first before it made much headway. I heard that later a Doctor Lannon has since built his waterfront cottage on the site of the Smith-King summer cottage.

[401] Hunting Creek is the former name of the Linchester River. It was renamed by act of the Maryland General Assembly in 1890.

[402] This is certainly Rev. Dr. Thomas Allibone King (1856-1927), who had a son, Otis Hinkley King (1887-1941). The son was named for the Baltimore lawyer, Edward Otis Hinkley, who (as noted earlier in the present sketch) helped introduce Rev. J. E. Smith to the doctrines of the New Church. Rev. King was pastor of the New Jerusalem Church in Baltimore. Rev. King's sister-in-law, Francis Allethia Thomas, was the wife of Adolph Spamer (1861-1939); Adolph was a successful legal clerk in the Baltimore law firm of Hinkley, Spamer and Hisky (where his cousin, Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer, was a partner) [see Part I, Spamer Family].

Camp Meetings and Camp Meeting Grounds were quite an institution in those days. They were usually built in pleasant groves and people built cottages, some quite convenient and substantial, and when the summer work on the farms slacked off, religious services were held. The cottages were arranged in orderly rows and streets laid out, and a large tent was raised for the services and activities. The camps were an important part of the religious and social life of the community.

Notes on Some of the Churches Where Rev. John E. Smith Was a Pastor

An obituary notice of John Edward Smith (see above) seems to indicate that Smith brought the Williston and Preston congregations over from Methodism to the Swedenborgian faith earlier than some of the dates that are noted below. The earlier dates are not long after Smith left the M.E. church for the New Church. Indeed, it seems that there are two periods during which Smith ministered to the scattered congregations of Caroline and Talbot Counties of Maryland in particular. The first period was during his circuit ministries of that area, during which time he frequented several churches and their congregations. After he returned from his ministries in Florida and Georgia, and finally settled in Philadelphia, he continued his ministries on the Eastern Shore, commuting to his Delmarva charges. Interestingly, he seems not to have had a congregation in Philadelphia, although, as noted elsewhere in this sketch, he provided occasional ministries and inspirational talks in the greater Philadelphia area.

Ewell's St. Paul Methodist Church. When Rev. Smith began his ministering after graduating from the theological school at Dickinson College, he was assigned to the Smyrna circuit in Delaware in 1871-1873. Family information indicates that he preached at the Ewell's St. Paul Methodist Episcopal Church in Clayton, Delaware, which then was on the north side of Main Street east of the railroad. It is not clear exactly when he and his new wife (February 1873), Ella, first lodged in a house on Main St. immediately east of the train station. The church building was later moved to Clayton Ave. at West St., at which location it has since been added to. Today it is known as Ewell's St. Paul United Methodist Church, although it is not clear what name it had at the time that Rev. Smith was a preacher on the Smyrna circuit.

Mt. Salem Methodist Episcopal Church. The Mount Salem Methodist Episcopal Church is in the Mt. Salem section of Wilmington, Delaware. Here Rev. John Edward Smith had his only fixed seat as a pastor. He was the 20th minister at this church, which originally opened in 1850. The edifice that stands today is the third church on the site; it is the same edifice in which Rev. Smith ministered to his congregation.[403] The church is situated on a property against the southwest side of Rockford Park. The picturesque stone Rockford Tower oversees the park above Brandywine Creek. Today the church is known as the Mt. Salem United Methodist Church. [404]

[403] The first church was dedicated 23 Apr 1848 (note that dedication dates are cornerstone dates). A second church was dedicated 2 Nov 1878 but was destroyed by fire 2 Feb 1879. The third church was dedicated 13 Jul 1879.

[404] General information from a United Methodist Church website, http://www.gbgm-umc.org/mtsalem/history. html (accessed 20 Jul 2004). Rockford Tower was built in 1899-1901 on the highest point in Wilmington, and reconstructed in 1981; it hides a 500,000-gallon city water tower within, which is still in use, and is capped by an observation deck ("Rockford Tower", Wilmington State Parks brochure).

In 1883–1884, Rev. J. E. Smith served in his only fixed-pulpit ministry, here in the Mount Salem Methodist Episcopal Church, at West 19th St. and Mount Salem Lane, in the Mount Salem section of Wilmington, Delaware. It was during this time that Rev. Smith received his calling to the Church of the New Jerusalem. (Photo in 2004.)

This detail from an 1874 bird's-eye perspective of Wilmington shows the Mount Salem section as it was then. The church and its growing neighborhood would shortly be built in the wooded spaces approaching the top of the hill. Today this is Rockford Park, a public area at the highest point in Wilmington.

The Smiths resided in this house at 1701 Mount Salem Lane (as seen in 2004), a block from the church. It was here that their son, Earle Covington Smith, was born in February 1885, at just about the time that Rev. Smith left the Methodist ministry.

Peachblossom Meeting House. The Peachblossom Meeting House in Easton, Talbot Co., Maryland, is a historic structure with architectural merit for its hexagonal shape. It is located on the east side of U.S. Route 50 south of Easton, just south of Schwaninger Rd. and north of Peachblossom Creek. It was built in 1881 to serve as a multi-denominational chapel, for Swedenborgian, Lutheran, Methodist, and Brethren use, sharing the building every fourth Sunday. A Swedenborgian newsletter around 1977 provides a historical sketch about Peachblossom and Rev. John E. Smith, which also illuminates some of Smith's activities in the Easton area: [405]

> [In 1881] In Easton on the "Eastern Shore" of Maryland, a small six-sided church was being built just south of town. Four denominations joined together in the effort [to build the meeting house]—Methodist, Reformed Lutheran, Church of the Brethren, and Swedenborgian. The first mention in the Convention Journal of the group of fourteen New Church people was the following year:
> > "Mission work has been performed at Easton, Talbot County, Md. by Rev. Messrs. Parmelee, Roeder, and King . . . . Easton is a new point, and much interest has been recently awakened there in the doctrines, and a New Church organization there is likely to follow very soon."
> Gradually a missionary interest developed, financed by quarterly collections in existing Societies within the Association. Except for a single year, the Society was never to be larger than its original fourteen members, but it became a stepping off point for missionary work on the Eastern Shore.
> By 1885 a main figure had come on the scene, the New Church minister, Rev. John E. Smith. "Jack," as he was called by most, was familiar with the area as a result of a previous ministry in the Methodist-Episcopal Conference. Within a year, Rev. Smith was "the recognized missionary of the Association," with Wilmington as his base. The Association sought financial help from Convention, mentioning in an 1886 report "a remarkable attendance of members from other congregations." The importance of this "attendance" should in all fairness be downplayed since Peachblossom'' Sunday services were by a different denomination each week. Anyone wanting to attend services weekly was exposed to all four groups.
> By 1888 a missionary fervor had caught on. Rev. Jack Smith had relocated a dozen miles away from Easton to lead the Preston Society, which had just been formed, and plans were made to ordain an Easton lay leader, Mr. McKintosh, as Easton's new minister. The Association's report to the General Convention for 1888 reads in part
> > "Continued activity in the missionary field during the past year, has been attended with encouraging results, the aroused the Association to a conviction that its most important use is to sustain the voice of the missionary. Over one thousand dollars has been expended on their work, and more territory visited than ever before; one new society has been organized and the beginnings of several others made. There is a deeper sense of the responsibilities resting upon us as harbingers of the New Dispensation."

[405] "Peachblossom Meeting House", Mid-Atlantic Association Newsletter (Mid-Atlantic Association of Swedenborgian Churches, Washington, D.C., no date), pp. 11-14 [ca. 1977, date determined from notice on p. 3 regarding a record American church attendance in 1976].

By 1890 the Preston Society had raised a church, and the Rev. Smith traveled out from there great distances, preaching regularly in a number of Eastern Shore cities and towns. Why the Easton Society did not grow, while the Preston Society was doubling and (at one point) tripling in size, is not certain. The answer may lie partially with the comparative "preaching skills" of Smith and McKintosh. Unlike McKintosh, Smith was a well-traveled man, recognized as an orator of some degree. In 1901 the Rev. Smith participated in what was described as a "public discussion of the difference between the doctrines of the New Church and those of another religious body, in the large auditorium near the fair grounds."[406] Public debates in those days were popular spectator sports.

Smith left the Preston area frequently on missionary travels not only on the Eastern Shore but deep into Southwestern Virginia as well. He also left the area for a time to serve the Pennsylvania Association. The Easton Society ceased to be listed in convention journals after 1923. Presuming it had dissolved by that time, perhaps one of the causes of its demise was too much success elsewhere. In 1917 Smith was probably handicapped by the death of McKintosh the year before, and the necessity of ministering to three local societies (nearby Williston Society was formed in 1915) with a total number of members reaching 87.

It might be assumed that this load was a heavy one for the minister who began there thirty-five years earlier. In 1925 he was officially to retire from the missionary ministry "on account of advancing years." He was partially active as a minister, however, until his death five years later. Under the guidance of the five subsequent Eastern Shore ministers, the New Church in the area was to have its ups and downs but apparently the Easton Society was never reestablished.

The building itself had fallen into ruin by the middle of the twentieth century, when it became necessary to move it several yards to make way for a highway construction project. The construction people made attempts to find any of the groups that might have an interest in the old church but were successful only in reaching the Church of the Brethren, which had flourished on the Eastern Shore and had groups nearby. After deliberation about the financial burdens and effort that would be involved in moving and restoring the old church, the Church of the Brethren rose to the occasion and took on the job. The building is now the sole property of the Church of the Brethren, and its restoration is nearly completion. Much of the work is being done by Church of the Brethren members who are in the construction industry. The church, once restored, will seldom be used for any services, since the Brethren have a church building and group nearby. The restored church is called "Peachblossom Meeting House," so as not to confuse it with a still existing "Peachblossom Congregation" in the area.

[406] That Rev. J. E. Smith was an accomplished debater is noted numerous times in publications and by family tradition. Ophia D. Smith [no known relation] took note in her work on Daniel Lammot, Jr., founder of the New Jerusalem Church of Delaware: "The Wilmington society was strong enough in 1886 to contribute largely to the support of the Reverend John E. Smith, the official missionary for the Maryland New Church Association. Smith went about challenging the clergy of other sects to debate their philosophical and ecclesiastical positions, arousing interest wherever he went. He preached to large congregations in Denton, Greensborough, Preston, and Easton, Maryland, and in Wyoming, Delaware" (Ophia D. Smith, "Daniel Lammot and His Role in the New Church in Delaware", Delaware History, Vol. 8, No. 4 (Sep 1959), p. 340); O. D. Smith cited "New-Church Messenger . . . Its walls are covered with weatherboard and the corner boards extend to a fascia. On each of the sides is a window, except the west side, which has an entrance with double doors. The windows have 6/6 sash and the window head is similar to a camber arch. Above a very plain box cornice, the corrugated tin roof rises to a point. A small brick chimney rises on the north wall.

Williston. The Williston church is the little church at 8270 Maryland Route 16, north of the turn-off to Williston, Caroline Co., Maryland. It was built in 1874 as the "Independent Congregational Church of Williston" and was acquired by the Methodist Episcopal church in 1891. Around 1912 Rev. John Edward Smith brought its congregation into the Swedenborgian faith, but sometime after his departure it returned to the M.E. denomination. A brief sketch of the church indicates: [408] Also see Additions & Corrections

> The church serves as a time capsule for late Nineteenth Century worship. The original bible, donated by one James L. Campbell in 1874, still stands on the pulpit. The pews are original, and the original hymnals also remain. The only concessions to modernity are an oil-fired stove (space heater) on the far side, and some electric lights.

The sketch further indicated that the "last full-time minister was a Rev. Nugent in the 1960s, but services continued into the 1980's with a visiting pastor from the Methodist church in nearby Denton.

A 1920 history of Caroline County notes:

> The Williston church, about a mile north of the village, was built about forty years ago largely through the efforts of Elias W. Williamson, a well known county man of thirty years ago, who resided near this place. After being furnished with ministers from the Methodist Episcopal Conference for many years, it became several years ago, under the active control of the Swedenborgian Church, Rev. J. E. Smith, of Philadelphia, being the present pastor.[409]

> Along Route 16 north of Williston stands a small barn red board and batten Gothic Revival Chapel. It appears to have been built around the 1870's. Each of its windows, and the double entrance door on the vestibule, have lancet arches. Its walls have the same type of siding as St. Paul's Chapel, Hillsboro, which is a more academic Gothic Revival structure. The Williston Church shows signs of the stick style in general proportion and to some extent, the belfry on the roof.
> The Williston Church shows the simple proportions and vertical amphasis [sic] found in the rural Gothic Revival style and with its board and batten construction, it is one of the better Caroline County examples of this building period.
> The Williston Church is located on the west side of Maryland route 16, approximately one-half mile north of Williston, Caroline County. The church was built in the Gothic Revival style, probably during the third quarter of the nineteenth century.
> The structure is board and batten painted red on a brick foundation. The main facade (south elevation) has a one bay, one story entrance porch with a gable roof. The entrance porch has double doors and a lancet-shaped transom. The east and west elevations both have three bays containing narrow lancet windows with heavy cross-shaped mullions. On the north gable is a small three sided projection to light the sanctuary. At the south end of the steep gable roof is a small board and batten gable roof belfry.

The church is set back from and aligned parallel to the road; its entrance faces southward. When Earle Spamer and Jane Anderson visited the church in 2003, some roofing work was being done, which was completed by the time they visited again in the company of Helen (Montgomery) McCarraher, in 2004. A two-compartment outhouse still remained near the woods beyond the side of the church farthest from the road, in ruinous condition surrounded by thickets of thorns and impressive spider webs.

Preston. The 23 November 1912 issue of the Denton Journal (Maryland) announced the next day's sermons at Preston: "Rev. J. E. Smith's subject tomorrow morning at Preston will be 'Divine Thanksgiving'; in the evening, 'Cases Illustrative of Divine Providence.'"[411]

Parenthetically, it should be noted that none of Rev. Smith's sermons survive. Having been an adept public speaker, he probably worked only from notes. Katharine S. Spamer, recalling her grandfather, said that he would work on his sermons at his desk, surrounded by an "impenetrable" cloud of cigar smoke; this would have been at the 820 South St. Bernard Street address, in Philadelphia, when she knew him

Between about 1885 and 1892, Rev. John Edward Smith and his family lived in the left side of a duplex home at 520 Goldsborough St., in Easton, and here on 3 May 1891 the Smiths' last child, Elouise, was born. (The street name is sometimes spelled Goldsboro.)

The house was architecturally described for the Maryland Historical Trust, which conducts a statewide Historic Sites Survey by an Act of the Maryland Legislature. These surveys are "prepared for information and record purposes only and do not constitute any infringement of individual property rights". A survey for 520 Goldsborough St., site T-413 was completed 28 September 1976.[412] The property is called the Parris House in this report.

A duplex, the Parris House makes a unique contribution to the wide range of nineteenth century architecture remaining in Easton. It is the oldest of the Italianate buildings in the town and a minor statement of one of the signal ideas of the Italianate period—volumetric expression. The overstated brackets are also characteristic of this period. Although bracketed cornices are not uncommon in the town, in this building their potential is best realized.

This property also was a part of Easton's first "development", Caldwell's Addition. Samuel Sherman bought the lot in 1883 and it remained in his family until it was sold in 1932 by Laura E. Tull, one of his heirs, to George M. and Letitia Parris for $5000.00.

[Physical Description]

This double house stands on the south side of Goldsborough Street, east of the railroad tracks, in a neighborhood of small two-story frame dwelling[s] of the nineteenth century.

The frame building is notable for its Italianate detailing. Three stories in height, its third floor is enclosed in a shingled mansard roof.

The building is composed of interpenetrating masses, clearly seen, and representing the interior rooms. The main mass, or block, of the house is four bays wide and three bays deep, a regular, almost cuboid form. Small dormers with curvilinear eaves are found in each bay. Its widely overhanging cornice is supported by ornamental console-type brackets. The frieze is of narrow vertical, beaded boarding. Windows with one over one sashes and louvered shutters are found in each bay on the first and second floors.

Protruding from the front central bays of the structure is another building mass. This is larger in scale than the main block and tall—a full three stories in height. It is more solid in appearance and covered with a flat roof which projects even farther than that on the main portion. Its console brackets are correspondingly larger and the vertical-boarded frieze deeper.

The Smith family residence at 520 Goldsborough St., Easton, Maryland

The Smiths moved to Easton probably in 1885. Rev. Smith performed missionary work for the Church of the New Jerusalem (New Church) on the Eastern Shore until about 1892. Here at the house in Easton, the Smiths' last child, Elouise, was born in 1889.

> Projecting from the front of this second block are two bay windows which are rectangular on the second floor and half hexagons below. Windows with one over one sashes are used in each face, doubled in the second floor front. Flat roofed brackets and frieze are similar but smaller than those used on the building roof.
> In the corners of the building, between the projecting bay windows and the main house block is an entrance porch, one bay wide and two deep. The front door is, of course, in each front corner of the main house block, opposite the steps leading to the porch. Porch detailing includes turned posts, a flat roof with molded fascia and a plain balustrade. There is a roof apron of ma[n]y little turned rods suspended vertically.
> The building is covered by weather-boarding, about five inches wide, painted white. The shutters are black.
> This fascinating structure resembles a three-dimensional puzzle of interlocking parts, designed with disciplined use of volumetric elements, Italianate influences is [sic] seen in its verticatity [sic], its plasticity and bracketed cornices.
> The double house is only half occupied and in need of repairs.

When the site was visited in March 2004, it seemed to be in reasonable repair and occupied. When revisited in June 2007, some homes in the neighborhood were undergoing revitalization and the duplex at 520 Goldsborough Street was vacant and seemingly under repair.

Ella (Seville) Smith (1873–1931)
(wife of Rev. John Edward Smith)

Ella Seville was born on her parents' farm between Smyrna and Kenton, Delaware. Her paternal lineage is in the Sevil line; she used "Seville" as the spelling of her surname, which also was used in the given names of others in the family, later. Her maternal lineage is in the Wells line. (See the Sevil and Wells Families collateral genealogy, below.)

The 1870 U.S. census indexes two young women named "Ella Sevil" in Millersville, Lancaster Co., Pennsylvania. At this time, Ella Seville was an art student in the Pennsylvania State Normal School at Millersville; this school later became Millersville University.[413] A 16-year-old "Ella Sevil" listed in that census is our Ella. (The second young woman—also indexed as "Ella Sevil", aged 25—is upon examination of the census sheet seen to be actually written, "Ella Smith", a coincidental name only, not related to family.)

Regarding the 1870 census record for student "Ella Sevil", the students' head of household is indexed as "Hattie McPherson". However, on examination of the census sheet the name is seen to be, correctly, [413] None of the present buildings on the Millersville University campus date from the time when Ella Seville was a student here. The original Normal School building stood at the southwest corner of North George and West Frederick Sts., Millersville. It was an imposing structure. An 1894 "bird's-eye-view" engraving of Millersville, seen on the American Memory website at the Library of Congress, shows the original Normal School building (>>Millersville, Lancaster County, Pennsylvania 1894, drawn by T. M. Fowler, T. M. Fowler and James B. Boyer, Morrisville, Pennsylvania, Library of Congress digital ID http://hdl.loc.gov/loc.gmd/g3824m.pm008031, accessed 19 Feb 2007).

50th Anniversary

(Spamer 1000)

For their 50th wedding anniversary, in 1923, John and Ella Smith's children arranged for their parents to go to New York City to sit for portraits by the celebrated and eccentric photographer and artist, Emil Brunel (inset).

Hattie E. McPherran; her occupation is given there as "painting teacher". Hattie McPherran was an art instructor who taught waxwork and painting at the State Normal School, 1868-1885.[414]

Of note in the Millersville Normal School alumni list is one Amanda T. Seville, Class of 1871, died 1891.[415] She is not certainly a member of the family, although Ella Seville was a half niece of an Amanda Sevil (1840-1882), a daughter of Abel and Elizabeth Sevil who had emigrated from New Jersey to Delaware.

Edward Seville Smith included notes about his mother, Ella, in the "Smith Genealogy", as follows:

> Our mother graduated from Millersville Normal School of Pennsylvania[416] and taught school in or near Kenton, Delaware. While still at normal school, the story goes, her friends at home wrote her about a young minister in town and she wrote, "They should have him until she came home". Later she married the young minister, John Edward Smith, often affectionately called "Jack Smith" by many folks for many years on the Eastern Shore.[417]

Ella Seville, with her brother, Abel Sevil (1850-1926), probably inherited a share in a farm of about 250 acres between Centreville and Church Hill, Maryland, referred to as "Poverty Hill", and on which property were graves of Carter who probably were earlier owners. Edward Smith recalled in the "Smith Genealogy": [418]

> Mother's farm was in Queen Anne's County, between Centreville and Church Hill, but was not one of the main highways, and as a shipping station Papa usually used Price's Station. I never heard definitely, but believe that when Grandfather Sevil[419] died, Mother and her brother, Uncle Abel Sevil, each received some inheritance with which this farm was purchased and Uncle Abel purchased his farm near Clayton, Delaware. We never lived on the place and there was usually a tenant farmer.

Ella Seville Smith is buried in lot 715, River Section, West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Bala Cynwyd, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

Ella Seville Smith's Cookbook [selections]

"Souvenir" copies of parts of a cookbook kept by Ella Seville Smith were made around 1989 and distributed amongst family members. It contains recipes from her family and from other people as well as (presumably) her own. Most of the recipes assume that the cook has a knowledge of how things are cooked; there are no temperatures, times, or other "how-to" assists that we today take for granted in recipes. The cookbook adds a few oddities for everyday work, like two recipes for homemade liniment — one of them uses spirits of turpentine and cayenne pepper, the other uses "1½ drams sugar of lead"! — homemade detergent and soap, and a number of recipes copied from Popular Mechanics, such as "A Durable Floor Paint", "Cement for closing breaks in Iron pipe", and "Simple Liquid Glue".

Following are a couple of selected, edible recipes from Ella's cookbook (although I am not sure how Mrs. Worcester's coffee would be received today):

Grandmother's and Mother's doughnuts[420]

1 qt. milk, 2¼ lbs gran. sugar, 3 eggs, ½ lb. butter and lard mixed, 1 large cup yeast or 2 yeast cakes in large cup water. Beat together sugar, eggs, shortening. Heat milk boiling hot and pour over the sugar, eggs and shortening. When cool add yeast and flour to make a stiff batter. Put in a warm place and when light add flour to make a soft dough. If the dough is set in a cool place they will be easier to roll and cut, and cover with a cloth. Cut all before beginning to fry.

Jackson Jumbles
Mother [421]

3 cups sugar 2 eggs
1 cup butter 1 teasp soda in
5 cups flour 1 cup sour cream
Flavor with lemon & bake in quick oven.

Pocket Rolls
Grandma Seville [422]

3 qts flour — 2 eggs — 2 teasp sugar — 1 cup yeast — 1 teasp lard — make up with milk. Bake ½ hr.

[420] Regarding this doughnut recipe, Edward S. Smith noted that "we had them on holidays from Thanksgiving until Papa's birthday, March 17th" ("Smith Genealogy", pp. 67-68).

Coffee
Mrs. Worcester [423]

2 table spoons ground coffee to 1 cup cold water. Put in coffee pot. Break an egg shell and all into it & mix thoroughly. Barely cover with cold water—let stand 15 minutes. Add rest of cold water and stir. Put on stove and let slowly come to boil—Let boil up thoroughly once. Move to side of stove & add ¼ cup ice water to settle.

210. Mary Mabel Smith (1875–1954)
"Mabel", "May" [424]

She never married. She was educated at Easton High School, Easton, Maryland. In working life she was a public school teacher in Jacksonville, Florida, and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The 1935/1936 Philadelphia city directory lists her occupation as a teacher. She always lived with her parents, and after their deaths she remained for a while at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia.

From about 1917, she had raised her niece, Elisabeth C. Smith, after the early death of Elisabeth's mother. Elisabeth's father, Earle C. Smith, was more often away than at home, first while in the Army during World War I, and then as an engineer on numerous projects in the West from the 1920s to 1940s. Mabel moved to San Antonio, Texas, when her niece was stationed there in the Army; this was during the period 24 November 1946–29 June 1948, according to a memorandum book of Earle C. Smith. A photo in an album assembled by Elisabeth Smith, for the 1944-1947 period, shows her Aunt Mabel standing outside their home at 119 Lowell St., San Antonio. When Elisabeth was transferred to a duty station in Colorado, Mabel returned to Philadelphia, where she resided at 1408 S. 51st St. This address is noted in Earle Smith's address book, and it is crossed out, thus presumably it was her final address.

Upon her death, Mabel Smith's remains were cremated, and the ashes were strewn in an allocated area of West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Bala Cynwyd, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.[425]

Edward Seville Smith's notes and recollections about his sister, Mabel, appear in the "Smith Genealogy" as follows: [426]

> In Wilmington she attended the Miss Harkness Private School[427] and when we moved to Easton, Maryland, she graduated from the Easton High School and was awarded a $10.00 prize for her Essay. At Jacksonville, Florida, she took post-graduate work at Duval County High School. She was interested in kindergarten teaching and took a course of training in this line of education. She taught kindergarten in the public schools in Jacksonville and in Philadelphia, with an interval of settlement work under the Charity Organization of Philadelphia.[428] She taught a year at Urbana University, Urbana, Ohio, and for a while in the Camden County public schools.

The Whitners[429], Jacksonville friends, moved to Cuba and she enjoyed a trip and visit with them in Havana. At the time the Court Room in Moro Castle [sic] was being remodeled, and she brought me a cane made from the Bar of the Court Room.[430] Mabel and Miss Margaret Worcester[431] were friends and together they had a trip to England, Scotland, and Ireland where she kissed the "Blarney Stone". She brought me a handsome pipe made from the Bog Oak.

She enjoyed some summers at Intervale, Massachusetts [sic], with the Worcesters[432], and sometimes she and Betty Smith would go to Fryberg [sic] Camp.[433] When Elizabeth [Elisabeth] Drummond, Earle's [434] wife, died shortly after Betty was born, Mabel took over the care and raising of the young girl. Earle was in the service overseas and was glad to have Mabel take this responsibility.[435] While our parents were living, Mabel lived at home and was always a comfort and assistance at home—a thoughtful daughter and sister.

* * * * *

Throughout her life, Mabel was interested in her church and its interests and attended at 22nd and Chestnut Streets.[436] At her specific direction, the body was cremated and the ashes strewn over ground allotted for the use at West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Philadelphia.[437]

[428] The "Charity Organization Society" was a national group founded in 1876, a volunteer organization in service to the needy; specifically, "to suppress begging, on the one hand, and on the other to help the poor of the city efficiently." Their motto was, "Not Alms, But a Friend". They promoted the Americanization of immigrants and the development of self-reliance skills in community environments. The organization divided its work by the wards of the city, with those having proportionately fewer poor people joined together. Each ward had a governing board and a corps of visitors. [430] El Morro is the Spanish-period fort on one side of Havana harbor. Mabel Smith's gift to her brother was appropriately considered, Edward S. Smith being an attorney.

[431] Margaret Worcester (b. 1901) was the only child of Rev. William Loring and Ethel (Burnham) Worcester, pastor of the Church of the New Jerusalem at 22nd and Chestnut Sts., in Philadelphia, with whom the family was well acquainted. Rev. Worcester (1859-1912) was the fourth minister in a direct line in his family; Assistant Pastor of the Philadelphia New Church Society, 1885-1894, and Pastor, 1894-1911. He also was a president of the General Convention of the Church of the New Jerusalem. (>>Worcester family genealogical website, http://www. worcesterfamily.com/ninth-2.htm; accessed 28 Aug 2007.)

[433] Fryeburg Camp was a Swedenborgian retreat in Fryeburg, Maine. A letter from Mabel Smith to Edward L. Spamer, written from Intervale, New Hampshire, 29 Aug 1938, noted in a postscript, "Assembly at Fryeburg has closed", without further remark. Betty Smith is Elisabeth Covington Smith (later Dewing) [No. 350, see under Earle C. Smith, No. 215]. A photo taken in Summer 1951, found in Elisabeth Smith Dewing's effects, is a "View from Fryeburg Assembly Grounds", which was signed by a number of individuals. Today there is still a New Church presence in Fryeburg.

Edward Smith also made the passing remark, apparently from the time that the family lived in Jacksonville, Florida (in the 1890s): [438]

> The popular humorist of those days, Henry Ford, gave a benefit performance for the kindergarten in which Mabel and Grace Smith, thought to be a distant relation, were interested, and it was well attended.

213. Florence (Smith) Smith (1881–1927)

She married Guy Vernon Smith, who was not related to the Smiths of the Eastern Shore. The marriage was officiated by her father, Rev. John Edward Smith, at his home in Philadelphia.[439] She had no children.

In the 1920 U.S. census Florence Smith is listed with an occupation, "Tobacco Warehouse", which was her husband's business.

Edward Seville Smith's notes about his sister and her husband, Guy Smith, are presented in the "Smith Genealogy": [440]

> She studied in the Duval County Public Schools, Jacksonville, Florida, and in Philadelphia, graduated from the Girls High School, 17th and Spring Garden Streets [in Philadelphia].
> At Miss Garrett's School for the Deaf[441] in Bala, Pa., she studied lip reading in teaching the deaf and, after graduation, went to Faulkland, North Carolina, to teach the daughter of a doctor there which she did for several years. While there she met Guy Vernon Smith of Farmville, N.C.,

[441] Miss Mary Smith Garrett [no relation] was, at the time that Florence Smith attended, superintendent of the so-called "Bala Home" founded by the Misses Emma and Mary Garrett in Bala, Pennsylvania (today Bala Cynwyd), near Philadelphia. The school's formal name was the Pennsylvania Home for the Training in Speech of Deaf Children Before They Are of School Age. It advocated the instruction of deaf children through speech and lip-reading, as opposed to sign language. Emma Garrett had graduated in 1878 from a course for teachers of the deaf taught by Alexander Graham Bell at the Boston University School of Oratory. She taught at the Mount Airy (Pennsylvania) Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, near Philadelphia, and later was principal of the Pennsylvania Oral School for Deaf-Mutes, in Scranton. While there she opened a Philadelphia school in 1885, which became a state institution, growing with appropriations from the Pennsylvania Legislature and a gift of land. After her sister, Mary, joined her in 1889, they opened the "Bala Home" in 1892. The following year Emma took her own life, and Mary assumed the superintendent's position of the school. (>>Encyclopedia Britannica Online, http://www. britannica.com/ebc/article-9125746, accessed 20 Feb 2007.)

and they were later married at the home of her parents in Philadelphia. He was a fine, big, jolly fellow and of a good North Carolina family, not known to be related to our Smiths.

Guy was active in civic affairs and in tobacco warehouse business with his partner, Mr. Zugg, owners of the "Star Tobacco Warehouse". Florence, too, was active in civic affairs in Greenville. They had a nice home on Tar Street, and we enjoyed our visits to their home. Their cook, Narcissus, was a joy, a good person and a fine cook, and a great comfort to Florence who was in poor health for some years and relied so much on "Narcissus".

Florence played a good game of chess and she and Papa had many good games together. She had a luxurious growth of black hair which Guy, with the rest of us, admired and he did not like to see it thinned out or cut, which would often have been a relief to her. She was a handsome woman and her hair almost reached the floor. She loved music and was interested in concerts there. She and Guy had no children. He married a second time, to Mary Bertolette[442] of Reading, Pa., and continued to live in Greenville. Their children are Mary B., Julia Smith, Catherine, and Guy V. Smith, Jr.

Guy visited us here on several occasions, one occasion was a rally for President Franklin Roosevelt at Franklin Field, while Mayor Wilson was office.[443]

They tell a story about Florence and me when we were children and I was peeved. I would say that "I could not hit her, but I could squeeze her."

Guy Vernon Smith, Sr. (1881–1936)
(husband of Florence Wells Smith)

He is not known to have been a relation to the Smiths of the Eastern Shore. Of his parents' families, the only information thus far determined is his father's name, John H. Smith, and the immediate family of his mother, Julia Belcher (see the Belcher Family collateral genealogy, farther below).

Occupations of Guy Vernon Smith, Sr. (from U.S. censuses):
1910: Police officer
1920: Merchandise broker
1930: Tobacconist in own warehouse

[442] Mary Bertolet Smith died 8 Nov 1979 in Greenville, Pitt Co., North Carolina. She was born 15 Apr 1896 in Pennsylvania.

[443] On 27 June 1936, at the Democratic National Convention, President Franklin D. Roosevelt accepted the nomination of his party for a second term in office. It was here that one of the more memorable of Roosevelt's phrases was spoken:

"Governments can err, Presidents do make mistakes, but the immortal Dante tells us that Divine justice weighs the sins of the cold-blooded and the sins of the warm-hearted in different scales.

"Better the occasional faults of a Government that lives in a spirit of charity than the consistent omissions of a Government frozen in the ice of its own indifference.

"There is a mysterious cycle in human events. To some generations much is given. Of other generations much is expected. This generation of Americans has a rendezvous with destiny."

In 1922 at least, Guy Smith was manager of the East Carolina Baseball League[444], and he was manager at some time prior to this as well since he is also referred to as the "former manager".[445]

Guy and Florence Smith had no children. After the death of Florence, Guy married Mary Grace Bertolet of Reading, Pennsylvania (see the Bertolet Family collateral genealogy, farther below).

Guy Vernon Smith, Sr., is said to have died by suicide.[446]

216. Ralph Parmelee Smith (1889–1898)

He was named for Rev. J. B. Parmelee, "an indefatigable lecturer on Swedenborgian topics" who led the Wilmington Society of the New Church.[447] In many family references, Ralph's given name is spelled as Ralph Parmalee, but in all instances found there is no corroboration, and the spelling with an "a" is probably erroneous.

Edward S. Smith, in the "Smith Genealogy", briefly recalled his youngest brother:[448]

> He was a cherub if ever there was one. A bright cheerful little fellow, loveable, with blonde ringlets of hair curling over his head and sparkling blue eye[s]. He was attending public school in West Philadelphia, not far from our home, 614 North 43rd Street. He was buried in the lot with Grandmother Seville,[449] in Bren Ziva [sic] Cemetery near Kenton, Delaware.

Ralph died at the age of eight of acute peritonitis. He was buried 20 May in Bryn Zion Cemetery, at the crossroads of Wheatley's Pond Rd. (Delaware Rt. 300) and Bryn Zion Rd. east of Kenton, Kent Co., Delaware.

Ralph Smith's grave lies in a row of graves belonging to the Grahams, some of whom are known to be a part of our extended family; however, the individuals who are here buried with Ralph are as yet unconnected to the lineages known as this time. Smith Family genealogy continues after the following collateral genealogy

Sevil and Wells Families
Collateral Genealogy
(171 descendants[450])

Genealogical information on the paternal and maternal lineages of Ella Seville, wife of Rev. John Edward Smith, as they relate to the Smith family, are as follows.

The "Smith Genealogy" by Edward S. Smith includes some general information on the Sevil and Wells families:[451]

> "The Sevils, or Sevilles . . . came to Delaware from New Jersey. They were Baptists and many were buried in the Baptist Cemetery of the old Baptist Church which was at Hare's Corner, New Castle County, Delaware, which is now a business area with stores and a large bus terminal station. There is now an appropriate roadside tablet there, marking the site of the Baptist Church and Cemetery.[452]

[450] This collateral genealogy also contains the following collateral lineages, as indicated: Faires (12 individuals), Riggs (5), and Husbands (2). The sum given above does not include these individuals.

[451] In addition to the genealogical sketch, Edward S. Smith also prepared a family-tree scroll for the Sevils, similar to the much larger and more complicated scroll containing the Smith family tree. The original of the Sevil scroll was given to me ca. 1998 by Helen Montgomery McCarraher.

[452] The cemetery, which was associated with the Bethel Church, was destroyed after 1991. The church, first organized in 1780 to serve a Wilmington congregation who preferred to have a church closer to their homes, built its log meeting house in 1786. The church members even removed some of their burials from Wilmington and reinterred them at Hare's Corner. The church was disbanded in 1871 with but five members; when the building disappeared has not been ascertained. A historical marker was placed along the highway by the State of Delaware in 1933, but by 1992 it was gone. A later list of New Castle County historical markers notes that the Bethel Church marker, NC-56, 1 mile west of U.S. Route 13 on the north side of the highway between Hares Corner and Christiana, was designated as "inactive/removed" (Delaware Public Archives website, http://archives.delaware.gov/markers/ncc/bethel-church-nc56.shtml, accessed 11 Apr 2007). The area is still known as Hare's Corner, centered on the intersection of U.S. Route 13 (Dupont Highway) and Delaware Route 273. Although it maintained its crossroads appearance well into the 20th century, today it is a huge, multi-lane, congested intersection surrounded by businesses, and crossed diagonally by runway approach lights for the Greater Wilmington Airport (Newcastle County Airport).

The Bethel Church was about a mile west of the Hare's Corner intersection, on the north side of Rt. 273; old maps show a Baptist Church at this location. However, all trace of original structures, as well as the cemetery, are gone. Apparently the property was impacted by the Triangle Mall (actually more like a shopping center than a large mall). The grave markers of the cemetery were originally read as a Works Progress Administration project during the 1930s, and in 1991 the cemetery was partly recovered from overgrowth and its surviving stones were read before they were destroyed. Historically, Hare's Corner was originally known as Clark's Corner, taking its current name from John Haire (or Hare) who had the earliest lease on the land adjacent to New Castle Commons. Hare's Corner was the site of a Civil War training camp called Camp Andrews or Camp Hare's Corner. "The first Sevil of whom we have information was David Seville and his wife Mary (Scotch) who lived in New Jersey, where a son Abel was born September 12, 1790, and died in Smyrna, on April 26, 1847, buried at Hare's Corner. He had two brothers, Nathan and David. Abel Sevil married Mary Manlove Davis, by whom there was a son, Nathan Thomas Sevil, and he had a full s[i]ster, Rebecca. After the death of Mary, Abel married her sister, Elizabeth Davis, and by this marriage there were two daughters, Mary Manlove, and Amanda. These were half-sisters of Nathan Thomas Sevil, my maternal grandfather, and lived with us at Mt. Salem, Wilmington. One of them gave me a very pretty pearl handled knife which my grandmother used in her magical sewing basket. I was much too young for a knife. These half-sisters never married and were buried at Hare's Corner, New Castle County, Delaware." [453]

"Daniel Wells, the father of Rebecca S. Wells, died in Smyrna in 1862, and her mother, Anna Sharp, died in 1836. Daniel Wells and his wife had come to Delaware from Dividing Creek, New Jersey, a small community near Morris River; the land in that area is good farm land and convenient to water, which was the main avenue of travel in the early days."[454]

SEVIL FAMILY COLLATERAL GENEALOGY

Descendants of David Seville

Regarding the spelling of the name Seville/Sevil, it is apparent that the terminal "le" was dropped by the second generation listed here. However, Ella Seville independently reintroduced the original spelling, which also was used in the names of some descendants. The pronunciation of the name as used in the family sounds like the word "civil". [455]

There is record of one Samuel Sevilmarrying Ann Golden, 6 March 1796 in New Castle Co., Delaware. [456] Whether he is related to the Sevil family the subject here is uncertain.

Generation No. 1

1. David[1] Seville was born about 1764. He married Sarah Mary.

Children of David Seville and Sarah are:

+ 2 i. Abel[2] Sevil, born 12 September 1790 in New Jersey; died 26 April 1847 in Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware.
3 ii. David Sevil, born about 1805 in Delaware; died 27 July 1877 in New Castle, New Castle Co., Delaware.
4 iii. Nathan Sevil, born 26 March 1808 in Delaware; died 03 February 1882 at the Abel Sevil farm, near Clayton, Kent Co., Delaware.

NOTES

1. David Seville (ca. 1764–)
and his wife, Sarah Mary Seville

The Smith family chart compiled by Edward S. Smith indicates that David Seville's wife was Mary. A website posting from the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints indicates that David Seville's wife was Sarah. It is possible that the records refer to Sarah Mary, or that our family information is misleading and that David Seville had more than one wife. The information as given above reflects the current understanding of the family lineage.

The Bible of David Seville was, as of 1977, in the possession of the Faries family of Smyrna, Delaware.[457]

Sarah Mary was of Scot descent; she may have been from New Jersey.

3. David Sevil (junior) (ca. 1805–1877)

At the time of the 1870 U.S. census he was a farmer residing in New Castle, New Castle Co., Delaware.

There is record of one David Sevil marrying Mary Booth, 16 June 1831, in New Castle Co., Delaware.[458] Whether this is David Sevil the present subject is uncertain.

4. Nathan Sevil (1808–1882)

At the time of the 1870 U.S. census he was a farmer. Also see Additions & Corrections

Residences of Nathan Sevil (from U.S. censuses):
1870: New Castle, New Castle Co., Delaware
1880: Blackbird Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware

At the time of the 1870 census he resided with his brother, David. They resided with "Edith Sevil", aged 62, born in Delaware, whose relationship to them is undetermined. At the time of the 1880 census, Nathan, aged 72, is listed as a great-uncle of Abel and Marietta Sevil, with whom he resided.

Nathan Sevil is buried in Bryn Zion Cemetery, crossroads of Wheatley's Pond Rd. (Delaware Rt. 300) and Bryn Zion Rd., east of Kenton, Kent Co., Delaware.

Generation No. 2

2. Abel[2] Sevil (David[1] Seville) was born 12 September 1790 in New Jersey, and died 26 April 1847 in Smyrna, Delaware. He married (1) Mary Manlove Davis 1 December 1814 in New Castle Co., Delaware, daughter of William Davis. She was born 14 October 1790, and died 11 December 1834; from Milford(?), Delaware. He married (2) Elizabeth Davis 06 June 1836, daughter of William Davis.

Children of Abel Sevil and Mary Davis are:

	5	i.	Elizabeth Ann[3] Sevil. She married Lawrence Heritage. Also see Additions & Corrections
+	6	ii.	Emeline P. Seville.
	7	iii.	Rebecca Sevil. She married Nathaniel (Nathan) Parsons.
	7a	v.	William D. Sevil, born 04 November 1817; died 25 January 1821.

+	8	vi.	Sarah Manlove Sevil, born June 1819 in Delaware; died 11 August 1891.
	9	vii.	James Henry Sevil, born 1823; died 15 May 1852.
	10	iv.	Robert Davis Sevil, born about 1825.
+	11	viii.	Nathan Thomas Sevil, born 09 July 1827, of Barratt's Chapel, Frederica, Delaware; died 07 April 1867 near New Castle, New Castle Co., Delaware.

Children of Abel Sevil and Elizabeth Davis are:

12	i.	Mary Manlove[3] Sevil, born 29 October 1837; died 24 January 1885.
13	ii.	Amanda Sevil, born 13 December 1840; died 26 June 1882.

NOTES

There is record of one Ann Sevil marrying Lewis McCormick, 7 December 1814 in New Castle Co., Delaware.[459] She possibly was a sister of, or close relation to, Abel Sevil [No. 2]. Also note, below, that Abel Sevil may also have married one Elizabeth McCormick. Beyond this circumstantial information, nothing more has been established.

2. Abel Sevil (1790–1847)

Family records state about Abel Sevil, "His wives were sisters and daughters of William Davis of Milford(?), Del. His Bible was in the possession of Clara Faries, Smyrna, Del. It has the record of his immediate family, but has no record back of himself."

There is also a record of an Abel Sevil marrying Elizabeth McCormick, 18 December 1810 in New Castle Co., Delaware.[460] It is possible that this is an otherwise unknown, first marriage of Abel Sevil. Also note that one of his daughters with Mary Davis was named Elizabeth, who in the family record is listed first and may thus have been the first-born child of Abel and Mary Davis Sevil. Also further,

In the Delaware Governor's Register 1674-1851, there is a record on 2 June 1827 of an Abel Sevil who was commissioned an Ensign in the 2nd Co., 2nd Regiment of the state militia.

Abel Sevil was a farmer. At the time of the 1830 U.S. census he resided in New Castle Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware.

Abel Sevil was of the Baptist faith. He was a member of the Bethel Church, near Hare's Corner, New Castle Co., Delaware (no longer surviving). "Abe Sivil baptized" is noted in the Church Record Book in April 1834, which may be an adult baptism if this is the same Abel Sevil. The Record Book also notes that in June 1837 he went to the Bryn Zion Church, which was near Kenton, Kent Co., Delaware.[461]

Family records indicate that Abel Sevil was a member of the Delaware Legislature, but this information seems to confuse him with Robert John Reynolds, who married Lovenia Riggs, a great granddaughter of Abel Sevil. (Reynolds served in the legislature and also was a Governor of Delaware, about whom see more below.)

[461] "A History of Bethel Church and Its Members", Delaware Genealogical Society Journal, vol. 6, no. 3 (Apr 1992), p. 50. The Church Record book is in the Historical Society of Delaware. The Bryn Zion Church was a Baptist congregation first established as the Old School Baptist Church. A church was built east of Kenton, Delaware, in 1771, and rebuilt in 1871. Here several Sevil family members are buried. The church building was destroyed in a storm in 1942, but the cemetery is still maintained at the crossroads of Wheatley's Pond Rd. (Delaware Rt. 300) and Bryn Zion Rd.

Abel Sevil was buried in the Bethel Church Cemetery, near Hare's Corner, New Castle Co., Delaware; no longer surviving.

Mary Manlove (Davis) Sevil (1790–1834) and Elizabeth (Davis) Sevil
(wives of Abel Sevil)

They were sisters, according to the family research done by the Macks. Their father, William Davis was probably from Milford, Delaware. William Davis was buried at the old Baptist Church cemetery near Hare's Corner, Newcastle Co., Delaware.

Of both the Manlove and Davis families, nothing is now known to the family with certainty. Roberta Smith Mack apparently had prepared two typewritten pages of notes, one for each family. This information is transcribed from her worksheets, as follows, without further remark here:[462]

MANLOVE.

*Rowland Manlove of Mansfields in the Parish of Rhynston, county of Staffordshire, England, was in the Royal Navy, and, I think, was knighted. I have seen the Manlove crest.
*Sir Roland Manlove died in 1652. (from B.D.)

DAVIS.

*Thomas Davis married Nov., 1760, Judith Best. He is supposed to have come to Virginia from Wales. Th[e] first we really know of him is that in 1663 he received a grant of 400 acres from the governor of Virginia for transporting eight colonists; presumably he was one of the eight. This land upon a re-survey of boundary was thrown into Maryland. Later we find he removed to "Sussex in the Territories of the Province of Pennsylvania". Among his children were:

Jehu Davis, Judge, Delaware Militia, etc.
*Thomas Davis, b. d. m. 1726, widow of Henry Gabriel. Their son,
*Nehemiah Davis m. 1791 Mary Manlove, (see Manlove)

Nehimiah Davis Sr. made his will in 1788, probated 1791; his son William was executor. [I]n 1773 he was commissioned Justice of the Peace by King George III, and in 1777 he was commissioned Justice of Quarter Sessions by John McKinley, Commander-in-Chief of Delaware State. 7. Rebecca Sevil and her husband Nathaniel (Nathan) Parsons

There is record of "Sevil" (no given name) marrying Nathaniel "Farson" , 21 March 1846 in Delaware.[463] This is very probably Rebecca Sevil and Nathaniel Parsons. "Farson" is likely to have been a misinterpretation by the indexer.

One "Nathan Parsons" is mentioned in his father's will (John Parsons, will 10 March 1830, probate 18 August 1834 in Cumberland Co., New Jersey).[464] Whether this is the same as Nathaniel Parsons, husband of Rebecca Sevil, or a relation, is unknown.

7a. William D. Sevil (1817–1821)

His name and dates has been retrieved from the record of grave markers read in 1991 when the Bethel Church Cemetery near Hare's Corner, New Castle Co., Delaware, was recovered; now no longer surviving.[465]

9. James Henry Sevil (1823–1852)

He was a clerk. He is buried in Bryn Zion Cemetery, crossroads of Wheatley's Pond Rd. (Delaware Rt. 300) and Bryn Zion Rd., east of Kenton, Kent Co., Delaware.

11. Robert Davis Sevil (ca. 1825–)

Nothing is known of him from family records.

However, a U.S. passport application of one "Robert D. Sevil" was filed 16 April 1849 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The applicant stated that he was aged 24, born in New Castle Co., Delaware, at the time residing in Philadelphia. His calculated birthdate is thus ca. 1825, which is within the range ca. 1815–ca. 1835 that Robert Davis Sevil would have been born to Abel and Mary Davis Sevil. At the time, the purpose for requesting a passport was not a part of the application. The Robert D. Sevil who applied for a passport must have been an imposing figure in his day. He was 6 feet 1½ inches tall.[466]

12. Mary Manlove Sevil (1837–1885)
13. Amanda Sevil (1840–1882)

Also see Additions & Corrections

Neither ever married. Near the ends of their lives they lived in the household of Rev. John Edward Smith, in Mount Salem, Wilmington, New Castle Co., Delaware, where also lived Rebecca Wells Sevil, widow of their half brother, Nathan.

They were buried in the Bethel Church Cemetery, near Hare's Corner, New Castle Co., Delaware; no longer surviving.

Generation No. 3

6. Emeline P.[3] Seville (Abel[2], David[1] Seville) She married Joseph Faries, son of William Farries and Theresa. He was born about 1834; from Milford and Smyrna, Delaware.

Children of Emeline Sevil and Joseph Faries are:

+	14	i.	Adelaide[4] Faries.
	15	ii.	Abel Faries.
	16	iii.	Clara Faries, died in Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware.
	17	iv.	Mary Faries. She married Samuel Tolson.

NOTES

There is a record of Emeline P. Seville marrying Joseph Faries, 7 February 1844, in Kent Co., Delaware. [467] However, this date and the putative date of birth for Joseph Faries are incongruous, being ten years apart. The matter is not resolved here.

Clara Faries [No. 16] never married. She is possibly the Clara Faries (1854-1929) who is buried in Sec. A, Glenwood Cemetery, Asbury United Methodist Church, Smyrna, Delaware.

Mary (Faries) Tolson [No. 17] was known as "Mollie".

Samuel Tolson, husband of Mary Faries [No. 17], resided below Clayton, Delaware.

The immediate family of Joseph Faries (ca. 1834–), husband of Emeline Sevil [No. 6], is as follows:

Descendants of William Farries

Generation No. 1

1. William[1] Farries was born 1800 in Delaware, and died 21 December 1865. He married Theresa M.. She was born 1809 in Germany, and died 02 July 1888.

Children of William Farries and Theresa are:

+	2	i.	Daniel[2] Faries, born 20 August 1832 in Delaware; died 04 April 1861.
+	3	ii.	Joseph Faries, born about 1834, from Milford and Smyrna, Delaware.
	4	iii.	Alexander Faries, born about 1839 in Delaware.
	5	iv.	Mary C. Faries, born about 1840 in Delaware.
	6	v.	Samuel Faries, born about 1842 in Delaware.
	7	vi.	Sarah Faries, born about 1844 in Delaware.
	8	vii.	Eliza Faries, born about 1846 in Delaware.
	9	viii.	William Faries, born 1849 in Delaware.

Notes

1. William Faries (1800–1865)

At the time of the 1850 U.S. census he was a harness maker, residing in Duck Creek Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware. He is buried in Glenwood Cemetery, Asbury United Methodist Church, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware.

Theresa M. Faries (1809–1888)
(wife of William Faries [No. 1])

She is buried in Glenwood Cemetery, Asbury United Methodist Church, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware.

4. Alexander Faries (ca. 1839–)

This may be the Alexander Faires, Jr., mentioned on the grave marker of Susan E. Faries (21 September 1840–19 March 1864) in Glenwood Cemetery, Asbury United Methodist Church, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware. He is not in this cemetery. A daughter of Alexander and Susan, Theresa Faries (7 February 1861–27 September 1891), is in this same section.

2. Daniel[2] Faries (William[1] Farries) was born 20 August 1832 in Delaware, and died 04 April 1861. He married Lydia E. Griffin. She was born 15 February 1832 in Delaware, and died 09 December 1868.

Children of Daniel Faries and Lydia Griffin are:

10 i. Ida[3] Faries, born about 1855 in Delaware.
11 ii. William Faries, born about 1857 in Delaware.
12 iii. Mary E. Faries, born about April 1860 in Delaware.

Notes

2. Daniel Faries (1832–1861)

Occupations of Daniel Faries (from U.S. censuses):
1850: Harness maker
1860: Confectioner

At the time of the 1860 census, Daniel Faries resided in Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware.

He is buried in Glenwood Cemetery, Asbury United Methodist Church, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware.

Lydia (Griffin) Faries (1832–1868)
(wife of Daniel Faries)

She is buried in Glenwood Cemetery, Asbury United Methodist Church, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware.

10. Ida Faries (ca. 1855–)

At the time of the 1880 U.S. census, she resided in Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware, with her aunt, Rebecca Wells (widow of Daniel Wells).

3. Joseph[2] Faries (William[1] Farries) was born about 1834, from Milford and Smyrna, Delaware. He married Emeline P. Sevil, daughter of Abel Sevil and Mary Davis.

See the Sevil Family collateral genealogy.

Note on Faries

The Faries family is the same family of the funeral home business in Smyrna, Delaware. The business began in 1831 with "Alexander Faries, Cabinetmaker", who also made burial caskets. The family-run business remains a successful contributor to the Smyrna community; in 1991 it counted its sixth generation family member in charge of the business.[468]

Children of Sarah Sevil and William Riggs are:

+	18	i.	Lovenia L.[4] Riggs, born 13 November 1840 in Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware; died 05 February 1897 in Delaware.
+	19	ii.	Mary R. Riggs, born about 1843 in Delaware.
+	20	iii.	Sarah W. Riggs, born about 1845 in Delaware.
	21	iv.	Samuel Riggs, born 13 February 1847; died 05 March 1847.
+	22	v.	Abel Riggs, born about 1848 in Delaware.
	23	vi.	Emmaline Riggs, born about February 1850 in Delaware. She married William Campbell.
+	24	vii.	William Edward Riggs, Jr., born about 1852 in Delaware.
	25	viii.	Anna E. Riggs, born 1854 in Delaware; died 1926. She married William R. Davis of Smyrna, Delaware; born 1851; died 1931.
	26	ix.	Samuel J. Riggs, born 16 January 1856; died 20 November 1856.
	27	x.	Rachel C. Riggs, born 31 December 1857; died 01 January 1858.
	28	xi.	Alfred D. Riggs, born 01 February 1859; died 12 July 1859.
	29	xii.	Lucy Todd Riggs, born 15 July 1863; died 29 September 1864.

NOTES

Sarah (Sevil) Riggs (1819–1891) [No. 9] and her husband, William Riggs, Sr. (1817–1899) are buried in Bryn Zion Cemetery, crossroads of Wheatley's Pond Rd. (Delaware Rt. 300) and Bryn Zion Rd., east of Kenton, Kent Co., Delaware.

Also in this cemetery are five infant children:
Samuel Riggs (1847–1847) [No. 21]
Samuel J. Riggs (1856–1856) [No. 26]
Rachel C. Riggs (1857–1858) [No. 27]
Alfred D. Riggs (1859–1859) [No. 28]
Lucy Todd Riggs (1863–1864) [No. 29]

At the time of the 1850 and 1860 U.S. censuses, William Riggs, Sr., was a farmer residing in Appoquinimink Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware.

Anna (Riggs) Davis (1854–1926) [No. 25] was known as "Annie". She is buried in Sec. B, Glenwood Cemetery, Asbury United Methodist Church, Smyrna, Delaware.

William R. Davis (1851–1931), husband of Anna Riggs [No. 25], is buried in Sec. B, Glenwood Cemetery, Asbury United Methodist Church, Smyrna, Delaware. Other Davis relations are also in this cemetery.

The Riggs direct paternal lineage as it applies to this family is as follows:

Descendants of Edward Riggs

Generation No. 1

1. Edward[1] Riggs. He married Elizabeth Rossa.

Child of Edward Riggs and Elizabeth Rossa is:

+	2	i.	Peter[2] Riggs.

Notes

Edward Riggs emigrated from England to Roxbury, Massachusetts, in 1633.

Generation No. 2

2. Peter[2] Riggs (Edward[1]) He married Mary.

Child of Peter Riggs and Mary is:

+	3	i.	Levi[3] Riggs.

Generation No. 3

3. Levi[3] Riggs (Peter[2], Edward[1]) He married Mary Jones.

Child of Levi Riggs and Mary Jones is:
+ 4 i. Samuel[4] Riggs.

Generation No. 4

4. Samuel[4] Riggs (Levi[3], Peter[2], Edward[1])

Child of Samuel Riggs is:
+ 5 i. William Edward[5] Riggs, Sr., born 04 September 1817 in Delaware; died 13 September 1899.

Notes

A "Samuel Riggs" is noted on the grave marker of his wife, "Lovenia Riggs" (15 May 1775–11 October 1836) in Christ Episcopal Church Cemetery, Dover, Delaware. Note that the Samuel Riggs [No. 4] here has a granddaughter whose name was Lovenia Riggs (see the Sevil Family collateral genealogy). The remains buried at Christ Episcopal Church Cemetery are likely to be relations.

Generation No. 5

5. William Edward[5] Riggs, Sr. (Samuel[4], Levi[3], Peter[2], Edward[1]) was born 04 September 1817 in Delaware, and died 13 September 1899. He married Sarah Manlove Sevil, daughter of Abel Sevil and Mary Davis. She was born June 1819 in Delaware, and died 11 August 1891.

See the Sevil Family collateral genealogy for information about William and Sarah (Sevil) Riggs and their descendants.

End of Riggs lineage

Sevil Family collateral genealogy continues:

11. Nathan Thomas[3] Sevil (Abel[2], David[1] Seville) was born 09 July 1827 near Barratt's Chapel, Frederica, Kent Co., Delaware, and died 07 April 1867 near New Castle, New Castle Co., Delaware. He married Rebecca Sharp Wells 12 February 1850, daughter of Daniel Wells and Anna Sharp. She was born 13 December 1827 in Milltown, Salem Co., New Jersey, and died 28 April 1909 at 512 S. 47th St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Also see Additions & Corrections

Children of Nathan Sevil and Rebecca Wells are:
+ 30 i. Abel[4] Sevil, born 24 November 1850, in Kent Co., Delaware; died 13 November 1926.
+ 31 ii. Ella Seville, born 23 January 1854 in Kenton, Kent Co., Delaware; died 20 January 1931 in Indiana, probably Michigan City.

NOTES

11. Nathan Thomas Sevil (1827–1867)

Nathan Sevil is said to have been a member of Barratt's Chapel, in Frederica, Delaware. Another family record indicates that his date of birth was 10 August 1827; the date of 9 July is accepted on the authority of Nathan T. Sevil's own Bible entry.

In the 1860 census he has been misindexed as Nathan "Swil". In that census he is a slave-owner, holding a ten-year-old boy.

At the time of the 1850 and 1860 U.S. censuses, Nathan Sevil was a farmer and commission merchant residing in Duck Creek Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware.

Also see Additions & Corrections

Family records indicate "he was killed when leaving a train near New Castle, Del., where he stepped off to visit an aunt, while on his way to sell a carload of potatoes."[469] He is buried in Bryn Zion Cemetery, crossroads of Wheatley's Pond Rd. (Delaware Rt. 300) and Bryn Zion Rd., east of Kenton, Kent Co., Delaware.

Rebecca Sharp (Wells) Sevil (1827–1909)
(wife of Nathan Sevil)
"Beckie", "Little Grandma", "Little Grandmother"

Her birthplace in Milltown, Pittsgrove Township, Salem Co., is attributed from a Family Group Work Sheet compiled by Lathrop and Roberta Mack, which credits a letter (not now found) from Ella Seville Smith that gave this information about her mother; the notation also indicated that this was now called Brotmanville. However, a letter from the Salem County Historical Society reports the following different information about Milltown: [470]

> "Milltown was the name given to the locality of the Richman grist-mill near Richmanville. In addition to a grist-mill, there was a saw-mill, fulling mill and foundry there at one time. It is on State Route #15, between Woodstown and Daretown, in Pilesgrove Township, Salem Co."

The discrepancy has not been resolved, but it seems likely that the Pilesgrove Twp. locale may be correct, not only on the authority of the county historical society, but that Brotmanville, Pittsgrove Twp., did not come into its own until later in the century. [471] Other family notes indicated that Rebecca Wells Sevil had been born in Dividing Creek, Cumberland Co., New Jersey, but this information is inferentially less reliable. The family did apparently live in Dividing Creek before removing to Delaware, but the cemetery in that town contains no markers with any of the family surnames. Rebecca was the last child of her family born in New Jersey.

Rebecca Wells Sevil attended the Pennsylvania State Normal School at Millersville, Pennsylvania. She was a school teacher in or near Kenton, Delaware.

At the time of the 1870 U.S. census, Rebecca Wells Sevil, then a widow, resided in a one-person household in Kenton Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware. She is misindexed in that census as "Levil".

Of parenthetical note is the family of Emory and Margaret Temple, who were nearby farmers in the 1860 census when Nathan T. and Rebecca Sevil were farmers. In the 1870 census, that family is nearby Rebecca Sevil in Kenton Hundred, where Emory Temple was then a hotel keeper.

In the 1880 census, Rebecca Sevil resided in Goldsboro, Caroline Co., Maryland, with her daughter, Ella, and son-in-law Rev. John Edward Smith; however, she is miscited as the "stepmother" of the head of household (John Smith). In the 1900 census she is again with John and Ella Smith, then at 614 N. 43rd St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. She died in the home of John and Ella, then at 512 S. 47th St., Philadelphia. Whether or not she moved to Florida with the family when Rev. Smith worked in Jacksonville in the early 1890s has not been determined. Also see Additions & Corrections

[471] Brotmanville was one of three towns in the area that was a center for Russian Jewish immigrant farmers in 1882. The other towns are Alliance and Norma. It was after this time that Abraham Brotman, an industrialist from Brooklyn, New York, came to southern New Jersey and established a clothing factory. No early history of the area has thus far been found. (>>Cumberland County website, http://www.co.cumberland.nj.us/ facts/history; accessed 22 Jun 2006. Also see Andy Newman, "At 99, the Last Link to a New Jersey Colony", The New York Times, 23 Jun 2005.)

Rebecca Sevil's affectionate names, "Little Grandma" and "Little Grandmother", seem to have been used by different parts of the family. Katharine S. Spamer, my aunt, always mentioned her grandmother as "Little Grandma". On the other hand, members of the Smith family (for example, Nadine Smith Synnestvedt) have mentioned Rebecca as "Little Grandmother". In any case, her familiar name was "Beckie".

Rebecca Sevil was buried 30 April 1909 in Bryn Zion Cemetery, crossroads of Wheatley's Pond Rd. (Delaware Rt. 300) and Bryn Zion Rd., east of Kenton, Kent Co., Delaware. Her grave marker was destroyed in a highway accident in 1998.[472] Family collections do include a photograph of that former marker. In the cemetery today there is a large stone monument that commemorates those families whose grave markers were destroyed in the accident; on it are listed only family names, not individuals. The monument is in place in the general area of the accident, alongside the highway near the intersection.

Notes From the "Smith Genealogy" About Nathan Thomas and Rebecca (Wells) Sevil

Edward S. Smith included some information and reminiscences of his grandparents, accompanied by a recollection by George Buchanan Wells, a nephew of Nathan and Rebecca Sevil: [473]

> "It appears that both the Wells and the Sevil families came to Delaware from New Jersey. Our grandmother, Rebecca Sharp Wells, was the daughter of Daniel Wells and Anna Sharp, his wife, who moved from New Jersey to Delaware about the time Rebecca was born, December 13, 1827. She was the last child of that family, born in New Jersey.
> "Nathan Thomas Sevil (or Seville) and his wife, Rebecca Wells Sevil, owned a farm near Kenton or Smyrna, Delaware, and later moved into Kenton. He was a successful farmer and commission merchant. Daniel Wells, the father of Rebecca S. Wells, died in Smyrna in 1862, and her mother, Anna Sharp, died in 1836. Daniel Wells and his wife had come to Delaware from Dividing Creek, New Jersey, a small community near Morris [sic] River[474]; the land in that area is good farm land and convenient to water, which was the main avenue of travel in the early days.
> "George Buchanan Wells, the son of Frank (Francis) Wells, the brother of Rebecca Wells Sevil (my grandmother) wrote the following about a visit to the farm of Nathan Thomas Sevil:
> " 'An Octogenarian's Recollection of a childhood trip to Aunt Beckie's.
> 'It was a warm afternoon in early July, 1862 or 1863, that Uncle Nathan, who had driven into town for a supply of family grocieries, dropped in for a short call. After a bit of teasing (Uncle Nathan had a habit of kidding, but always with a twinkle in his eyes that always gave him away, but made a pal of the kiddy), he asked me if I wished to go home with him to spend a few days with Aunt Beckie.

[472] When the cemetery was visited by Earle Spamer and Jane Anderson (for them the first time), in the company of Helen (Montgomery) McCarraher on 13 Mar 2004, the grave marker was discovered to be missing. A large stone monument was found nearby, which indicated that numerous markers had been destroyed in a highway accident. A small sign on a mailbox gave a mailing address, and Spamer wrote to inquire about the nature of the accident. He was informed that "there was an accident at the cross roads, a car struck a bus forcing it to run into the cemetery destroying or moving many stones. We could not afford to replace individual stones so we settled for the monument" (Edward L. Hughes to Earle Spamer, 2004). The cross-road is Wheatleys Pond Rd. (Delaware Rt. 300) and Bryn Zion Rd.; the cemetery is on the northwest corner. Unfortunately, the precise location of Rebecca Sevil's grave is not now known, although Helen McCarraher corroborates that it was "right along the road". The graves in this cemetery do encroach nearly upon the shoulder of Rt. 300. The cemetery is not fenced.

(Left) Memorial tablet, "In memory of the following families whose gravestones were destroyed in an accident in 1998". Rebecca Wells Sevil's marker was one of those destroyed as the result of an auto–bus collision. The Bryn Zion church was not able to restore the individual markers and settled instead for the large tablet. It also is probable that there are no precise gravesite maps for this cemetery. (Spamer photo, taken in 2004.)

'The text of my reply has been obliterated from memory's record, but I went and was greeted by Aunt Beckie's kiss of welcome. The next day was spent principally in companionship with my charming Cousin Ella[475] and the family dog. We watched the feeding of the hungry porkers, listened to the cackling of the laying hens, and viewed at a respectful distance the going forth and return to the hives of the myriads of bees. We climbed apple trees (not the dog), were much intrigued by the operation of the threshing machine, making ready for the market the year's wheat crop, and stood entranced by the beauty and grandure [sic] of the peacocks spreading plumes.

'Being almost surfeited by our bucolic entertainment and not unmindful of the direct rays of the July sun, in the late afternoon, we sought the shelter of the homestead for such games as might be hit upon. I have already disclosed the fact that it was threshing time, a period which, as all should know by reason of augmented forces of farm hands, doubles the labor and responsibility of the farmer's wife. Think of a hearty boy and girl, to say nothing of the dog, breaking in so, as preparations were toward feeding of a dozen men, who have done the proverbial brown sweating for a long summer day! But did it faze my Aunt Beckie? Bless her memory, not a bit! With her perpetual benign smile, her never failing gentle and sympathetic voice and her characteristic chuckle, which I think she clung to all her days, she proposed to teach us the new game of making butter!

'The churn was brought forth, the cream poured in and the lid fastened. George, as guest, was to have the first turn at the dasher and Ella should watch the clock and see that George did not hold on to the dasher a second beyond his allotted time. Reverse, George watches. Continued until Aunt Beckie announces "finis". When we proudly inspected the result of our game, we were ready for supper and then to bed, the neglected dog having long since withdrawn himself. Now I stoutly maintain that Tom Sawyer with his fence white-washing contract, had nothing on my dear Aunt Beckie.'"

Bible of Nathan and Rebecca Wells Sevil

The Bible that had belonged to Nathan Sevil and his wife, Rebecca, is presently (2007) in the possession of Nadia (Smith) Synnestvedt; she had in turn received it from Helen (Montgomery) McCarraher—both are great granddaughters of Nathan and Rebecca Sevil. It is a Bible published by Lippincott, Grambo and Co. (Philadelphia, 1854); on its cover is stamped "N.T. & R. SEVIL". The entries were transcribed by Earle Spamer on 7 October 2004. Spellings and punctuations are transcribed faithfully. Because some entries were fitted in, and written in two columns, they are not all in chronological order. Although sensibly some entries read across the page and other down the page, all transcriptions are made by reading down each column. Entries were also added to the Bible by descendants of Nathan and Rebecca Sevil.

She is buried in Section Y, Lot 111, Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland.

Robert John Reynolds (1838–1909)[477]
(husband of Lovenia Riggs)

Some records have given his name as J. Robert Reynolds or John Robert Reynolds. Delaware official records, as well as the monument on his family cemetery lot, confirms "Robert J. Reynolds".

He was raised and educated in Fairfield, New York, and first settled in Petersburg, Delaware, where he was a farmer, growing mostly peach orchards. At the time of the 1870 and 1880 U.S. censuses he resided in South Murderkill Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware. He was of the Methodist faith.

He served in several capacities in the Delaware state government (Democrat): General Assembly (one term, 1869–) and State Treasurer (1879, 1881). He was chairman of the Democratic State Committee (1883-1887) and was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention in 1892. He served as Governor of Delaware (January 1889–January 1895).

After leaving the governor's office in 1895, he retired from public service and returned to farming. He had no children by his second marriage, to Hester Thomas, about whom nothing more is known.[478]

Robert J. Reynolds is buried in Section Y, Lot 111, Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland. The monument on the Reynolds family plot at Loudon Park Cemetery was placed in November 1927 or shortly

Children of Mary Riggs and Smith are:

+	36	i.	Lucy[5] Smith.
	37	ii.	Smith.
	38	iii.	Herbert Smith.

NOTES

19. Mary (Riggs) Smith (ca. 1843–)

The given name of the husband of Mary (Riggs) Smith is not now known in the family. Although he shared the same surname, Smith, he was not believed to have been a relation in our Smith family.

The family tree scroll that was prepared by Edward S. Smith while he worked on the "Smith Genealogy" has a brief note about Mr. and Mrs. Smith:

> "[Mary] was his second wife. He was much older than she. She was a nurse after he died (he had issue by both marriages)".

The identity of Mr. Smith is otherwise not determined, and he seems not to have been a relation to the Smiths the subject of the present genealogy. Only the children with Mary Riggs are listed in the "Smith Genealogy". Mr. Smith lived in Baltimore.

38. Herbert Smith

The family tree scroll by Edward S. Smith notes for Herbert Smith, "Warden, Eastern Pen. Phila. Pa.", which signifies that he was the warden of Eastern State Penitentiary, in Philadelphia. Edward Smith also had handwritten notes that read in part, "Herbert Smith warden Eastern Pen Phila Pa". An investigation yielded the following information about Herbert Smith.

In the 1920s, Herbert Smith was the "chief figure in the reorganization of the Philadelphia prohibition office".[479] He had been a member of the Pennsylvania State Constabulary (i.e., State Police) before becoming warden of historic Eastern State Penitentiary.[480] He was known as "Cap" Smith.[481] Herbert Smith [480] Eastern State Penitentiary in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, was opened in 1829 after decades of political effort by prison reformers in Pennsylvania. The design of the prison, and the manner in which it was operated, completely changed the prison system in America. The "Pennsylvania System", as it came to be known for a while, placed all inmates in solitary confinement, which was intended to promote self-reflection, remorse, and reformation. The controversial but long-lived policy had its critics, too, including the writer Charles Dickens, who visited the prison in 1842; he thought that the system was a "secret punishment" worse than physical torture, with "daily tampering with the mysteries of the brain" (Dickens, American Notes for General Circulation, Chapman and Hall, London, 1842, and numerous reprintings overseas and in America). The Pennsylvania System was abandoned in 1913. The antiquated prison was closed in 1971 and fell even more into disrepair. The site was purchased by the City of Philadelphia in 1980, which was followed by failed private reuse and development projects, which was halted in 1988 after petitions by the Eastern State Penitentiary Task Force. In 1994, the prison was partly reopened to tourism under an agreement with the Pennsylvania Prison Society. Dolan, Eastern State Penitentiary, Arcadia Publishing, Charleston, South Carolina, 2007).

was warden of Eastern State Penitentiary at least by 1928[482], although a 1929 newspaper article indicates that he was then Chief Warden of Graterford Prison[483], which was part of the Philadelphia County prison system. However, Smith was Warden of Eastern State when crime baron Al Capone was released on 17 March 1930 after having served ten months of a one-year sentence for carrying a pistol.[484] In 1940, Smith dealt with the discovery of two freshly dug tunnels through which 200 prisoners could have escaped from Eastern State,[485] which was oddly a precursor to 3 April 1945 when, on Smith's watch as Warden, notorious bank robber Willie Sutton and eleven other inmates of the prison escaped through a tunnel they had dug under the huge prison wall. (Sutton was quickly captured; the others were soon captured or killed.)

NOTES

30. Abel Sevil (1850–1926)

The "Smith Genealogy" notes about Abel Sevil:

> "They lived in Clayton, Delaware. He was a good businessman, quiet and thoughtful of others. He had a general store in Clayton and was the founder of the Clayton Bank. He built homes for each of his children there, and as they became of age, gave them interests in the business."[486]

Occupations of Abel Sevil (from U.S. censuses):
1880: Farmer
1900: Merchant
1910: "Emp", "Own store"
1920: no occupation

Residences of Abel Sevil (from U.S. censuses):
1880: Blackbird Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware
1900: "Alley" west of the Delaware Railroad, Clayton, Kent Co., Delaware
1910, 1920: Main St., Clayton, Kent co., Delaware

In the 1920 census he is listed as "Sebil"; with him resided his daughter and son-in-law, Frank and Edna Savin.

[486] "Smith Genealogy", pp. 52-53. The bank, at the intersection of Main St. and Smyrna Ave., Clayton, is today the Clayton Town Hall; pointed out by Helen (Montgomery) McCarraher in 2004. McCarraher also pointed out a store at 308 Main St. that she said had once been owned by one of the Sevils, and another store at 315 Main St. (today a hardware store) that she said had been a drugstore owned by one of the Sevils. Thus far it has not been determined which of the Sevils owned these stores, although the drugstore could have been the one operated by Walter Riggs Keys, widower of Clara Faries Sevil (see No. 42 in the Sevil family collateral genealogy).

Abel Sevil (1850–1926) [Sevil Family collateral genealogy, No. 30]

Studio portrait, date and location unknown. Abel Sevil had seven children (six with birth dates known 1873–1882). Presumably, the two unhappy children here are two of his children, possibly Eugene (b. 1873) and Clara (b. 1874). If these suggested identifications are correct, the photo dates to ca. 1877.

Correction
For possibly Eugene (b. 1873) read possibly Herman (b. 1876)
For ca. 1877 read ca. 1880
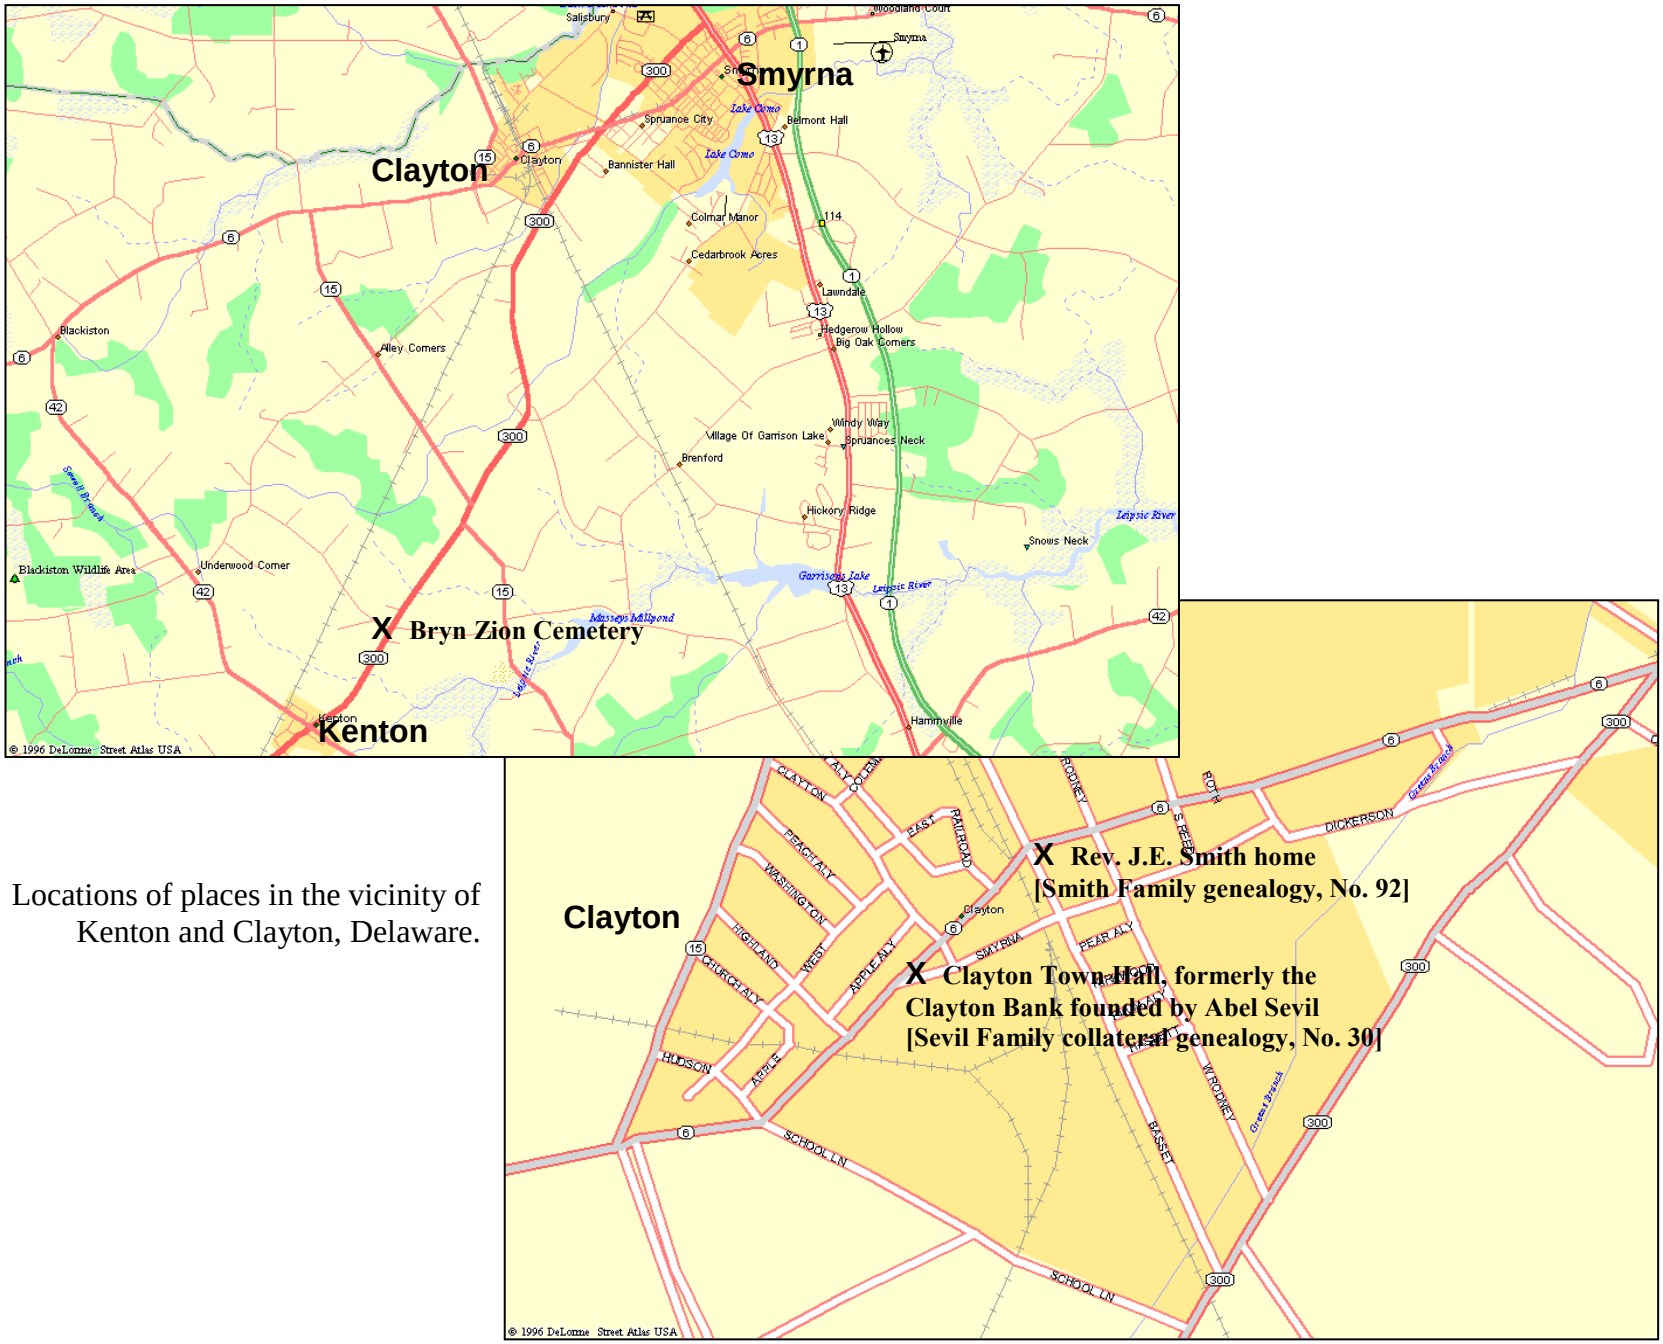
[Eugene was born and died in 1873]



Locations of places in the vicinity of Kenton and Clayton, Delaware.

The Town Hall of Smyrna, Delaware, at Main St. and Smyrna Ave. Formerly the bank of Abel Sevil. (Spamer photo, taken in 2004)

The following selections from J. Thomas Scharf's 1888 History of Delaware cite Abel Sevil:[487]

> Regarding Clayton, Delaware: "In 1854, the time of the surveying of the railroad, there was not a house in the town; all the land being owned by Richard Tibbitt. * * * Tibbitt gave ground for a depot and sold land for building-lots, and, in 1859, a hotel and store were built; the store being kept by Thomas B. Lockwood in a building now occupied by Abel Sevil. * * * In 1887, there were sixty houses in the town, three general stores, kept by Abel Sevil, George Brockson an W. S. Reynolds…."

J. Lathrop Mack included a brief comment about Abel Sevil in his notes on the Sevil family: [488]

> "Abel Sevil was a quiet kindly man who was devoted to his family. He was born on a farm near Clayton, Del. He was a merchant, having a general store at Clayton. He was active in all civic affairs, served several terms in the state legislature and on the local school Board, and organized the first bank in Clayton serving as its President until his death. After his sons took over his business he usually took a long trip to some part of the country with a companion as his guest."

Abel Sevil is buried in the Odd Fellows Cemetery, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware (lot 302).

Marietta (Husbands) Sevil (1852–1913)
(wife of Abel Sevil [No. 30])
"Etta", "Mary"

Regarding her family, only the following information is had pertaining to her parents:

Howell B. Husbands (ca. 1823–after June 1880) was a farmer. His residences are as follows (from U.S. censuses):
1850: Appoquinimink Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware
1860: Duck Creek Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware
1870: Kenton Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware
1880: Blackistons Cross-Roads, Kent Co., Delaware

Edna (Smith) Husbands (ca. 1831–after June 1900) and her husband, Howell Husbands, are noted in a confusing remark on the Seville family genealogical scroll drawn by Edward Seville Smith ca. 1960. He noted, "was Irish and a descendant of Capt. Thomas Smith, of Revolutionary fame. He had a farm in Mispillion Hundred, Del. now owned by U.S. Senator Willard Saulsbury" [but see more below]. E. S. Smith listed Edna as "Henace"; however, the only Howell Husbands who appears in U.S. census data for this time period (cited above) was married to Edna, with a daughter, Mary E. Husbands. Howell and Edna Husbands were living together at the time of the 1880 census, but at the time of the 1900 census Edna was widowed, residing with her daughter and son-in-law, Marietta and Abel Sevil, in Clayton, Delaware.

The only background on the connections of Capt. Thomas Smith and Sen. Saulsbury are the following notes from J. Lathrop Mack, which include a quote from Sen. Saulsbury:[489]

> "[Marietta Husbands] was the only child of Howell Husbands and [Edna] Smith who was Irish and a descendant of Capt. Thomas Smith of Revolutionary fame, who took up land under Lord Baltimore. She was a relative of U.S. Senator Willard Saulsbury who owned land that was a portion of the grant to Capt. Thomas Smith, at the time of the grant, this land was considered as lying in Maryland, but when the Mason & Dixon line was surveyed, it was shown to lie in Dela[w]are. The elder Saulsburys are buried on the Smith farm.
> "Senator Willard Saulsbury wrote us: 'The information given you by Mr. Abel Sevil of Clayton, that I own Capt. Thomas Smith's farm in Delaware, may be, and I hope it is, true. But I did not know it was the case. I have a farm of 120 acres in Mispillion Hundred, Del. which was devised to me by my uncle Ely Saulsbury, one time a United States Senator who died in Dover some twenty years ago (from 1925). My uncle Ely bought this farm at an administrator's sale held by my cousin John F. Saulsbury to pay the debts of the decedent Aaron Burr Smith whom I knew as uncle Burr. He was probably a cousin of my father. This farm may have belonged to Capt. Thomas Saulsbury (sic?)[490] but this I never heard before, in fact, I do not know how it came to Burr Smith. Capt. Thomas Smith of the Revolutionary War was my great-grandfather. His daughter Margaret married my grandfather William Saulsbury who died sometime in the 1830s. Their son Willard was my father. This is all the information I can think of that can be of the slightest service to you. I had another Smith ancestress, however, Sidney Smith daughter of William and Abigail, who was the mother of William Saulsbury my great grandfather. I think William & Abigail died some time about 1750-1760.' "

End of Husbands lineage

Sevil Family collateral genealogy continues:

Marietta (Husbands) Sevil is buried in the Odd Fellows Cemetery, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware (lot 302).

47. Eugene Sevil (1873–1873)

He is buried in the Odd Fellows Cemetery, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware (lot 302).

49. Herman Nathan Sevil (1876–1966) Also see Additions & Corrections

Occupations of Herman Nathan Sevil (from U.S. censuses):
- 1900: Store clerk
- 1910: Salesman in store
- 1920: Retail grocer
- 1930: Merchant, general store

Residences of Herman Nathan Sevil (from U.S. censuses):
- 1900: "Alley" west of the Delaware Railroad, Clayton, Kent Co., Delaware (with parents and other family)
- 1910: Clayton, Kent co., Delaware
- 1920: Highland Ave., Clayton, Kent Co., Delaware[491]
- 1930: West St., Clayton, Kent Co., Delaware

At the time of the 1920 census he resided next to the family of his brother, Howell.

He is buried in the Odd Fellows Cemetery, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware (lot 302).

His obituary notice indicates that he "was formerly the owner-operator of A. Sevil and Son General Store in Clayton. He was cashier of the Clayton Bank & Trust Co. and a member of the board of directors until his retirement six years ago. He was a member of Ewell's St. Paul's Methodist Church in Clayton. The only immediate survivor is a sister, Mrs. Edna N. Savin, of Smyrna."

Fannie (Short) Sevil (1876–1962)
(wife of Herman Nathan Sevil)

She was from Clayton, Delaware. She is buried in the Odd Fellows Cemetery, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware (lot 302).

Regarding her family, only her parents and siblings are known at this time, as follows:

John H.[1] Short was born about 1836 in Delaware. He married Mary L. She was born about 1838 in Delaware.

Children of John Short and Mary are:

[491] 205 Highland Ave., as pointed out by Helen (Montgomery) McCarraher in 2004.

i. Maggie[2] Short, born about 1861 in Delaware.
ii. Daniel Short, born about 1862 in Delaware.
iii. Sallie Short, born about 1865 in Delaware.
iv. Emma Short, born about 1869 in Delaware.
v. Elizabeth Short, born about 1871 in Delaware.
vi. Fannie Short, born 27 November 1876, from Duck Creek Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware; died 30 July 1962. She married Herman Nathan Sevil about 1904; born 30 October 1876 in Delaware; died 04 January 1966 in Clayton, Kent Co., Delaware.

Notes

At the time of the 1880 U.S. census, John H. Short (ca. 1836–) was a farmer residing in Duck Creek Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware.

At the time of the 1880 U.S. census, Daniel Short (ca. 1862–) was a farm laborer.

At the time of the 1900 census, Elizabeth Short (ca. 1871–) resided with her sister and brother-in-law, Herman and Fannie Sevil, in Clayton, Delaware. On the form, the ink lettering of her given name is very faded, but it obviously is Elizabeth (and not one of her other sisters); her age there is given as 36 (thus birth date about 1874). She worked as a sales lady in a store, presumably the A. Sevil and Son general store

50. Robert Lee Sevil (1878–1945)

Occupations of Robert Lee Sevil (from U.S. censuses and other sources):
1910 census: Building contractor
1918 draft registration: Self-employed, making mantel grates(?)
1920 census: Proprietor of mantel company
1930 census: Building contractor

Residences of Robert Lee Sevil (from U.S. censuses and other sources):
1910 census, and 1918 draft registration: 511 Riverside Ave., Jacksonville, Duval Co., Florida
1920 census: 213 Roselle St., Jacksonville, Duval Co., Florida
1930 census: 2575 Herschel Rd., Jacksonville, Duval Co., Florida

52. Edna (Sevil) Savin (1881–1934)

The Bible record of Nathan T. Sevil gives her date of birth as 16 August 1883. Her obituary notice states that she was a life-long resident of Clayton, Delaware, and that she left no immediate survivors. She is buried in the Odd Fellows Cemetery, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware.

Frank D. Savin (–1958)
(husband of Edna Sevil)

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census he was a retail merchant residing on Main St., Clayton, Kent Co., Delaware.

53. Abel Sevil, Jr. (1886–1887)

He is buried in the Odd Fellows Cemetery, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware (lot 302).

---

31. Ella[4] Seville (Nathan Thomas[3] Sevil, Abel[2], David[1] Seville) was born 23 January 1854 in Kenton, Kent Co., Delaware, and died 20 January 1931 in Indiana, probably Michigan City. She married John Edward Smith 27 February 1873 at Barratt's Chapel, Frederica, Kent Co., Delaware, son of John Smith and Mary Smith. He was born 17 March 1848 in Upper Heathworth, Spaniard Neck, near Centreville, Queen Anne's, Maryland, and died 31 December 1930 in 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

See main Smith genealogy for notes about Ella (Seville) and John Edward Smith and their descendants.

Generation No. 5

35. Byron[5] Reynolds (Lovenia L.[4] Riggs, Sarah Manlove[3] Sevil, Abel[2], David[1] Seville) was born 07 June 1862 in Delaware, and died 05 July 1898. He married Ulyssa I. She was born 28 July 1864, and died 18 September 1927.

Children of Byron Reynolds and Ulyssa are:

63 i. Herbert B.[6] Reynolds. He married Sarah G.; born 10 March 1889; died 06 October 1918.
64 ii. Robert John Reynolds, Jr., born 22 April 1891; died 30 July 1891.
65 iii. Ruth H. Reynolds, born 28 November 1892; died 10 September 1968.

NOTES

Byron Reynolds (1862–1898) [No. 35]; his wife, Ulyssa I. Reynolds (1864–1927); Sarah G. Reynolds (1889–1918), wife of Herbert B. Reynolds [No. 63]; Robert John Reynolds, Jr. (1891–1891) [No. 64]; and Ruth H. Reynolds (1892–1968) [No. 65] are buried in Section Y, Lot 111, Loudon Park Cemetery, Baltimore, Maryland.

Herbert B. Reynolds resided in New York City.

36. Lucy[5] Smith (Mary R.[4] Riggs, Sarah Manlove[3] Sevil, Abel[2], David[1] Seville) She married Walter Dungee.

Child of Lucy Smith and Walter Dungee is:

66 i. Herbert[6] Dungee

NOTES

Herbert Dungee [No. 66] had a business in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

---

39. Edward[5] Keys (Sarah W.[4] Riggs, Sarah Manlove[3] Sevil, Abel[2], David[1] Seville)

Child of Edward Keys is:

67 i. William Edward[6] Keys.

---

42. Walter Riggs[5] Keys (Sarah W.[4] Riggs, Sarah Manlove[3] Sevil, Abel[2], David[1] Seville) was born about 1874 in Delaware. He married (1) Clara Faries Sevil about 1904, daughter of Abel Sevil and Marietta Husbands. She was born 22 July 1874 in Delaware, and died 28 March 1911. He married (2) Marguerite J. about 1927. She was born about 1889 in Delaware.

Child of Walter Keys and Clara Sevil is:

68 i. Walter Seville[6] Keys, born about 1906 in Delaware; died about 1980.

NOTES

At the time of the 1930 census, Walter Riggs Keys (ca. 1874–) [No. 42] was a pharmacist residing on West St., Clayton, Kent Co., Delaware.

Walter Sevil Keys (ca. 1906–ca. 1980) [No. 68] moved to Arizona.

44. Anna Ethel[5] Riggs (William Edward[4], Sarah Manlove[3] Sevil, Abel[2], David[1] Seville) was born 30 March 1879, and died 24 February 1919. She married Reynolds Clough.

Children of Anna Riggs and Reynolds Clough are:
69 i. Frances Reynolds[6] Clough.
70 ii. Donald Callweath Clough.

NOTES

Reynolds Clough, husband of Anna Riggs [No. 44], was a lawyer in Dover, Kent Co., Delaware. It has not been determined whether he is a relation to Cheney Clow, who is mentioned earlier in the Smith genealogy in a historical context with the Moore family (see the Moore Family collateral genealogy under James Smith [No. 24 of the main Smith Family genealogy]).

---

46. Mary Truax[5] Riggs (William Edward[4], Sarah Manlove[3] Sevil, Abel[2], David[1] Seville) was born 28 October 1887. She married Claude Miller Kinsley. He was from Camden, Delaware.

Also see Additions & Corrections

Child of Mary Riggs and Claude Kinsley is:
71 i. William Edward[6] Kinsley.

48. Clara Faries[5] Sevil (Abel[4], Nathan Thomas[3], Abel[2], David[1] Seville) was born 22 July 1874 in Delaware, and died 28 March 1911. She married Walter Riggs Keys about 1904, son of Elijah Keys and Sarah Riggs. He was born about 1874 in Delaware.

Child is listed above under (42) Walter Riggs Keys.

51. Howell Husbands[5] Sevil (Abel[4], Nathan Thomas[3], Abel[2], David[1] Seville) was born 06 January 1881 in Delaware, and died 07 September 1934. He married Bertha Ennis about 1904, daughter of John Ennis and Mary. She was born June 1880 in Delaware, and died 1970.

Also see Additions & Corrections

Children of Howell Sevil and Bertha Ennis are:
72 i. Frances H.[6] Sevil, born about 1904 in Delaware.
73 ii. Helen Louise Sevil, born about 1907 in Delaware.
74 iii. Howell Husbands Sevil, Jr., born about April 1917 in Delaware; died 1979.

NOTES

51. Howell Husbands Sevil (1881–1934)

Occupations of Howell Husbands Sevil (from U.S. censuses and other sources):
1900 census: Store clerk
1910 census: "salesman, part owned tore"
1918 draft registration: Merchant
1920 census: Grocer
1930 census: Merchant, general store

At the time of the 1910 through 1920 censuses, and his 1918 draft registration, Howell Husbands Sevil resided on Highland Ave., Clayton, Kent Co., Delaware. At the time of the 1920 census he resided next to the family of his brother, Herman.

He is buried in the Odd Fellows Cemetery, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware (lot 410).

Bertha (Ennis) Sevil (1880–1970)
(wife of Howell Husbands Sevil)

Family information has her birth known only as 1881; in the 1900 U.S. census her birth is listed as June 1880.

At the time of the 1900 census she worked as a dressmaker.

In the 1930 census, an "Allice M. Ennis" resided with the family as a "lodger"; she was 84 years of age, single, and worked as an office clerk (presumably in the Sevil general store). Thus far no appropriately-aged "Alice" Ennis has been located in earlier censuses; and similarly Bertha's parents have also not been certainly located in censuses earlier than 1900.

Bertha Ennis Sevil is buried in the Odd Fellows Cemetery, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware (lot 410).

73. Helen Louise Sevil (ca. 1907–)

She was known as Louise Sevil.

74. Howell Husbands Sevil, Jr. (ca. 1917–1979)

He is buried in the Odd Fellows Cemetery, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware (lot 410).

WELLS FAMILY COLLATERAL GENEALOGY

Descendants of Daniel Wells

Generation No. 1

1. Daniel[1] Wells was born 31 March 1786 in New Jersey, and died 17 February 1862 in Smyrna, Delaware. He married (1) Anna Sharp. She was born 31 January 1789, was of Dividing Creek, New Jersey, and died 27 December 1836. He married (2) Rebecca Broadaway after 1836, daughter of Samuel Broadaway. She was born 03 June 1797 in Delaware, and died 12 October 1886 in Delaware.

Also see Additions & Corrections

Children of Daniel Wells and Anna Sharp are:

+	2	i.	Ann[2] Wells.
+	3	ii.	Mary Wells.[492]
+	4	iii.	William Wells.
	5	iv.	Daniel Wells, born 31 March 1816; died 13 September 1831.
+	6	v.	Joseph Wells, born 1820; died 31 January 1877.
	7	vi.	Samuel Wells, born 1825 in New Jersey; died 07 June 1860. He married Abigail R. Davis; born 12 October 1832; died 27 January 1921.
+	8	vii.	Rebecca Sharp Wells, born 13 December 1827 in Milltown, Salem Co., New Jersey; died 28 April 1909 at 512 S. 47th St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
+	9	viii.	Francis Wells, born 11 May 1830 at Wells Homestead, Appoquinimink Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware; died 1914.
	10	ix.	Catharine Wells, born about 1832 in Delaware.

[492] Mary Wells was the first-born child of Daniel and Anna Wells. In the convention of this genealogy, she is listed alphabetically among children whose birth dates are unrecorded.

Children of Daniel Wells and Rebecca Broadaway are:

11 i. Rebecca[2] Wells, born about 1838 in Delaware.

12 ii. Abel Wells, born about 1840 in Delaware.

NOTES

1. Daniel Wells (1786–1862)

Daniel Wells' date of birth is taken from his grave marker in St. Peter's Episcopal Church Cemetery, Smyrna, Delaware, which corroborates the date of death previously recorded and further notes his wife, Anna.

There may have been other children that have not been recorded by name. The 1790-1820 U.S. census data for New Jersey do not survive. The 1830 census for the Daniel Wells household (at which time he was married to Anna) tallies seven males and five females between the ages of 5 and 30. The 1840 census (at which time he was married to Rebecca) tallies three males and seven females between the ages of 11 and 30.

Family correspondence indicates that Daniel Wells' farm in Appoquinimink Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware, "was known for two generations as the Wells Homestead. * * * Daniel Wells continued to manage his New Castle county farm until about 1860 when he retired to a modest house in Smyrna and spent the remainder of his days a typical patriarch with flowing, snow-white beard."[493]

At the time of the 1850 U.S. census Daniel Wells was a farmer. In the 1860 census, no occupation is listed for him.

Residences of Daniel Wells (from U.S. censuses and family information):

Prior to 1830: Dividing Creek, Cumberland Co., New Jersey
1830-1850 censuses: Appoquinimink Hundred, New Castle Co., Delaware
1860 census: Smyrna, Duck Creek Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware

He left a will dated 15 September 1860; an earlier will was dated 7 June 1856. He is buried in St. Peter's Episcopal Church Cemetery, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware.

Anna (Sharp) Wells (1789–1836)
(wife of Daniel Wells)
"Ann"

Anna Sharp may be a descendant of Isaac Sharp (born 1730, Tetbury, Gloucestershire, England; died 1796, Mauricetown, Cumberland Co., New Jersey), so-called progenitor of the Sharps of Cumberland County.[494]

The Sharp family name occurs in the area of Dividing Creek, New Jersey. However, thus far no Wells names have been recovered from this area. An examination of the Dividing Creek cemetery yielded no occurrences of either Sharp or Wells markers there, from any time period.

Of note in the Dividing Creek area are genealogical records of "Bradway", which is very similar to Broadaway, which is apparently the maiden name of Daniel Wells' second wife, Rebecca.

Anna Sharp Wells is buried in St. Peter's Episcopal Church Cemetery, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware.

Rebecca (Broadaway) Wells (1797–1886)
(wife of Daniel Wells)

Her birth date has been calculated from information on her broken grave marker, as seen in a photograph: "Rebecca Wells Wife of Daniel Wells and Daughter of Elder Samuel [broken]oadaway Died Oct. 12, 1886. Aged 89 Years 4 Mos 9 Days". Note that the spelling of her maiden name ends with "–away" rather than "–way". Genealogical worksheets prepared by Lathrop and Roberta Mack record Rebecca's maiden name as "Broadway".

Of her parents and siblings, only the following information has thus far been determined:

Two children of Samuel Broadaway are noted:
Rebecca Broadaway (who married Daniel Wells)
Lucretia Broadaway[495]

Residences of Samuel Broadaway (from U.S. censuses):
1800: Cow Marsh Forest, Mispillion Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware*
1810: Mispillion Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware
1820: Murderkill Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware

*The 1790 U.S. census for Delaware does not survive

In the 1810 census, Samuel Broadaway is indexed as "Broadway". In the 1830 census for Delaware, only one Abner Broadaway is listed, and there are no pertinent "Broadway" listings. In the 1840 census for Delaware, there are no "Broadaway" or "Broadway" listings indexed.

In the History of Delaware, the following passage is noted in the chapter on North Murderkill Hundred, pertaining to the history of the "Baptist Church at Cow Marsh", which was the fourth Baptist church organized in Delaware, 18 July 1781:[496]

> "[On 7 September 1793, Job Meredith] conveyed to 'Joseph Flood, professor of Theology, a parcel of ground formerly called the Stand (but now called Mount Moriah) containing two acres or thereabout.
> "On the 4th of June, 1796, Joseph Flood conveyed to 'Samuel Broadaway, John Price, James Frashier, William Price and John Grewell, Trustees' of the 'Baptist Church at Mount Moriah,' the aforesaid tract of 'two acres of thereabout.'"

At the time of the 1870 U.S. census, Rebecca Broadaway Wells resided in Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware. In the same household was Rebecca "Broadway", aged 48 (relationship undetermined). At the time of the 1880 census, Rebecca Wells resided in Smyrna with her niece, Ida Faries (aged 25).

The records of the Faries Funeral Home, Smyrna, list 13 October as the date of death for Rebecca Wells.

7. Samuel Wells (1825–1860)
and his wife Abigail (Davis) Wells (1832–1921)

Samuel and Abigail Wells had no children. They are buried in St. Peter's Episcopal Church Cemetery, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware.

11. Rebecca Wells (ca. 1838–)

At the time of the 1860 U.S. census, she resided in the household of her half-sister Rebecca and Nathan T. Sevil, Duck Creek Hundred, Kent Co., Kent Co., Delaware. On that census sheet, Rebecca Wells appears to have a middle initial, "R."

Generation No. 2

2. Ann[2] Wells (Daniel[1]) She married John Van Pelt. He died before 1865.

Children of Ann Wells and John Van Pelt are:

13 i. Joseph[3] Van Pelt.
14 ii. Annie Van Pelt. She married Fowler.
15 iii. Samuel Van Pelt.

NOTES

In the early 1860s, Anna (Wells) Van Pelt [No. 2] was a boarding house keeper in Smyrna, Delaware. In the early- to mid-1870s, after she was widowed, Anna was keeping house for her then-bachelor son, Joseph, on property adjacent to or part of the original Wells Homestead.

Joseph Van Pelt [No. 13] married and had children after the early 1860s.

3. Mary[2] Wells (Daniel[1]) She married (1) William Stevens Jones. She married (2) William Stevens.

Children of Mary Wells and William Jones are:

16 i. David[3] Jones.
17 ii. Annie Jones. She married John Baylis.

Child of Mary Wells and William Stevens is:

18 i. William[3] Stevens.

NOTES

John Baylis, husband of Annie Jones [No. 17], was the son of a Philadelphia merchant. He was a farmer in Kent Co., Delaware, and in his later years resided in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

---

4. William[2] Wells (Daniel[1])

Children of William Wells are:

19 i. Catharine[3] Wells, died about 1875 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
20 ii. Daniel Wells.
21 iii. Ann Rebecca Wells.

NOTES

4. William Wells

He went West in the Gold Rush, leaving his children behind; and he was never heard from again.[497] This probably was circa 1849, the time of the California Gold Rush—and of course there is no certainty that he reached his destination. His father's first will, dated 7 June 1856, noted that William "was absent".[498]

19. Catharine Wells (–ca.1875)
"Kate"

Regarding Catharine Wells, George Buchanan Wells recalled, "My early childhood memories of her . . . present a picture of a vivacious, good-natured, attractive young woman. Later, I lost sight of her, but heard of her as having unfortunately married a man who turned out to be a worthless sort of a fellow."[499]

Catharine Wells is buried in Smyrna, Delaware.

20. Daniel Wells

Regarding Daniel Wells, George Buchanan Wells recalled that Daniel was an older brother to Catharine, "whom I remember as an employe[e] on my father's[500] farm in 1859, and some years thereafter as a railroad employe[e]."[501]

Daniel may have married. His wife may be the Wilhelmina Collins Wells (13 October 1858–18 June 1889) buried in the St. Peter's Episcopal Church Cemetery, Smyrna, Delaware.

6. Joseph[2] Wells (Daniel[1]) was born 1820, and died 31 January 1877. He married Susannah Horner. She was born 05 February 1823, and died 07 January 1915.

Children of Joseph Wells and Susannah Horner are:

+	22	i.	Henry H.[3] Wells, born 05 May 1850; died 25 December 1883.
	23	ii.	Daniel Wells, born 1852; died 04 September 1923. He married Elizabeth W.; born 1867; died 1948.
	24	iii.	Frank Wells, born 1855; died 1896. He married Ida Cooper.

NOTES

Joseph Wells, Susannah (Horner) Wells, Daniel Wells, Elizabeth W. Wells, and Frank Wells are buried in St. Peter's Episcopal Church Cemetery, Smyrna, Kent Co., Delaware.

[501] George Buchanan Wells to Roberta Smith Mack (19 Jan 1936).

6. Joseph Wells (1820–1877)

Regarding Joseph Wells, George Buchanan Wells recalled that after his father retired, Joseph Wells "[took] over the management of the farm on returning from a few years of business career in New York as head of the firm of Wells & Babbitt. I think their line was wholesale groceries . . . ." [502]

Susannah (Horner) Wells (1823–1915)
(wife of Joseph Wells)

She was known as "Susan".

23. Daniel Wells (1852–1923)

He had several children. He resided in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

24. Frank Wells (1855–1896)

He had no children.

8. Rebecca Sharp[2] Wells (Daniel[1]) was born 13 December 1827 in Milltown, Salem Co., New Jersey, and died 28 April 1909 at 512 S. 47th St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. She married Nathan Thomas Sevil 12 February 1850, son of Abel Sevil and Mary Davis. He was born 09 July 1827 in Kent Co., Delaware, and died 07 April 1867 near New Castle, New Castle Co., Delaware.

See Sevil Family collateral genealogy (section above) for information relating to Rebecca Sharp (Wells) and Nathan Sevil. Their descendants are edited out of the remainder of this collateral genealogy.

	33	vii.	Samuel Wells, born 1865; died 1932.
	34	viii.	Joseph Wells, born 1870; died after January 1936. He married Agnes Schultz.
	35	ix.	Francis Wells, born 1872; died 1872.

NOTES

9. Francis Wells (1830–after January 1936) Also see Additions & Corrections
"Frank"

George Buchanan Wells recalled, "My father took his bride to, and commenced farming on his own account, on a farm between Smyrna and Kenton (Kent Co.) directly adjoining (but on opposite sides of the highway) the farm already farmed by my uncle Nathan Sevil."[503]

Children of Joseph Watson and Susannah Fosbenner are:

	218	i.	Joseph F.[8] Watson, born 31 January 1849; died 13 January 1850.
+	219	ii.	William Fosbenner Watson, born 20 April 1851 in Maryland; died 19 September 1924.

NOTES

There is a Watson family in this genealogy who are in England and who are related through the Potts Family collateral genealogy. The Watsons of England are not otherwise related to the Watsons of the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

94. Joseph William Wesley Watson (ca. 1823–1896/1900)
"William Watson"

He was generally known as "William Watson". His formal signature, however, was "Joseph W. W. Watson" (at least as far as seen where he has signed as a witness to the 1846 deed to Upper Heathworth, owned by Captain John Smith). Also see Additions & Corrections Residence of William Watson in 1850, 1860 U.S. censuses: District 3, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. In the 1860 census slave schedule, William Watson is listed as holding 20 slaves (ten males, aged 1 to 36; ten females, aged 6 months to 37 years).

The J. G. Strong map of the 3rd Election District for Queen Anne's Co.,[508] 1866, shows two possible locations for the William Watson farm:

1) "W. Watson", north of Centreville on the north side of Corsica River (approximately along present-day Watson Rd.). Bearing in mind that he was known as "William Watson", this is most probably the J. W. W. Watson farm, further corroborated by the waterfront portrayal alluded to in the sources and illustration cited below.

2) "J.W. Watson" (bearing in mind that his given name was Joseph), north of Centreville near, and in between the point where Spaniard Neck Rd. and Burrisville Rd. meet today (2007).

It is possible that the two properties both were owned by J. W. W. Watson, although records have not thusfar been examined to establish this.

Frederick Emory's history of Queen Anne's Co., written in 1886-1887, takes brief note that a former almshouse, which had burned on 5 February 1835, was "on or near the farm now owned by Mr. J. W. Watson on the north side of Corsica Creek, near Centreville."[509]

Information given by two of the cousins of William Watson, brothers Gilbert and Edward Smith, corroborates that the "W. Watson" location, closer to Centreville and nearer to the river, was the home of our William Watson. Presumably, the "J.W. Watson" property was owned by a relation, or possibly by William Watson whose real estate information for this parcel incorporated his given name, Joseph.

Gilbert Smith wrote in an incomplete autobiography:[510]

> Do I not know the Corsica River, on whose bank my cousin William Watson feasted the gentlemen of Centerville on huge oysters, brought out steaming on the shell in peach baskets from a special fireplace under the porch? Fine view of the river and town.

Edward S. Smith, in the "Smith Genealogy", wrote of J. W. W. Watson and his home: [511]

> Leaving Centreville by Spaniard's Neck Road, just over the Corsica River on the left is the old Joseph W. Watson farm with its fine house. One of Gilbert's trips to Eastern Shore with Nora he was given a picture, a wood-cut probably from the local newspapers,[512] which shows the place I have visited twice, once as a small boy, when the family stopped there before moving to Florida, and again when with Aunt Sallie Taylor[513] and Ed Hart, of Townsend, Delaware, we attended the funeral of Cousin William Watson.
> The picture is from the Corsica River which it faces, as was customary in the days when water was the principal means to travel. It is tide-water country and the Corsica flows strongly at times. Along the road is shown shade trees between the road and the house, 2½ stor[i]es, with two floor levels. The section nearer the road is set lower on its foundation, while the other and larger portion sets higher, with a spacious porch. All is well fenced with picket fencing enclosing the lower portion which extends to the road. The farm buildings at the back of the house extend along the road.
> The cut shows a shelter and boat house on the river, with a well defined path or walk from the river, through the gate, to the lovely porch. A row boat is being moored at the landing and people are going toward the house; the men have the black broad-brimmed hats with round crowns, such as Quakers use, and the ladies have the skirts with bustles. Perhaps the Watsons, or the earlier generations, were of the Society of Friends. The farm is excellent for dairy farming. Several years ago when we stopped at "Upper Heathworth", further out Spaniard's Neck Road, Miss McKenney told us it had recently been sold and that the new owners were dressing up the place.
> A news clipping of March, 1939, told of Sam Johnson, once a slave on the Watson place, later a circus actor with Barnum Circus, a side-show attraction as a well-known ventriloquist and a strong man act of bending a 5/8 inch bar of steel by slapping it across his forearm. He was well known by the people of Starr, where he often entertained on Saturday nights. He could tap dance some and, for extra attraction, pick up a chimney glass and eat it. He had traveled around the world several times, usually as a cook or sailor, and had a smattering of several languages and a deep knowledge of human nature. He was about 90 years of age. He was held in awe by the people of his race.[514] Also see Additions & Corrections

These recollections provide several pieces of information to us. E. S. Smith's reference to "Spaniard's Neck Road" locates the property exactly where the "W. Watson" property is noted on the 1866 J. G. Strong map (cited above). He indicates that the road traveled past the house, between it and the Corsica

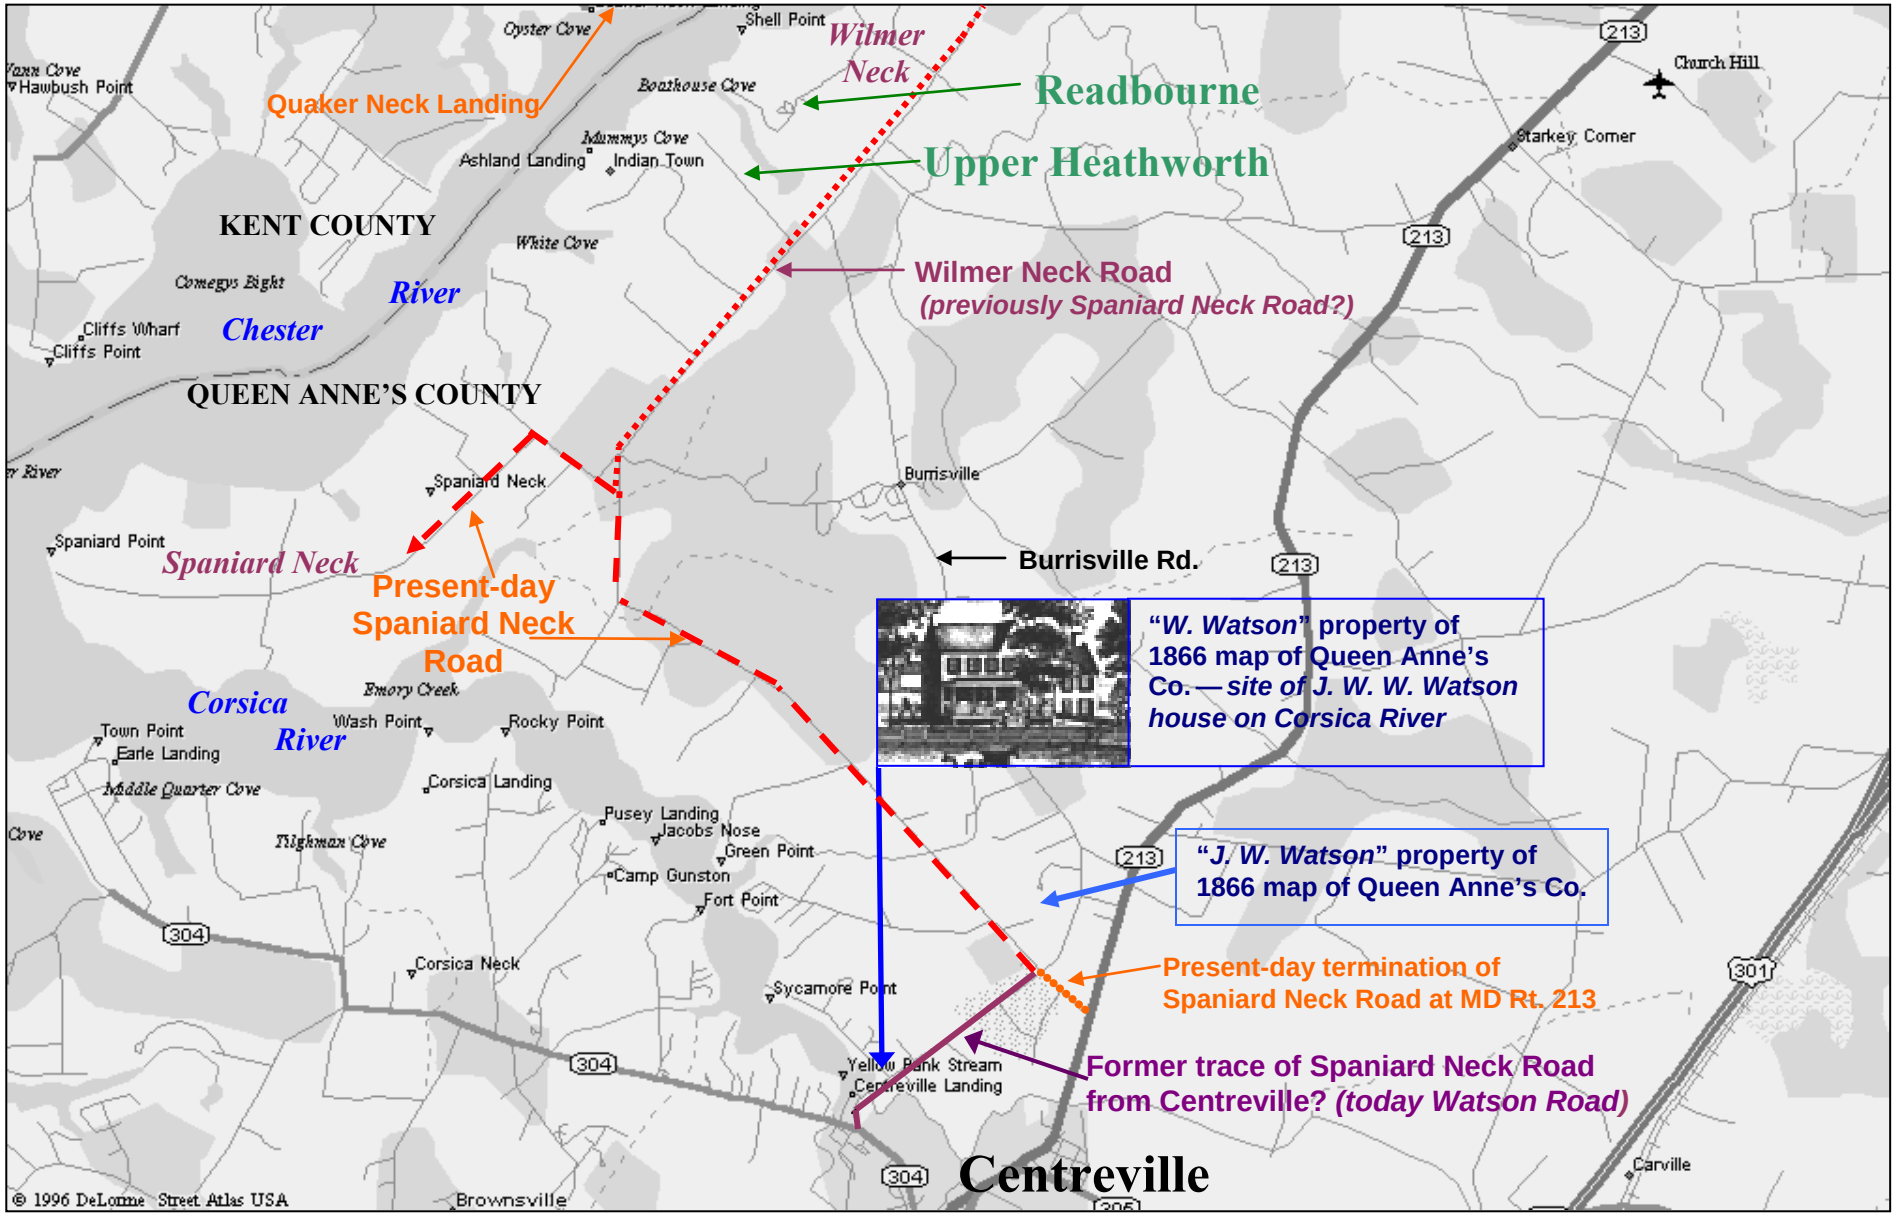
Illustration by Ray, depicting the J. W. W. Watson home on the north side of the Corsica River, west of Centreville, Maryland. (From An Illustrated Atlas of Kent and Queen Anne Counties, Md. Lake, Griffing and Stevenson, Philadelphia, 1877, p. 47.)



Watson properties as identified on the 1866 J. G. Strong map of Queen Anne's County. The J.W.W. Watson house is as depicted in the 1877 atlas illustration (reproduced herein on page II-254A), and which was mentioned by Edward S. Smith in his "Smith Genealogy" (see text). Portions of Spaniard Neck Road, the original "public road", have been renamed since the times recalled by Edward S. Smith.

Aerial photograph of the Centreville–Spaniard Neck area of Queen Anne's County, marking some of the locales mentioned in the text.

River. Interestingly, Smith refers to the Spaniard Neck Road leaving Centreville and crossing the Corsica River, which is a different alignment for the road than it is today. Today, Spaniard Neck Road reaches Rt. 301 directly, without crossing the Corsica River, north of Centreville; but in E. S. Smith's time (and earlier) it more sensibly would have gone directly into Centreville. Today this alignment is called Watson Road, which, after it crosses the Corsica River (or Corsica Creek) at its narrowed head, eventually reaches the current Spaniard Neck Road.

E. S. Smith noted that "several years ago" (thus probably ca. 1955-1960) he and his wife, Laura, had visited Upper Heathworth and were told by Miss McKenney (John McKenney's sister) that the Watson farm had recently been sold. This suggests that the house Smith described was still present at that time. Today, the community immediately on the north side of the Corsica River comprises newer model homes on small parcels of land. Farther away from the river along the road the crosses the Corsica River—Watson Road—also are a few scattered newer homes with significant farm and woodland acreage behind them.

That E. S. Smith indicated he had been to the Watson house twice helps also to identify when William Watson died. Smith visited before the family moved to Florida, thus before 1892, and again for the funeral of William Watson. Since Susannah Watson is listed as a widow in the 1900 census (taken 5 June), and the Smith family had returned to live in Philadelphia after 1896—it is doubtful that the Smith family would have traveled from Florida for the funeral—we are led to infer that William Watson died sometime in the period 1896–May 1900.

Smith also related another visit to the Watson farm, when his uncle, Captain James Smith, was about to move to Denver. Here Edward Smith again identified the farm as being close in to Centreville: [515]

> We all went to see [James Smith's family] in Centreville in their nice home and buildings used in his construction business—it was right in town on one of the main streets. Uncle Jim and Aunt Teed [Teen] were there, the sons and the daughter, Lulu, were there of course. While there we visited our cousins, the Watsons, who lived on their good farm just across the Corsica River.

Susannah H. (Fosbenner) Watson (ca. 1828–ca. 1918)
(wife of Joseph William Wesley Watson)
"Sue"

Also see Additions & Corrections

Her maiden name has also been given as Fasbenner. She was 90 years old when she died. Her sister, Eliza Fosbenner, married George Moore Smith [No. 52]. The Fosbenner family (under this and variant spellings, including the roots "Fosben–", "Fasben–", "Isben–" or "Eisben–") has not been located in U.S. censuses. It is possible that the name as suggested in the "Smith Family Genealogy" is not correct.

At the time of the 1900 census, she resided in Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, where she was a boarder in the home of Robert E. and Sarah M. Cahall. She has not been located in the 1910 census.

95. Catherine S.[7] Covington (Katherine W.[6] Smith, James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 24 October 1833 in Maryland, and died 27 September 1868. She married James O'Neil Rolph, Sr.

Children of Catherine Covington and James Rolph are:

220 i. Rolph[8]. [Died in infancy.]
221 ii. James O'Neil Rolph, Jr., born 1863 in Maryland; died 1947. He married Jennie.
222 iii. Daniel Mifflin Rolph, born 17 September 1865 in Maryland; died 11 November 1881.
223 iv. Wilbur N. Rolph, born about 1868 in Maryland.

NOTES

95. Catherine (Covington) Rolph (1833–1868)
"Kitty", "Kate"

In the "Smith Genealogy", Catherine S. Covington is listed as Katharine. Her date of death as given in the family genealogy is September 1898, surely a typographical error. She is buried in the Rolph Family cemetery, Ewingtown Rd., north of Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

Children of Catherine and James Rolph, Sr.

At the time of the 1880 U.S. census, the children, James O'Neil Rolph Jr. (1863–1947) [No. 221], Daniel Mifflin Rolph (1865–1881) [No. 222], and Wilbur N. Rolph (ca. 1868–) [No. 223], resided in the household of their aunt and her husband, William T. and Sarah Covington Massey, in Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

James O'Neil Rolph, Jr., and Daniel Mifflin Rolph are buried in the Rolph Family cemetery, Ewingtown Rd., north of Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. Daniel Rolph died by accident; his grave marker reads, "D. Miflen, son of Jas. O. and Kate S. Rolph" [sic].[516]

Wilbur N. Rolph died at about 22 years of age, or circa 1890.

109. George Robert[7] Tarbutton (Samuel Smith[7], Samuel[6], Rachel[5] Smith, James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 10 October 1841 in Kent County, Maryland. He married (1) Emma Walton. He married (2) Sarah E.

Children of George Tarbutton and Emma Walton are:
230 i. Samuel Edward[8] Tarbutton, born in Wilmington, Delaware.
231 ii. Mary S. P. Tarbutton. She married Currey.

Child of George Tarbutton and Sarah is:
232 i. Emma V.[8] Tarbutton, born 29 January 1873; died 01 September 1874.

NOTES

109. George Robert Tarbutton (1841–)

Another possible date of birth for George Robert Tarbutton is 1844. At the time of the 1870 U.S. census he was a carpenter, residing with his parents.

Emma (Walton) Tarbutton
(wife of George Robert Tarbutton)

Emma Walton resided in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

232. Emma V. Tarbutton (1873–1874)

Emma V. Tarbutton is buried in Double Creek United Methodist Church cemetery, Crumpton, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

151. John Fletcher[8] Rolph (Jane[7] Tarbutton, Samuel[6], Rachel[5] Smith, James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 06 April 1859 in Maryland, and died 1943. He married Ada Roberts 29 January 1892 in Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, daughter of Theodore Roberts and Martha Keating. She was born February 1869 in Baltimore, Maryland, and died 1937.

Children of John Rolph and Ada Roberts are:
\+ 282 i. John Fletcher[9] Rolph, Jr., born 19 April 1894; died 21 January 1979.
283 ii. Martha Roberts Rolph, born 1907; died 1986.

NOTES

151. John Fletcher Rolph (1859–1943)

1920, 1930: Liberty St., Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland

Ada (Roberts) Rolph (1869–1937)
(wife of John Fletcher Rolph, Sr.)

Ada Roberts Rolph was a member of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and in their rolls indicated to be a descendant of Capt. James Roberts (1732-1784) and of Lt. Thomas Roberts (1755-1813), of Maryland; she is also listed in Colonial Families of the United States of America.[517] There is some difficulty in confirming her ancestry through census records because in the 1870 census for Baltimore, Maryland, Ada Roberts' father is there listed as Henry F. Roberts, and in the 1880 census she and siblings are living as stepchildren in a Roberts household in Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. Thus far I have not found a genealogical record that indicates her ancestry.

John Fletcher Rolph (senior), Ada Roberts Rolph, and Martha Roberts Rolph (1907–1986) [No. 283] are buried in Chesterfield Cemetery, Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

NOTES

Isabel Roe [No. 285] never married. She resided in Baltimore, Maryland.

---

153. Charles[8] Rolph (Jane[7] Tarbutton, Samuel[6], Rachel[5] Smith, James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) He married Annie Sudler.

Child of Charles Rolph and Annie Sudler is:
286 i. Rolph[9].

154. Ida[8] Rolph (Jane[7] Tarbutton, Samuel[6], Rachel[5] Smith, James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) She married Elwood Pierce.

Child of Ida Rolph and Elwood Pierce is:
287 i. Pierce[9]. She married Walter W. Morgan.

164. Samuel J.[8] Tarbutton (William Dudley[7], Samuel[6], Rachel[5] Smith, James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 04 October 1841 in Maryland, and died 07 September 1885. He married (1) Rebecca Walls. She died 1871. He married (2) Sallie Emerson.

---

[517] National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, Vol. 63, p. 16; Colonial Families of the United States of America, Vol. 2, p. 620.

Children of Samuel Tarbutton and Rebecca Walls are:

288 i. Edith[9] Tarbutton. She married J. T. Nickerson in Sudlersville, Maryland.
\+ 289 ii. Laura Tarbutton, born 1864 in Maryland.
290 iii. William Tarbutton, born about 1868 in Maryland.
\+ 291 iv. Cooper J. Tarbutton, born 25 December 1870 in Maryland.

Child of Samuel Tarbutton and Sallie Emerson is:

292 i. Erma B.[9] Tarbutton, born 16 December 1883; died 31 October 1889.

NOTES

Occupations of Samuel J. Tarbutton (1841–1885) [No. 164] (from U.S. censuses):
1860: Farm hand
1870: Storekeeper

At the time of the 1870 U.S. census, Samuel J. Tarbutton resided in the 1st/2nd Districts (Crumpton post office), Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. Neither Samuel J. Tarbutton nor any of his children other than Cooper Tarbutton [No. 291] have been located in the 1880 U.S. census. At that time, Cooper resided with his grandparents, William and Mary Tarbutton.

Samuel J. Tarbutton, the subject here, may be the Samuel J. Tarbutton who is buried near William D. and Mary E. Tarbutton in Sudlersville Cemetery, Sudlersville Rd. (Rt. 300) and Sudlersville Cemetery Rd., Sudlersville, Maryland. The published transcription of the marker dates for Samuel J. Tarbutton is "Oct. 4, 1841?–Sep. 7, 1885".[518]

Erma B. Tarbutton (1883–1889) [No. 292] is buried in Sudlersville Cemetery.

168. John[8] Tarbutton (William Dudley[7], Samuel[6], Rachel[5] Smith, James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 06 September 1850 in Maryland, and died 20 December 1921. He married Sallie Sinickson.

Children of John Tarbutton and Sallie Sinickson are:

293 i. Harry[9] Tarbutton.
\+ 294 ii. Richard Tarbutton, born about 1891.
295 iii. Mary Tarbutton. She married Gill Price.
296 iv. Russell Tarbutton, born in Wilmington, Delaware.
\+ 297 v. Mary Tarbutton.

NOTES

John Tarbutton resided in Cecil Co., Maryland.

According to the Smith Family genealogical scroll prepared by Edward S. Smith, Sallie Sinickson's surname could be spelled "Sinickson", "Serrickson", or "Sirrickson".

171. Hiram Goodhand[8] Tarbutton (Samuel Smith[7], Samuel[6], Rachel[5] Smith, James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 22 February 1857 in Maryland, and died 14 May 1909. He married Mary L. Himmelwright 07 January 1880, daughter of E. Himmelwright and Margaret. She was born 03 November 1858 in Maryland, and died 21 July 1951.

Child of Hiram Tarbutton and Mary Himmelwright is:
\+ 298 i. Edward H.[9] Tarbutton, born 04 April 1881 in Maryland.

NOTES

Occupations of Hiram Goodhand Tarbutton (1857–1909) [No. 171] (from U.S. censuses):
1880, 1900: Farmer

Residences of Hiram Goodhand Tarbutton (from U.S. censuses):
1880: Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland
1900: Crumpton, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland (he and his family resided with his father)

Hiram Goodhand Tarbutton and his wife, Mary (Himmelwright) Tarbutton (1858–1851), are buried in the Crumpton Cemetery, Rts. 544/290, Crumpton, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

---

174. George[8] Spry (Samuel[7], Anna Maria[6] Tarbutton, Rachel[5] Smith, James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 17 October 1859 in Maryland, and died 07 December 1899. He married Clara Baxter. She was born 1864, and died 1941.

Child of George Spry and Clara Baxter is:
299 i. Thomas Earle[9] Spry, born January 1896; died 21 March 1896.

NOTES

George Spry (1859–1899) [No. 174], his wife, Clara Baxter Spry (1864–1941), and Thomas Earle Spry (1896–1896) [No. 299] are buried in Church Hill Cemetery, Church Hill, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

---

176. Helen R.[8] Spry (John Lorenzo[7], Anna Maria[6] Tarbutton, Rachel[5] Smith, James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 08 June 1882 in Maryland, and died 31 May 1952. She married Joseph E. Baxter. He was born about 1881 in Maryland.

Children of Helen Spry and Joseph Baxter are:
300 i. Hilda[9] Baxter, born about 1905 in Maryland.
301 ii. Eva Baxter, born about 1908 in Maryland.

NOTES

Helen (Spry) Baxter (1882–1952) [No. 176] is buried in Church Hill Cemetery, Church Hill, Maryland.

---

178. Samuel Olin[8] Spry (John Lorenzo[7], Anna Maria[6] Tarbutton, Rachel[5] Smith, James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 17 October 1889 in Chestertown, Maryland, and died 22 February 1918. He married Lillian C. Pippin January 1914, daughter of Titus Pippin and Emma Colescott. She was born March 1892 in Maryland.

Children of Samuel Spry and Lillian Pippin are:

302 i. John L.[9] Spry, born about 1915 in Maryland.
303 ii. Samuel Olin Spry, Jr., born about October 1917 in Maryland.

NOTES

Samuel Olin Spry (1889–1918) [No. 178] is buried in Church Hill Cemetery, Church Hill, Maryland.

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census, widow Lillian (Pippin) Spry (1892–) and Samuel Olin Spry, Jr. (ca. 1917–) [No. 303] resided with her father in Delaware. Her other son, John Spry (ca. 1915–) [No. 302] resided with his uncle, Sanford E. Spry, in Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. By the time of the 1930 census, she had remarried and both of her sons resided with her.

Smith Family genealogy continues after the following collateral genealogy

Pippin Family
Collateral Genealogy
(22 descendants)

The genealogy of the Pippin family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Robert Pippin

Generation No. 1

1. Robert[1] Pippin was born about 1819 in Maryland. He married Lucinda. She was born 1821 in Delaware, and died 1885.

Children of Robert Pippin and Lucinda are:

2 i. Sallie[2] Pippin, born about 1841 in Maryland.
3 ii. Marian Pippin, born about1845 in Maryland.
4 iii. Lucinda Pippin, born about 1852 in Maryland.
\+ 5 iv. Titus Irons Pippin, born October 1854 in Maryland; died 1933.
6 v. Clementina Pippin, born about 1857 in Maryland.
7 vi. Robert Pippin, born about 1858 in Maryland.

8 vii. Sarah Pippin, born about 1837 in Maryland.

NOTES

Robert Pippin (ca. 1819–) [No. 1] was a farmer.

Residences of Robert Pippin (from U.S. censuses):
1840, 1850: Caroline Co., Maryland
1860: Templeville (post office), Caroline Co., Maryland

In the 1860 census he is registered as "Pippen". Also in the 1860 household is living a James Pippin, aged 8, whose relationship to Robert Pippin is unknown; he is listed among the other farm residents who include five railroad hands, two farm hands, and a servant.

Generation No. 2

5. Titus Irons[2] Pippin (Robert[1]) was born October 1854 in Maryland, and died 1933. He married Emma E. Colescott 19 December 1875 in Marydel, Caroline Co., Maryland. She was born October 1857 in Delaware, and died 1954.

Children of Titus Pippin and Emma Colescott are:

9 i. Pippin[3], died before June 1900.
10 ii. Nellie Paxon Pippin, born March 1879 in Maryland.
11 iii. Katie B. Pippin, born March 1881 in Maryland.
12 iv. Ella Pippin, born October 1884 in Maryland.
\+ 13 v. Titus Irons Pippin, Jr., born July 1886 in Delaware; died 1978.
14 vi. William E. Pippin, born August 1888 in Maryland.
15 vii. Pippin, born about March 1890; died January 1891.
\+ 16 viii. Lillian C. Pippin, born March 1892 in Maryland.
17 ix. George W. Pippin, born August 1895 in Maryland.
18 x. Millard F. Pippin, born May 1897 in Maryland.
19 xi. Elizabeth L. Pippin, born May 1898 in Maryland.
20 xii. Madaline E. Pippin, born about 1902 in Maryland.
21 xiii. James Robert Pippin, born 23 November 1903 in Maryland; died 06 April 1991 in Dover, Kent, Delaware. He married (1) Pearl S.; born 02 August 1905; died 09 October 1973. He married (2) Hilda Mae Graham about 1974; born 09 December 1907 in Kent Co., Delaware; died 17 February 1995 in Dover, Kent Co., Delaware.

NOTES

5. Titus Irons Pippin (1854–1933)

Occupations of Titus Irons Pippin (from U.S. censuses):
1880: Farmer
1900–1920: Farmer, general farm
1930: Farmer

Residences of Titus Irons Pippin (from U.S. censuses):
1870: 1st District, Caroline Co., Maryland [in household of John W. Temple, farmer]
1880: Hendersons, Caroline Co., Maryland
1900: Dixon, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland
1910: Road leading from Templeville to Schenk Corner [Templeville-Peters Corner Rd. today], Dixon, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland
1920: District 4, Kent Co., Delaware
1930: Wyoming Ave., 5th District, Kent Co., Delaware

The marriage of Titus Pippin and Emma Colescott was officiated by Rev. E. H. Hynson.

Titus Irons Pippin is buried in Odd Fellows Cemetery, Camden, Kent Co., Delaware.

There is a variety of apple called the "Titus Pippin", which originated around 1841 in Hempstead, Long Island, New York. This does not seem to be related to the Titus Pippin here recorded, since this family seems to have long been in Caroline Co., Maryland, at least since the 1830 and 1840 U.S. censuses (and further, that Robert Pippin was born in Maryland ca. 1819).

Emma (Colescott) Pippin (1857–1854)
(wife of Titus Irons Pippin)

The 1900 U.S. census indicates that Emma had given birth to 12 children, ten of whom survived at the time of the census; thus there is an additional child, not in the list given above, who did not survive at that time.

She is buried in Odd Fellows Cemetery, Camden, Kent Co., Delaware.

17. George W. Pippin (1895–)

At the time of the 1910 U.S. census, he was a laborer on a horse farm.

21. James Robert Pippin (Robert Pippin) (1903–1991)

At the time of the 1920 census, he was a laborer on a horse farm. At the time of the 1930 census he was a farmer.

Generation No. 3

13. Titus Irons[3] Pippin, Jr. (Titus Irons[2], Robert[1]) was born July 1886 in Delaware, and died 1978. He married Ella Davis. She was born 1888, and died 1963.

Child of Titus Pippin and Ella Davis is:
22 i. Pippin[4].

NOTES

Titus Irons Pippin, Jr. (1896–1978) [No. 13] last resided in Dover, Kent Co., Delaware. He and his wife, Ella (Davis) Pippin (1888–1963) are buried in Templeville Cemetery, Templeville, Caroline Co., Maryland.

---

16. Lillian C.[3] Pippin (Titus Irons[2], Robert[1]) was born March 1892 in Maryland. She married (1) Samuel Olin Spry January 1914, son of John Spry and Mary Cahoon. He was born 17 October 1889 in Chestertown, Maryland, and died 22 February 1918. She married (2) John B. Cleaver between 1920–1930. He was born about 1890 in Delaware.

See main Smith family genealogy for information relating to Samuel Olin and Lillian (Pippin) Spry and their descendants.

NOTES

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, John B. Cleaver was a plumbing supplies salesman, residing at 216 Duffield Ave., Upper Moreland Twp., Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

End of Pippin Family collateral genealogy

183. Julie Ann[8] Baynard (Ann[7] Watson, Henrietta Young[6] Smith, James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 30 June 1844 in Caroline County, Maryland, and died 22 January 1931. She married Charles Hexford Martin, Sr. He was born about 1825 in Maryland.

Children of Julie Baynard and Charles Martin are:

304 i. Edwina B.[9] Martin, born 29 March 1864; died after November 1934. She married William Elsmore Hoyt.
305 ii. Mary E. Martin, born about 1869 in Maryland.
306 iii. Baynard Martin, born July 1870; died 16 February 1882 in "Lentley", Maryland.
307 iv. Charles Hexford Martin, Jr., born 01 May 1872; died 05 July 1940. He married Cathleen Burton 01 January 1894; died after 1930.
308 v. C. H. Martin, born about July 1870 in Maryland.

NOTES

At the time of the 1870 U.S. census, Charles Hexford Martin, Sr. (ca. 1825–) and his family resided with his wife's family in Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland. At that time he was a lumber dealer.

Edwina (Martin) Hoyt (1864–after November 1934) [No. 304] is mentioned as alive in a letter from J. Lathrop Mack in November 1935.[519]

The 1870 census, taken in August, lists a C. H. Martin, aged 1 month, who may have been a child who did not survive.

---

185. Sarah Virginia[8] Baynard (Ann[7] Watson, Henrietta Young[6] Smith, James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 12 March 1848, and died 08 June 1923. She married George A. Mather.

Children of Sarah Baynard and George Mather are:

\+ 309 i. Robert B.[9] Mather, born 14 March 1877.
310 ii. Wilford B. Mather, born 01 June 1881. He married Laura M. Eager 21 February 1911.
\+ 311 iii. Louis Hardcastle Mather, born 19 August 1884; died 21 October 1918.

188. James Watson[8] Baynard (Ann[7] Watson, Henrietta Young[6] Smith, James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 04 January 1853 in Maryland, and died 03 March 1926 in Salisbury, Maryland. He married Maggie Brown. She was born August 1853 in Maryland.

Children of James Baynard and Maggie Brown are:

312 i. Florence[9] Baynard. [Died in infancy.]
\+ 313 ii. Ella T. Baynard, born September 1881 in Maryland; died 11 October 1940.
\+ 314 iii. Harry Clayland Baynard, Sr.

193. Samuel A.[8] Townsend (Mary[7] Smith, John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born about February 1860 in Delaware, and died 30 September 1938. He married Mary Ellen Goebel, daughter of John Goebel and Theresa. She was born about 1866 in Pennsylvania or Delaware, and died after 1929.

Children of Samuel Townsend and Mary Goebel are:
315 i. Elizabeth[9] Townsend, born about 1898 in Pennsylvania. She married Bowen.
316 ii. Gladys Townsend, born about 1900 in Pennsylvania. She married Rankin about 1923.

NOTES

193. Samuel A. Townsend (1860–1938?)

Samuel A. Townsend was a successful wholesale produce merchant on Dock Street in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. There is a discrepancy regarding his date of death, which is listed in family information as having occurred in 1938, but in the 1930 U.S. census his wife is listed as a widow. The Philadelphia city directory for 1930 (prepared 1929) gives a home address for Samuel A. Townsend that differs from the address given for Mrs. Townsend in the 1930 census (see below). The city directories for 1931-1934 were not published. The fact that the 1935/1936 directory continues to list the Townsend produce business may not necessarily indicate that Samuel A. Townsend was alive; but it is noted here that this directory also does not list a home address for him, nor for Mrs. Townsend, whose date of death is known only to be after the 1930 census. Also see Additions & Corrections

The "Smith Genealogy" notes about Samuel A. Townsend: [520]

> Samuel A. Townsend was a successful commission merchant on Dock Street, Philadelphia, and was later interested in banking. He was active in the Philadelphia Society of the Sons of Delaware and was at one time its president.[521] He told me that he was rated as a millionaire. This may have been affected by the Depression.

---

[521] Although nothing has thus far been located regarding the Sons of Delaware, a 1921 newspaper article notes that Samuel A. Townsend had been elected "second vice president" of the organization. The article reported on an Prohibitionist speaker at the organization's annual banquet, who discussed the activities of the Anti-Saloon League. ("Wheeler Speaks Here: Tells Sons of Delaware New York Is Too Wet to Be Wrung Out", The Philadelphia Inquirer, 8 Dec 1921.)

From the information about his residences (see below), it is not possible to ascertain whether the onset of the Depression greatly affected Samuel A. Townsend. In the 1929-1930 Philadelphia city directory, his address is an upscale apartment building overlooking exclusive Rittenhouse Square, on the northwest corner of 19th and Walnut Sts. (still today an exclusive address). However, after this no further residential information is forthcoming for him. Whether he had died (as alluded to above) or fallen on harder times is undetermined. In any case, the 1930 census address for Mrs. Townsend was a respectable, although not exclusive, address (since then obliterated by part of the University of Pennsylvania campus).

Residences of Samuel A. Townsend (from U.S. censuses):

1910: indexed in 27th Ward, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, but the proper census sheet has not been located.

1920: Samuel and Mary Townsend are listed on a page combining 3812-3830 Chestnut St., Philadelphia; presumably an apartment building

1930: Mary E. Townsend is listed as a widowed head of household, 254 S. 38th St., Philadelphia; residing with her are daughters Gladys and Elizabeth Townsend. Note the discrepancy with Samuel A. Townsend's date of death in 1938.

The Philadelphia city directories for 1882-1935 list Samuel A. Townsend's residences, occupations, and business addresses as follows. (The city directories indicate the usage year; they were usually reflect information from the previous calendar year.)

1882, bookkeeper, home Merchants' House

1883, bookkeeper, home 207 Vine St.; 1884 (no Samuel A. Townsend listed, not distinguished among several Samuel Townsends)

A news article from 1909 reveals when the Townsend–Mills partnership ended and indicates the disposition of the commercial property at 124 Dock St.:[523]

> After spirited bidding, participated in by Samuel A. Townsend and Charles H. Mills, formerly business partners at 124 Dock street, the property was sold at public sale Thursday by Samuel T. Freeman & co., to Mr. Mills for $36,500. The property includes a three-story warehouse 20 by 83 feet in dimensions, assessed at $20,000.
> The sale was a peremptory one to close the partnership of Townsend & Mills, and each of the former business associates attended the sale, determined to secure the property, in consequence of which a much higher figure was realized than would otherwise have been the case perhaps.

Today, the original properties no longer stand. Dock Street in this area is demarcated in the 100-block by a Korean War memorial on the south side of the street; on the north side is a two-story Sheraton Hotel. At the intersection of Dock and 2nd Sts., the east side is subjoined by the hotel property, the west side is a modern restaurant, and 2nd Street no longer passes to the South; instead it is blocked by an artificial hillock surmounted by three tall condominium buildings (originally apartments, designed by renowned architect I. M. Pei). Indeed, the entirety of the intensely commercial Dock Street area, which adjoined Delaware Avenue and the docks along the Delaware River, is now devoted largely to public park space, though woefully underused. All of the docks in this area were razed in the creation of Penn's Landing, a large riverside public space that now hosts an outdoor entertainment area, a museum, and maritime exhibits including the Spanish-American War cruiser U.S.S. Olympia and the WWII submarine U.S.S. Becuna. Interstate 95 also blasts through here, sunken in a trench covered over intermittently by the little-used park space. The highway destroyed a wide swath of historic marine-centered mercantile real estate and culturally isolated the Delaware River from the historic Old City and Society Hill sections of town. Nothing south of 2nd St. and east of Walnut St. would be even vaguely recognized by Samuel A. Townsend.

Mary (Goebel) Townsend (ca. 1866–after 1929)
(wife of Samuel A. Townsend)

On the Smith Family genealogical scroll prepared by Edward S. Smith, Mary Goebel is listed as Mayme Goebel. Also see notes with Samuel A. Townsend.

Regarding her family, all that is known at this time relates to her parents and siblings, as follows:

---

[523] "Pace of Central Market Predicts Busy Fall Season. Many Sales of Downtown Realty Negotiated Last Week", The Philadelphia Inquirer, 5 Sep 1909.

John Goebel was born about 1832 in Germany. He married Theresa. She was born about 1832 in Germany.

Children of John Goebel and Theresa are:

i. Anna Goebel, born about 1855 in Pennsylvania.
ii. Morris Goebel, born about 1860 in Pennsylvania.
iii. Theresa Goebel, born about 1862 in Pennsylvania.
iv. Mary Ellen Goebel, born about 1866 in Pennsylvania or Delaware; died after 1929.
v. John Goebel, born about 1868 in Pennsylvania.

Notes

At the time of the 1880 U.S. census, the following information is had for members of the Goebel family:

John Geobel was a hotel keeper, residing on Germantown Ave., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Whether his residence also was the hotel is uncertain.

Anna Goebel (ca. 1855–) worked in a cotton mill.

Morris Goebel was a painter.

315. Elizabeth (Townsend) Bowen (ca. 1898–)

At the time of the 1930 census she was residing at 254 S. 38th St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; her occupation was a saleswoman for a plumbing supply company.

There were no children from her marriage.

316. Gladys (Townsend) Rankin (ca. 1900–)

At the time of the 1930 census she resided with her mother and sister at 254 S. 38th St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; her occupation is a saleswoman for a printing company.

J 194. John S.[8] Townsend (Mary[7] Smith, John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born about 1864 in Delaware. He married Bertha Trout.

Child of John Townsend and Bertha Trout is:

317 i. William J.[9] Townsend.

NOTES

Bertha Trout resided in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

William J. Townsend married and had one child. He was in real estate with Quick & Sons, in the West Philadelphia section of Philadelphia.[524]

199. James Robert Lee[8] Smith (James[7], John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 09 October 1870 in Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died January 1950 in Englewood, Arapahoe Co., Colorado. He married Alice Penfield Arnold 16 September 1908 in Hyde Park Presbyterian Church, Denver, Colorado, daughter of Samuel Arnold and Annia Stewart. She was born 13 April 1878 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey, and died 29 January 1941 in Englewood, Arapahoe Co., Colorado.

Children of James Smith and Alice Arnold are:

+	322	i.	Robert Arnold[9] Smith, born 18 October 1909 in Denver, Colorado; died 1992.
+	323	ii.	Wilbur Edward Smith, born 06 November 1921 in Englewood, Arapahoe Co., Colorado.

NOTES

199. James Robert Lee Smith (1870–150)

[525] Obituary from unidentified newspaper (clipping).

Like his father, James R. L. Smith was a carpenter working in the Denver area. In July 1921, he was "appointed" for a six-month probationary period in the U.S. Army Quartermaster Corps in Denver[527]; he worked as what we today would call a civilian contractor, for which he was paid $150 per month. He seems to have frequented government positions, at least with the Army, because on 7 April 1936 he had a letter of recommendation from the Office of the Quartermaster at the Army's Fitzsimons General Hospital, which indicated:

> Mr. J. R. Smith was employed at Fitzsimons General Hospital as a carpenter for six years. His services were satisfactory in every respect. He was separated from the Government service on account of reduction of force. I take pleasure in recommending him to any one who is in need of a carpenter.[528]

According to an autobiographical note by his son, Wilbur Edward (Ed) Smith, James R. L. Smith also had worked on the Fitzsimons Hospital during its construction, during World War I.

1930 census: Carpenter, Recuperation Camp
1930-1936: Carpenter, Fitzsimons General Hospital, U.S. Army, Denver, Colorado

J.R.L. Smith was, like his father, a finishing carpenter and home builder. They worked together until Capt. James' death, after which J.R.L. continued his trade.[529]

[526] The "Smith Genealogy", p. 36, states that James Smith [No. 89] "was personally acquainted with General Robert E. Lee" and that there were photos of them together. These photos have not been located. I inquired of W. Ed Smith, son of James Robert Lee Smith and grandson of James Smith, whether he knew of any such photographs, but he does not.

[528] Guy R. Martin, Supt. of Utilities, Fitzsimons General Hospital, 7 Apr 1936; copy from W. Ed Smith. The "Fitzsimons General Hospital, U.S. Army" in Aurora, Colorado, was also known as the Fitzsimons Army Hospital. It was established during World War I, "arising from the need to treat the large number of casualties from chemical [gas] weapons in Europe" and because Denver was also a recognized center in the treatment of tuberculosis. First called "Army Hospital 21", it opened in Fall 1918, and soon afterward was renamed after Lt. William T. Fitzsimons, the first U.S. casualty in the war. Later, the hospital was known as the Fitzsimons Army Medical Center, occupying 577 acres. By 1999, the Army closed the hospital, and as of 2004 it was being redeveloped for civilian use as the Fitzsimons Medical Campus. 1910 census: 2552 Gilpin St., Denver, Colorado
1920, 1930 censuses: 4321 S. Bannock St., Englewood, Arapahoe Co., Colorado

At the time of the 1910 U.S. census, James and Alice Arnold lived two houses away from her parents.

At the S. Bannock St. address, from 1927, also lived Annia Maria (Stewart) Arnold. Prior to that, and until the death of her husband, Samuel Celden Arnold, they had resided two houses away.

The marriage of James R. L. Smith and Alice Arnold (1878–1941) was officiated by Rev. Charles G. Williams. It is through the Arnold family that a genealogical link is made to Col. Jacob Arnold, who owned the Arnold Tavern in Morristown, New Jersey, where during the Revolutionary War Gen. George Washington made his headquarters in 1777 during the Continental Army's first encampment at this town. (See Arnold Family collateral genealogy, below.) The tavern no longer stands. Also through the Arnold family in turn, genealogical connections are made to the Ford family, who trace their ancestry in America to the Widow Foord who with four children arrived at Plymouth Plantation aboard the Fortune in 1621, a year after the arrival of the Mayflower. (See the Ford Family collateral genealogy, below.)

W. Ed Smith recalled that his father owned four lots with a three-bedroom home, and the grounds were planted with as many different kinds of trees as he could manage, an avocational indulgence. "The grade school a block away would bring the children down to study the different trees."[531]

W. Ed Smith also relates a story about his father having walked up the Pikes Peak cog railroad at night so as not to get caught, and riding the train down the following day.[532]

Arnold Family
Collateral Genealogy [533]
(43 descendants)

The genealogy of the Arnold family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Stephen Arnold

Generation No. 1

1. Stephen[1] Arnold was born 11 November 1695 in Woodbridge, New Jersey. He married Rachel. She was born 21 April 1697, and died 01 July 1786.

Child of Stephen Arnold and Rachel is:
\+ 2 i. Samuel[2] Arnold, born 01 November 1726 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey; died 03 October 1764 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey.

NOTES

Rachel Arnold, wife of Stephen Arnold [No. 1], is buried in First Presbyterian Church yard, Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey.

Generation No. 2

2. Samuel[2] Arnold (Stephen[1]) was born 01 November 1726 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey, and died 03 October 1764 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey. He married Phebe Ford 16 October 1748 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey, daughter of Jacob Foord and Hannah Baldwin. She was born 20 February 1728/29 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey, and died 02 August 1819 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey.

Children of Samuel Arnold and Phebe Ford are:

+	3	i.	Jacob[3] Arnold, born 14 December 1749 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey; died 01 March 1827 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey.
	4	ii.	John Arnold, born 19 November 1752; died 14 December 1756.
	5	iii.	Hannah Arnold, born 22 July 1754; died 03 June 1755.
	6	iv.	Samuel Arnold, born 08 July 1757 in Washington Valley, New Jersey; died 23 November 1760.
	7	v.	Phebe Arnold, born 24 October 1760 in Washington Valley, New Jersey.
	8	vi.	Anne Arnold, born 27 March 1762 in Washington Valley, New Jersey; died 17 September 1807.

13	v.	Jacob Arnold, born 29 November 1781 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey; died 1821.
14	vi.	Abraham Brasher Arnold, born 29 March 1783 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey; died 1801.
15	vii.	Jacob Arnold, born 16 September 1786 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey; died 1826.
16	viii.	Charles Arnold, born 29 September 1788 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey; died 1851.
17	ix.	Eliza Maria Arnold, born 02 March 1792 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey.

Children of Jacob Arnold and Sarah Nixon are:

	18	i.	Phebe Ann Phillips[4] Arnold, born 08 April 1808 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey; died 16 August 1883.
	19	ii.	Mary Ann Arnold, born 23 September 1810 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey; died 05 August 1852.
+	20	iii.	Silas Howell Arnold, born 22 April 1812 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey.
	21	iv.	William Henry Arnold, born 02 February 1815 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey; died 09 June 1879.
	22	v.	Elizabeth Maria Arnold, born 03 May 1817 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey; died March 1865.
+	23	vi.	Samuel Dunning Arnold, born 22 July 1818 in Chatten, New Jersey; died 01 February 1883 in Drakestown, New York.
	24	vii.	Edward Augustus Arnold, born 08 March 1822 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey; died 20 March 1891.

NOTES

Col. Jacob Arnold (1749–19827) [No. 3] served in the Revolutionary War. At Morristown[534], New Jersey, he owned the Arnold Tavern on The Green, where Gen. George Washington made his headquarters during 6 January–28 May 1777, during the first of two winter encampments made by the Continental Army at Morristown. During the second encampment, in 1779–1780, Gen. Nathaniel Greene made his quarters at the Arnold Tavern (while Washington established his headquarters at the Ford mansion east of town). The tavern continued in its capacity until the mid-19th century, when it was turned into stores with apartments above. In 1886, the building was moved from The Green to Mount Kemble Ave. in Morris Township and, expanded, served as a hospital. In 1918 it burned. A commemorative sign placed by the state near The Green marks the tavern's original location. An office building stands on the site today.

In November 1780, the Marquis de Chastelleux, a French general, visited the Arnold Tavern and left the following notes, which are incorporated in undated correspondence from a Park Ranger:[535]

> "'. . . on entering the inn of Mr. Arnold, I saw a dining room adorned with looking glasses and handsome mahogany furniture, and a table spread for twelve persons.' Chastelleux spent the night in this 'comfortable inn' and he described Mr. Arnold as: 'an honest man and a good Whig, who has nothing in common with Benedict Arnold'. An 1807 newspaper advertisement describes the tavern: 'The house is large and commodious and contains thirteen rooms with thirteen fireplaces, one of which is fifty by twenty feet and is one of the best in the State for public assembly room. There are on the premises a large barn with very commodious stables—a good well of water near the door together with an aqueduct and an ice house well filled with ice—an excellent garden and every other convenience necessary for a public stand.'"

In 1789, Jacob Arnold built a house in Washington Valley, three miles west of Morristown, which remained in the Arnold family until 1923. The house today is privately owned and is surrounded with sufficient vegetation and fencing so as to preclude all but a glimpse of it.

Jacob Arnold was a slave owner, as testified by the passenger manifest of the ship Ann & Elizabeth bound for Port Roseway. It notes: "Bill Browne, 24, stout fellow, (Nicholas Browne). Formerly slave to Jacob Arnold, Morristown, New Jersey; left him three years ago."[536]

Jacob Arnold is buried in the First Presbyterian Church yard, Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey.

[534] Today the National Park Service administers Morristown National Historic Park, in several locations in and near Morristown, New Jersey. During the encampment of the severe winter of 1779-1780, Washington took as his headquarters the Ford mansion, which in 1777 had been a barracks for Delaware troops. The Ford family is the maternal lineage of Jacob Arnold.

Sarah (Nixon) Arnold (1783–1843), wife of Jacob Arnold, is buried in the First Presbyterian Church yard, Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey.

Generation No. 4

20. Silas Howell[4] Arnold (Jacob[3], Samuel[2], Stephen[1]) was born 22 April 1812 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey. He married Martha Louise Pierson, daughter of Samuel Pierson and Hannah Hinds. She was born 05 May 1813 in Morris Co., New Jersey, and died 27 February 1889 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey.

Children of Silas Arnold and Martha Pierson are:

	25	i.	Eliza Johnes[5] Arnold.
	26	ii.	Emma Elizabeth Arnold.
	27	iii.	Frances Caroline Arnold.
	28	iv.	Hannah Isabella Arnold.
	29	v.	Isaac Gaston Arnold.
	30	vi.	Jacob Ogden Arnold.
	31	vii.	Willis Gaylord Arnold.
	32	viii.	Samuel Pierson Arnold, born 1843.

NOTES

Through the ancestry of Martha Louise Pierson (1813–1889), wife of Silas Howell Arnold, is the Garrigues family, descendants probably of Huguenots who fled religious persecution in France about 1700 and eventually emigrated to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, about 1713-1714. (See the Garrigues Family collateral genealogy, below, for more information.)

23. Samuel Dunning[4] Arnold (Jacob[3], Samuel[2], Stephen[1]) was born 22 July 1818 in Chatten, New Jersey, and died 01 February 1883 in Drakestown, New York. He married Mary H. Drake 01 February 1843 in Drakestown, New York. She was born 1822 in New Jersey, and died 24 January 1907.

Children of Samuel Arnold and Mary Drake are:

	33	i.	Alice[5] Arnold, born about 1845.
+	34	ii.	Samuel Celden Arnold, born 05 May 1848 in Chatten, New Jersey; died 10 March 1919 in Englewood, Arapahoe Co., Colorado.
	35	iii.	Julia Arnold, born about 1850.
	36	iv.	William Arnold, born about 1853 in New Jersey.
	37	v.	Elisa Arnold, born about 1855.
	38	vi.	Nettie Arnold, born about 1857.
	39	vii.	Nancy Arnold, born about 1860.
	40	viii.	Joan Arnold, born about 1864.

Generation No. 5

34. Samuel Celden[5] Arnold (Samuel Dunning[4], Jacob[3], Samuel[2], Stephen[1]) was born 05 May 1848 in Chatten, New Jersey, and died 10 March 1919 in Englewood, Arapahoe Co., Colorado. He married Annia Maria Stewart 18 April 1871 in New York, New York, daughter of Theador Stewart and Susan Southard. She was born 1850 in New York, New York, and died 19 January 1930 in Englewood, Arapahoe Co., Colorado.

Children of Samuel Arnold and Annia Stewart are:

	41	i.	Samuel[6] Arnold, born about 1871 in New Jersey.
	42	ii.	George Arnold, born about 1874 in New Jersey.
+	43	iii.	Alice Penfield Arnold, born 13 April 1878 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey; died 29 January 1941 in Englewood, Arapahoe Co., Colorado.

NOTES

Regarding, Samuel Celden Arnold (1848–1919) [No. 34], the (Denver?) Daily News for 8 March 1903 includes an article about founding and finishing the "silver" (i.e., brass) ship's bell for the cruiser U.S.S. Denver (C-14) [537], paid for by public donations. S. C. Arnold is mentioned and photographed as one of the foundry employees working on the bell at the Vulcan iron and brass works on Blake Street.[538] The Denver was launched 21 June 1902 by Neafie and Levy Ship and Engine Building Co., Philadelphia, and commissioned 17 May 1904; decommissioned 14 February 1931. The bell was transferred to the U.S.S. Denver (CL-58) in 1942 and remained aboard during this ship's campaigns in the Pacific theater, World War II. After 11 years in mothballs, the bell was returned in 1960 to Denver, Colorado, where it is displayed in the Denver City and County Building.[539]

Occupations of Samuel Celden Arnold (from U.S. census and other sources):
1903 newspaper article: Brass founder
1910 census: "machinist, erecting machinery"

At the time of the 1910 U.S. census, Samuel Celden Arnold resided at 2528 Gilpin St., Denver, Colorado.

Generation No. 6

43. Alice Penfield[6] Arnold (Samuel Celden[5], Samuel Dunning[4], Jacob[3], Samuel[2], Stephen[1]) was born 13 April 1878 in Morristown, Morris Co., New Jersey, and died 29 January 1941 in Englewood, Arapahoe Co., Colorado. She married James Robert Lee Smith 16 September 1908 in Hyde Park Presbyterian Church, Denver, Colorado, son of James Smith and Emily Reynolds. He was born 09 October 1870 in Centreville, Queen Anne's, Maryland, and died January 1950 in Englewood, Arapahoe Co., Colorado.

See the main Smith genealogy for notes about Alice (Arnold) and James Robert Lee Smith and their descendants.

End of Arnold Family collateral genealogy

[537] The U.S.S. Denver (C-14) was reclassified in 1920 as PG-28, and again on 8 August 1921 as CL-16. Decommissioned on 14 February 1931, she was sold on 13 September 1933. She had been present at Annapolis, Maryland, in April 1906 during the reinterment ceremonies for John Paul Jones at the U.S. Naval Academy. During World War I she escorted merchant convoys in the western Atlantic. Her final voyage was to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, arriving from Havana, Cuba, on 26 December 1930. NOTES

Jacob Ford (1737/38–1777) [No. 21] was a colonel in the Revolutionary War. He died eight days before his father, Jacob [No. 13]. Early in 1776 he made a compact with the Provincial Congress of New Jersey "to erect a powder-mill for the making of gunpowder, an article so essentially necessary at the present time", for which Congress loaned him $2,000 for one year without interest, to be repaid within that year "in good merchantable powder". Although Jacob Ford died in 1777, the manufactory continued to supply gunpowder for the duration of the war.[542]

Jacob Ford had erected a fine mansion in Morristown, New Jersey, in 1774, which was one of the finest homes in the country. During the second winter encampment of the Continental Army in Morristown, during the brutal winter of 1779-1780, Gen. George Washington established the Ford mansion for his headquarters. Martha Washington wintered with him here, too. Today, the mansion on Morris Ave. is a part of the Morristown National Historic Park, administered by the National Park Service. The mansion continued to be occupied by Ford family descendants until 1873.

Garrigues Family
Collateral Genealogy
(70 descendants)

The genealogy of the Garrigues family, as it relates to the Arnold lineage (above) and to our Smith lineage as currently understood, is as follows.

A substantial amount of information here has been derived from the remarkable and voluminous holdings of the Garrigus Family website.[543] Other historical aspects, particularly as relating to the Garrigues family in Philadelphia, are added from research by the present compiler at the American Philosophical Society.

[543] "The Genealogy of a Garrigues Family", website http://www.garrigus-family.com (accessed 2004, 2006). A great deal of information is also from Robert C. Garrigus, "The Ancestry of Matthieu Garrigues (originally of Languedoc, France and the first of the surname known to have taken up residence in the American Colonies)", webpage http://www.garrigus-family.com/MatthieusAncestry.pdf (current as of 22 Jan 2003; accessed 2006).

Descendants of Jean Garrigues

Generation No. 1

1. Jean[1] Garrigues was born 1655 in Perigold, France, and died 1710 in The Hague, Holland. He married Marie de Franchimont. She was born 1657 in France, and died August 1685.

Child of Jean Garrigues and Marie de Franchimont is:

\+ 2 i. Matthieu[2] Garrigues, born between 1677-1678 in Languedoc, France; died 05 September 1726 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Generation No. 2

2. Matthieu[2] Garrigues [Matthew Garrigues] (Jean[1]) was born between 1677-1678 in Languedoc, France, and died 05 September 1726 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He married Susanne (Susannah) de la Rochet between 14-28 May 1702 in Walloon Church, The Hague, Holland. She was born between 1678-1679 in France, and died 30 September 1746 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Children of Matthieu Garrigues and Susanne la Rochet are:

3 i. Marguerite Jean[3] Garrigues, born 01 January 1702/03 in The Hague, Holland.

4 ii. François Philippe Garrigues, born 29 October 1704 in Zuid, Rotterdam, The Netherlands; died between 15 Feb-19 March 1783 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He married (1) Ann Willson 1726 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; died 18 May 1745. He married (2) Mary Knowles 01 January 1746/47 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; died 12 September 1757.

11 ix. Abraham Garrigues, born 1722; died after 1744.

NOTES

2. Matthieu Garrigues (1677/78–1726)

He was a Huguenot who fled France after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes.[544] He and wife traveled to The Hague ca. 1700-1704, thence to the Caribbean island of St. Christopher, ca. 1705-1712, arriving in [544] The Huguenots–the origin of the name is uncertain–were French Protestants in the Reformed Church that had been established in 1550 by John Calvin (1509-1564). The Edict of Nantes, issued by Henry IV in 1598, prohibited reference to the name Huguenot. The Huguenots had been persecuted with the attempt of extermination since 1536; the efforts were encouraged even by the Pope. King Louis XIV revoked the Edict of Nantes in 1685, invigorating large-scale persecution again. Protestant churches and properties were destroyed, Huguenots were killed, and their emigration was declared to be illegal. Nonetheless, some two hundred thousand French Huguenots fled to other countries and continents. The mass exodus started in 1572, after the St. Bartholemew's Day Massacre. The Huguenot exodus to America took place between 1669 and 1725, mostly to the Carolinas and the Tidewater colonies

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania ca. 1713-1714. In Philadelphia he kept an inn under the sign of "Prince Eugene" (also "Prince Eugen"), 1714-1726. He was buried 6 September 1726 in Christ Church Burial Ground (5th and Arch Sts., Philadelphia), but his is among hundreds of graves that were not marked or whose markers were obliterated long ago.

The "Prince Eugene" is noted at two locations, one on Second Street in 1723/24, and another in 1725 a block farther to the east on Front Street facing the Delaware River. Advertisements in The American Weekly Mercury newspaper during 1723-1725 provide some scant information about the Garrigues family and the transactions carried out under the sign of the Prince Eugene (spellings and punctuations thus):

> "To be sold by Mathew Garrigue, at the Sign of the Prince Eugene, in the Second-street in Philadelphia, a good new Billiard Table with its Appurtenances, for a Reasonable Price. All persons that are Indebted to the said M. Garrigue are desired to pay the same with all speed, he designing to go to the West-Indies, with all his Family, next Spring."[545]
> "This is to give Notice, that at the Prince Eugene in Front-Street, there is to be sold a good Billiard Table with all Necessaries fitted, also a Servant Woman, by Matthew Garigues."[546]
> "To be sold at the Prince Eugene, over against Mr. Carpenters Wharf, Excellent Red-Wines, Bristol Beer, Loaf Sugar, Raisins Solis, also, a Parcel of Near Iron Weight half Hundreds, Quarters, &c. And other British Goods, at Reasonable Rates, by William Cole, lately from British." [sic, corrected to Bristol in second printing]. [547]

Susanne (de la Rochet) Garrigues (1678/79–1746)
(wife of Mathieu Garrigues)

She is buried in Christ Church Burial Ground (5th and Arch Sts., Philadelphia), Sec. M, row 2, plot 17. Her grave has a marker and a modern brass tablet that repeats the text of her stone and adds a commemorative inscription for Matthieu.

4. François Philippe Garrigues (1704–1783)
(Francis Garrigues)

He was baptized 29 October 1704 in The Hague, Holland. In Philadelphia he was an Ensign in Capt. Richard Nixon's Co., Pennsylvania Regiment of Foot, when he was aged 27 (ca. 1741). There he also operated Garrigues Ferry, formerly George Gray's Ferry, on the Schuylkill River at the foot of a road between North and South Laurel Hill. The ferry was for sale as noticed in an advertisement in the Pennsylvania Gazette on 9 May 1751. He was a member of Christ Church (Episcopalian), and later joined the Society of Friends (Quakers). His will was dated 15 February 1783 and was proved 19 March 1783.

Mary (Knowles) Garrigues
(wife of François Philippe Garrigues)

She was buried 3 February 1783 in Christ Church Burial Ground (5th and Arch Sts., Philadelphia). No marker is present.

7. Isaac Garrigues (1715–1785)

Isaac Garrigues is noticed in The Pennsylvania Contributorship Insurance Surveys (Philadelphia), 795, for 16 February 1763, which indicates he has a new brick house on the east side of 2nd Street between Pine and Lombard Streets, nearly opposite the New Market, where he lives. Today the site has 20th century residential construction on it.

Generation No. 3

6. Matthiew[3] Garrigues (Matthieu[2], Jean[1]) was born 1712 in St. Christopher Island, Kitts, French West Indies, and died 06 August 1748 in Pennsylvania.

Child of Matthiew Garrigues is:

\+ 12 i. Matthiew (Matthias)[4] Garrigues, born 1732 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; died in Halifax Co., North Carolina.

NOTES

Matthiew Garrigues (junior) (1712–1748) [No. 6] was a tailor. He enlisted in Capt. William Trent's Co. of the Pennsylvania militia on 27 June 1746.[548] His descendants moved to Tennessee, Arkansas, and Missouri.

---

8. Jacob G.[3] Garrigues (Matthieu[2], Jean[1]) was born January 1715/16 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and died 12 May 1798 in Morristown, New Jersey. He married Sarah 1744.

Children of Jacob Garrigues and Sarah are:

13 i. David[4] Garrigus.
14 ii. Isaac Garrigus.
15 iii. Jacob Garrigus.
16 iv. John Garrigus.
17 v. Mary Pauline Garrigus.
18 vi. Nancy Garrigus.
19 vii. Sarah Garrigus.
20 viii. Susannah Hannah Garrigus.
\+ 21 ix. Rebecca Garrigus, born 02 October 1751 in New Jersey; died 20 October 1838 in Rockaway, New Jersey.

NOTES

Jacob G. Garrigues (1715/16–1798) [No. 8] is noticed in the Pennsylvania Evening Post for 19 April 1777, which indicates he is at the Quarter Master General's office in Philadelphia.

---

9. Samuel[3] Garrigues (Matthieu[2], Jean[1]) was born 02 February 1717/18 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and died 25 January 1782 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He married (1) Mary Hannah Ralph 10 July 1740 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He married (2) Peggy Hadock 27 January 1773 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Children of Samuel Garrigues and Mary Ralph are:

22 i. John[4] Garrigues, born about 1746.
23 ii. William Garrigues, born 1746; died 1831. He married Mitchell.
24 iii. Edward Garrigues, born 1756 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; died about 1845. He married Margaret Price.

NOTES

9. Samuel Garrigues (1717/18–1782)

Samuel Garrigues kept a dry goods store next to the London Coffee Shop, on Front St., Philadelphia.[549]

A Samuel Garrigues (the elder) of Pennsylvania was tried and acquitted of treason as a Loyalist during the American Revolution; his son, Samuel, surrendered but was discharged.[550] Whether the elder Samuel is the same subject as for this genealogical record is uncertain; if so, then Samuel Jr. may be added as another son.

22. John Garrigues (ca. 1746–)

John Garrigues was in the Continental Service when he was taken on [New] York Island the day the British army landed, 17 June 1779, and was held prisoner for 12-13 weeks. He enlisted in the King's service as a means to escape, which he did but was caught and he received 500 lashes as punishment. He later succeeded in deserting in South Carolina.[551] The Pennsylvania Packet for 21 March 1782 indicates that he deserted from the J. Van Harus Co., 2nd Pennsylvania Regiment.

23. William Garrigues (17465–1831)

William Garrigues is noticed in the Pennsylvania Packet for 21 April 1784, which indicates he lets a brewery on 5th Street [Philadelphia] from Hugh Roberts.

He was on the committee to frame the articles of incorporation for the Friendship Co., 1769; joined the Carpenters' Company in 1786; worked on Library Hall[552]; measured the Lycoming County Court House, 1804; was one of four City Surveyors; Carpenters' Co. Secretary, 1794-1799, President, 1802-1805, 1814-1815.

24. Edward Garrigues (1756–ca.1845)

Edward Garrigues had a store on 3rd St. in Philadelphia, on the northwest corner of Story St. directly opposite Elm St.

An advertisement in the Pennsylvania Packet for 23 May 1782 notices that he has for sale a three-story brick house on 4th St., including back buildings for stables and carriages; and that his residence is in Elm St. near 3rd St.

During the Yellow Fever epidemics of the 1790s, he handled much of the county relief, and was president of the Board of Health. He was the secretary of Philadelphia County in 1798 and 1800.

At the time of the 1790 U.S. census, Edward Garrigues was a carpenter residing at 86 Market St. [old style address], Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

[549] The London Coffee Shop stood on the southwest corner of Front and High Sts.; a commemorative sign marks the site today. It was the center of merchant business in Colonial times, and where even slaves were sold in front of the establishment. Presumably, the Garrigues store was next to it, to the south.

[552] Library Hall was the home of the Library Company of Philadelphia, which stood then on South 5th Street at Library Street. The building was razed in 1889. Since 1957 on the site stands Library Hall of the American Philosophical Society, which reconstructs the original building's façade [and where at present Earle Spamer, the current compiler, is employed]. (The Library Company continues today in a building west of 13th and Locust Sts.)

Generation No. 4

12. Matthiew (Matthias)[4] Garrigues (Matthiew[3], Matthieu[2], Jean[1]) was born 1732 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and died in Halifax Co., North Carolina. He married Sarah 1756 in Halifax Co., North Carolina. She was born 1720, and died 1777.

Children of Matthiew Garrigues and Sarah are:

	25	i.	Jacob[5] Gargus, born 1757 in Halifax Co., North Carolina; died after 1832. He married Susanna Caton 02 March 1820 in Wilkes Co., North Carolina; died between 1825-1830.
	26	ii.	Penelope Gargus, born 1760 in Halifax Co., North Carolina; died 1825 in Turkey Creek, Humphrey, Tennessee. She married James Cooley 1780 in Halifax Co., North Carolina.
+	27	iii.	Matthew Matthias Garrigus, born 1760 in Halifax Co., North Carolina; died about 1825.

NOTES

Jacob Gargus (1757–after 1832) [No. 25] appears as Private "Job Gargis" in the muster list of Capt. Lowell's Co., Col. Long's Regiment, North Carolina, 4 March 1836. As Job Gargis, he made claim in Alabama for a Revolutionary War pension, 15 October 1832, having enlisted in 1779-1780 but not so recollected by him.

Generation No. 7

51. Lucinda[7] Gargis (William[6], Matthew Matthias[5] Garrigus, Matthiew (Matthias)[4] Garrigues, Matthiew[3], Matthieu[2], Jean[1]) was born 1818 in Franklin Co., Alabama, and died 1889 probably in Bengal Co., Indian Territory [Oklahoma]. She married Buford W. Hulsey 1835 in Alabama, son of Jesse Hulsey. He was born 1813 in Hall Co., Georgia, and died 1891 in Bengal Co., Indian Territory [Oklahoma].

Children of Lucinda Gargis and Buford Hulsey are:

63 i. James Carroll[8] Hulsey, born 29 May 1837 in Franklin Co., Alabama; died 1901. He married (1) Margaret Overall. He married (2) Margaret Barnes; born 1843.
64 ii. John J. Hulsey, born 1840 in probably Florence, Alabama; died 12 August 1862 in General Hospital, Little Rock, Arkansas.
65 iii. Almedia Hulsey, born 23 April 1843 in Florence, Alabama; died May 1900 in Cravens, Indian Territory [Oklahoma]. She married (1) Andrew J. Swan 06 November 1860 in Dallas Co., Arkansas. She married (2) William Harvey Horton 14 December 1870 in Sebastian Co., Arkansas or Choctaw Nation, Indian Territory; born 1850; died 1899.
66 iv. Nancy Hulsey, born 1847 in Tennessee. She married Arnold Smith.
67 v. Sarah Hulsey, born 1849 in McNairy Co., Tennessee. She married John Butler 1870 in Scott Co., Arkansas; born about 1845.
68 vi. Mary Magleen Hulsey, born October 1851 in McNairy Co., Tennessee; died about 1930 in probably Oklahoma. She married (1) Hugh T. Horton 09 August 1869 in Sebastian Co., Arkansas. She married (2) John C. Butler 24 December 1875; born June 1851 in Alabama; died 05 May 1887 in Talihinia, Choctaw Nation, Indian Territory [LeFlore Co., Oklahoma]. She married (3) Asbury Tyler 25 April 1889 in Scott Co., Arkansas; born 09 October 1834 in Green Co., Missouri; died 21 March 1900 in Owl, Indian Territory [Oklahoma].
69 vii. William J. Hulsey, born 1855 in Tennessee; died after 1870.
70 viii. Emily J. Hulsey, born 1858; died between 1860-1870.

NOTES

51. Lucinda (Gargis) Hulsey (1818-1889)

She is buried in Peachland Cemetery, 2 miles northwest of Bengal, East Latimer Co., Indian Territory [Oklahoma].

Buford W. Hulsey (1813–1891)
(husband of Lucinda Gargis)

Residences of Buford W. Hulsey (from U.S. censuses):
1840: Franklin Co., Alabama
1860: Dallas Co., Arkansas
1870: Marion Twp., Sebastian Co., Arkansas*
1880: Cole Twp., Sebastian Co., Arkansas
*He had been granted land in Sec. 4, Twp. 6, Range 32.

Children of Lucinda (Gargis) and Buford W. Hulsey

James Carroll Hulsey (1837–1901) [No. 63] was a physician.

During the Civil War, John J. Hulsey (1840–1862) [No. 64] served in the Confederate army. He enlisted on 6 June 1862 in Dallas, Arkansas; he served as a Private in Co. F., 26th Arkansas Infantry, and Co. F, Regular Mississippi Infantry. On 14 May 1862 in Tulip, Arkansas, he enlisted in Capt. James M. Daniel's Co. (Daniel's Battery), Lamar Artillery, Texas Volunteers.

> At the time of the 1870 U.S. census, Almedia (Hulsey) Swan (1843–1900) [No. 65] and her husband, Andrew J. Swan, resided next door to her parents in Marion Twp., Sebastian Co., Arkansas. Almedia (Hulsey) Horton and her husband, William Harvey Horton (1850–1899), are buried in Baldwin Cemetery, Cravens, Indian Territory [Latimer Co., Oklahoma].
> During the Civil War, Asbury Tyler, husband of Mary Magleen Hulsey [No. 68], served in the Confederate army. He was a sergeant in Co. G., 16th Arkansas Artillery. He was a blacksmith.

200. Mary Lulu[8] Smith (James[7], John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 26 February 1873 in Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died after 1940 probably in Delaware. She married James Lugg, Sr. 29 September 1898, son of Cyprus Lugg and Elizabeth. He was born 30 October 1875 near Central City, Gilpin Co., Colorado, and died August 1962.

Child of Mary Smith and James Lugg is:

324 i. James Edward[9] Lugg, Jr., born 02 June 1900 in Colorado; died September 1980. He married (1) Elizabeth Wyckoff 09 June 1928; born about 1903 in Colorado; died 05 April 1944. He married (2) Evelyn H. Nelson 16 July 1945; born 16 March 1910; died December 1975.

NOTES

200. Mary Lulu (Smith) Lugg (1873–after 1940)
"Lulu"

The "Smith Genealogy" records: [553]

> She was musical and often accompanied soloists; also enjoyed cooking. She attended school with the three Sparks girls at Centreville, and State Normal School in Baltimore, Maryland.

Wilbur Edward (Ed) Smith recalls his Aunt Lulu as a stern, proper woman. When as a boy he visited her,

> . . . if I went into the house I had to sit on a chair both feet on floor and be seen not heard. Aunt Lu was a strict [prohibitionist] to the point that Uncle Jim brought me an ice cream cone when he arrived from work and it had a cherry on it, I was not [allowed] to eat because it had been preserved in alcohol.[554]

He also recalled that she played the organ at the Methodist church for years, and her two brothers lived with her and her husband.[555]

Although a date of death for Lulu Smith Lugg is not available in family records, W. Ed Smith remembered her death occurring when he had been recalled into the service during the Korean conflict. [556]

She probably died in Delaware; Helen McCarraher recalls that she and Edward S. Smith visited Lulu on occasion when she was living in southern Delaware.[557]

James Edward Lugg, Sr. (1875–1962)
(husband of Mary Lulu Smith)

In various censuses and registers for Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and elsewhere there are numerous families with the name of "Legg". This is a coincidental name only, with no known connection between the Colorado and Maryland Lugg families and the Legg families in Maryland. (In the Smith family, however, two generations of Legg women married into the Bryan family, as noticed herein under the Bryan Family collateral genealogy.)

Also see the Lugg Family collateral genealogy, below.

An address book of Earle C. Smith (predating 1964) lists an address for James Lugg as 1263 Pearl St., Denver, Colorado.

He was a printer. At the time of the 1913 Denver city directory, he worked for the Saunders Printing Co. W. Edward Smith recalled that his Uncle Jim had his own print shop for short-run printing.[558]

Lugg Family
Collateral Genealogy
(4 descendants)

The genealogy of the Lugg family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Cyprus Lugg

Generation No. 1

1. Cyprus[1] Lugg was born about 1841 in Lands End, England. He married Elizabeth. She was born about 1838 in Colorado.

Children of Cyprus Lugg and Elizabeth are:
+ 2 i. William[2] Lugg, born about 1864 in England.
+ 3 ii. James Lugg, Sr., born 30 October 1875 near Central City, Gilpin Co., Colorado; died August 1962.

NOTES

Cyprus Lugg (ca. 1841–) [No. 1] and his wife, Elizabeth (ca. 1838–) also had two daughters who were born in England.[559] Cyprus Lugg immigrated into the U.S. possibly in 1866 (see the 1920 U.S. census entry under his son, William Lugg [No. 2]); the entry is difficult to read. Both parents of Elizabeth Lugg (Mrs. Cyprus Lugg) were born in England. At the time of the 1913 Denver city directory, she is listed as Mrs. Elizabeth Lugg, residing with her son, James [No. 3].

Generation No. 2

2. William[2] Lugg (Cyprus[1]) was born about 1864 in England. He married Dora. She was born about 1875 in Connecticut.

Child of William Lugg and Dora is:
4 i. Leroy[3] Lugg, born about 1905 in Connecticut.

NOTES

Occupations of William Lugg (ca. 1864–) [No. 2] (from U.S. censuses):
1880: Jeweler's apprentice
1920: Polisher for clock manufacturer

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census, William Lugg resided at 54 Federal St., Bristol, Hartford Co., Connecticut.

3. James[2] Lugg, Sr. (Cyprus[1]) was born 30 October 1875 near Central City, Gilpin Co., Colorado, and died August 1962. He married Mary Lulu Smith 29 September1898, daughter of James Smith and Emily Reynolds. She was born 26 February 1873 in Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, and died about 1952.

203. Elma Howard[8] Bryan (Anna Virginia[7] Smith, John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 28 January 1863 in Maryland, and died 29 August 1926 in Merchantville, Camden Co., New Jersey. She married William Edward Knowles. He was born 07 January 1859, and died 26 September 1935.

Child of Elma Bryan and William Knowles is:

\+ 325 i. Emmett Bryan[9] Knowles, born 19 December 1883 in Delaware.

NOTES

Another possible date of death for Elma (Bryan) Knowles (1863–1926) [No. 203] is the Tuesday before 11 September 1926 [7 Sep], according to an unidentified newspaper clipping. She is buried at Barratt's Chapel in Frederica, Delaware.

At the time of the 1930 census, William Edward Knowles (1859–1935), husband of Elma Bryan, resided with his son, Emmett, and his family in Pennsauken, Camden Co., New Jersey.

Edward S. Smith took note in the "Smith Genealogy" that William Edward Knowles

> . . . was for many years associated with a large wholesale anthracite coal firm with its main offices in Philadelphia. The Knowles, and sometimes Aunt Anna Bryan, were often at the home of my parents in Philadelphia and helped to make a merry time, especially at Thanksgiving time.[560]

204. Mary Smith[8] Bryan (Anna Virginia[7] Smith, John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 26 May 1865 in Maryland, and died September 1951. She married [Rev.] Emerson Pierce Roberts. He was born May 1854 in Maryland.

Children of Mary Bryan and Emerson Roberts are:

\+ 326 i. Emerson Bryan[9] Roberts, born 10 October 1890 in Oxford, Talbot Co., Maryland; died after 1951.

327 ii. Mary Elma Roberts [Dr. Mary Elma Roberts], born 10 March 1892 in Maryland; died after 1951.

Also see Additions & Corrections

[560] "Smith Genealogy", p. 42.

NOTES

Emerson Pierce Roberts (1854–)
(husband of Mary Smith Bryan)

Also see Additions & Corrections

In the 1870 U.S. census, his given name is spelled "Emberson". In the 1880 census, he is listed as "Pearce Roberts".

Occupations of Emerson Pierce Roberts (from U.S. censuses):
1870: Farm laborer
1880: Teacher
1900: Minister
1910: "Clergman [sic] Preaching Gospel"

Residences of Emerson Pierce Roberts (from U.S. censuses):
1860-1880: Tyaskin, Wicomico Co., Maryland (with parents)
1900: Still Pond Village [Kennedyville], Kent Co., Maryland
1910: Main St., Denton, Caroline Co., Maryland

Regarding his parents and siblings, the following information is thus far known:

William Roberts was born about 1818. He married Mary. She was born about 1819 in Maryland.

Children of William Roberts and Mary are:
i. William F.[2] Roberts, born about 1838 in Maryland.
ii. John E. Roberts, born about 1843 in Maryland.
iii. Isaac W. Roberts, born about 1847 in Maryland.
iv. Thomas L. Roberts, born about 1849 in Maryland.
v. Samuel Roberts, born about 1851 in Maryland.
vi. Emerson Pierce Roberts, born May 1854 in Maryland.
vii. Julia Roberts, born about 1856 in Maryland.
viii. Eugenia Roberts, born about 1859 n Maryland.
ix. [Kuoni?] Roberts, born about 1861 in Maryland.

NOTES

At the time of the 1860–1800 U.S. censuses, William Roberts (ca. 1818–) [No. 1] was a farmer residing in Tyaskin, Somerset Co., Maryland. His middle initial is given as "V." in the 1860 census, as "E." in the 1870 census, and "W." in the 1880 census.

The given name of daughter Kuoni[?] Roberts (ca. 1861–) [child ix] was apparently misunderstood by the census taker at the time of the 1870 census, as he had also misundertood other children's names. The supposed name, Kuoni, does not appear in with the family in the 1880 census.

Of interest in the census information is the residence with this family of Morris T. Tilghman, aged 5, in the 1870 census; and in the 1880 census there is registered a son, Morris Roberts, aged 13.

204. Mary (Bryan) Roberts (1865–1951)

At the time of her death she resided in Merchantville, Camden Co., New Jersey.

(Photos from Mary E. Roberts Elementary School website)

327. Mary Elma Roberts (1892–after 1951) Also see Additions & Corrections

She never married. In 1951, she resided in Merchantville, Camden Co., New Jersey; at that time she was principal of the Moorestown, New Jersey, High School. She received her Ph.D. degree from the University of Pennsylvania.

Edward S. Smith noted about Mary Elma Roberts in the "Smith Genealogy":

> She holds the degree of Ph.D. from the University of Pennsylvania and, until her retirement, taught in the public schools of Moorestown, New Jersey. She was interested in civic affairs and was at one time the Woman of the Year in New Jersey.[561]

208. William Whitley[8] Bryan, Sr. (Anna Virginia[7] Smith, John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 27 August 1876 in Delaware. He married Florence Katherine Shimer. She died after 1951.

Children of William Bryan and Florence Shimer are:

\+ 328 i. Josephine Shimer[9] Bryan, born 11 September 1906; died March 1975.
329 ii. James Edmund Bryan, born 11 July 1909. Also see Additions & Corrections
330 iii. William Whitely Bryan, Jr., born 31 December 1911; died 22 October 1999 in Savannah, Chatham Co., Georgia.

NOTES

Florence (Shimer) Bryan (–after 1951), wife of William Whitley Bryan, Sr. [No. 208], resided in Hopewell, Pennsylvania, when her brother, James, died in 1951.

209. Lora Rebecca[8] Smith (John Edward[7], John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 12 October 1874 in Lincoln, Sussex, Delaware, and died 02 June 1952 in Hahnemann Hospital, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. She married John Ward Spamer 23 January 1901 in Church of the New Jerusalem, 22nd and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, son of Peter Spamer [Henry Spamer] and Catharina Heinzerling. He was born 05 September 1869 in Baltimore, Maryland, and died 15 April 1960 in 65 Prospect St., Apt. 6K, Stamford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut.

Children of Lora Smith and John Spamer are:

331 i. Katharine Seville[9] Spamer, born 01 November 1901 in 1919 N. Fulton Ave., Baltimore, Maryland; died 12 January 1985 at 65 Prospect St., Apt. 6K, Stamford, Fairfield Co., Connecticut.
332 ii. John Ward Spamer, Jr., born 26 November 1907 in 3930 Pine St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; died 02 December 1907 at 3930 Pine St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
\+ 333 iii. Edward Lawrence Spamer, born 25 December 1909 in 1234 N. 54th St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; died 10 November 1955 at "Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania", Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

NOTES

209. Lora (Smith) Spamer (1874–1952)

The birth date for Lora Smith is given in Nathan T. Sevil's Bible as 12 October 1873.

Edward Seville Smith included some notes about his sister in the "Smith Genealogy":

> Lora had a fine talent for painting in oils and in black-and-white drawings in crayons. She studied and developed this talent in Baltimore and completed the course in Art at the Maryland Institute, Baltimore. They moved to Baltimore after their marriage, where he engaged in business with his brother, Edward. They were in this wholesale ice cream business for several years. Because of his health he sold his interest in their business to his brother and the family moved to Philadelphia.[562]
> Lora . . . as a young girl attended Miss Harkness Private School in Wilmington when we moved to Easton, graduated from high school there. She had a fine alto voice.[563]

In addition to her work in oil and crayon, Lora created works in watercolors and charcoal. Many of her pieces are still in the hands of family members. She ceased her artwork after marriage.

Two watercolors that were in the possession of Lora's daughter, Katharine S. Spamer, were always said by K.S.S. to have been "my mother's", which I inferred to mean that they had been painted by Lora. It turns out that they are not works by Lora, but by a family friend. These are small works, simplistic but showing artistic promise; they are in black and grey with greenish or bluish tints, on good watercolor paper. One, untitled, shows a two-masted boat and a sailboat, dated "September 24th /85"; the other shows a heron-like bird standing at the edge of a wetland, titled, "Solitude" and dated "Sep 28th '85". The boat scene is signed "C. B. Cox". Both paintings are signed on their reverse sides, in pencil, "Clara Bell Cox". Lora apparently had kept these as mementos, as no others were kept by her or her descendants.[564]

While attempting to identify a Clara Cox who would most likely have been a young acquaintance of Lora in 1885, when the paintings were made, the only reasonable match found was in the 1880 U.S. census for Easton, Maryland. There, a 12-year-old Clara Cox was found in the Mary H. P. Cox household; Clara had three sisters. By an astonishing coincidence, this turned out to be the four Cox girls with whom Lora's brother, Gilbert, as a young boy was so smitten by their beauty, interests, and intelligence—he wrote in an incomplete autobiography some 40 years or more later, they were

> . . . four remarkable girls whom I adored as most awfully perfect and beautiful. I cherished every little attention they gave me, though I scarcely dared to look at them with direct glance. It was only at a distance I adored them, especially the one that "drew" . . . .[565]

Two color-wash paintings by Clara Bell Cox, 1885.

Presumably these paintings are by Clara Bell Cox of Easton, Maryland. Originally from the effects of Lora Smith Spamer and, later, her daughter, Katharine Seville Spamer. They are dated 24 September 1885 (top) and 28 September 1885 (left) and could have been gifts to the Smith family on their arrival in Easton (see text). (Presently owned by Earle Spamer.)

"Clara Bell Cox" notation from verso of one of the paintings. Both paintings signed thus, but the writer has not been determined.

If Clara Cox of Easton is the Clara Bell Cox who painted the pictures in September 1885, it falls into place about perfectly with the time that the Smiths moved from Wilmington, Delaware, to Easton, Maryland, when Rev. Smith began his new calling in the New Church. Clara would have been about 17 years of age. If this supposition is correct, to whom the paintings were given is not clear; whether a gift to Lora or to welcome all of the Smiths to Easton. (Gilbert was a boy not even three years of age when the paintings were done.)

Residences of Lora Smith Spamer (from U.S. censuses, Philadelphia city directories, and family information):

1901 (January): 3218 Baring St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (with her father) [marriage license]
1910-1930 censuses: 820 South St. Bernard St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (with her father)
1935 Philadelphia directory: 820 South St. Bernard St., Philadelphia (with sister and other family)
ca. 1942-1952: 4202 Walnut St., 3rd floor, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (with son's family)

In the 1930 U.S. census, she is listed, erroneously, as a widow, with her surname spelled "Sparmer"; John Ward Spamer was a traveling salesman. The discrepancy might be due to an error if the census taker was told ambiguous information, such as "he's not with us", or confusing the late Rev. Smith with Lora's husband. In the 1935/1936 Philadelphia directory, Lora Spamer, is listed as a housekeeper at 820 South St. Bernard St., where also lived her son, Edward, and her sister-in-law, Mabel Smith. At the time of her death she resided with John Ward Spamer in the apartment of their son, Edward, and his family at 4202 Walnut St., 3rd floor, Philadelphia.

Lora (Smith) Spamer is buried in lot 715, River Section, West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Bala Cynwyd, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania. She was buried in a mahogany finished salix casket with tan silk lining, with bronze extension bar handles and engraved name plate to match. The arrangements were handled by the Oliver H. Bair Co., 1820 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

John Ward Spamer (1869–1960)
(husband of Lora Smith)

John Ward Spamer was named for Rev. John Ward Hunt, and by whom he was baptized. [566]

Occupations of John Ward Spamer (from U.S. censuses, Baltimore and Philadelphia city directories, and family information):

1888 Baltimore directory: Shoemaker (in his father's business)
1890 Baltimore directory: Clerk (in his father's business)
1894 Baltimore directory: The Sun Papers (Baltimore Sun)[567]
1897, 1899 Baltimore directories: Spamer Bros. ice cream (business with Edward O. H. Spamer, 1201 W. North Ave.) [568]

[566] Nothing more has thus far been determined regarding Rev. John Ward Hunt. He was presumably a minister of the Church of the New Jerusalem, although it is not clear when Henry Spamer accepted this faith.

[567] John Ward Spamer's brother, Edward O. H. Spamer, was a carrier for the newspaper company.

[568] Edward Seville Smith notes that this was a wholesale business ("Smith Genealogy and Some Reminiscences", typescript, 1963, p. 54) The address is also the home of his father, Henry Spamer, which also had been the final business address for Henry's shoe shop.

1901 January (marriage license): Ice cream manufacturer
1901 November (birth certificate of daughter, Katharine Spamer): Confectioner
1905 Baltimore directory: Salesman

There are no family recollections at this time that provide information about John Ward Spamer's early adult life. An interesting record is noted here, where one "John W. Spamer" of Baltimore, Maryland, is a "junior" (i.e., freshman) student in the Law School of the University of Maryland during the year 1894-1895. [569] He does not appear in the list of students for the 1895-1896 school year. There is no surviving record or recollection at this time that indicates that John Ward Spamer had ever been a law student. However, given that his cousins, Christian Augustus Emanuel Spamer and Adolph Spamer were in the law profession in Baltimore, 25-year-old John may have been encouraged to enter law school; if so, he seems not to have completed the course of study. Shortly later, John's father, Henry Spamer passed into financial straits due to bad debts due him, which may also have influenced John's potential career. That John was for a short while a law student is conjecture, but of which notice is taken here of the coincidental name and family circumstances.

John's daughter, Katharine, recalled her father bringing home ice cream that had been made by the Spamer business; that the ice cream was delicious. For her to recall this must indicate that Spamer Bros. remained in business at least long enough for young Katharine to have the memory. It is not clear exactly when Spamer Bros. ceased business, and when John Ward Spamer entered the real estate business. The 1905 city directory entry for him as "salesman" could apply to either business.

During at least part of the 1920s and during the Depression, J. W. Spamer was a traveling salesman, rarely at home; some cousins recall having seen him only at Christmas (one believed he was dead until one day she saw him riding the subway in Philadelphia[570]). He was a messenger in Philadelphia at age 83 when his wife, Lora, died in 1952; after this he retired.

Known residences of John Ward Spamer (from U.S. censuses, Baltimore and Philadelphia city directories, and family information):
1888 Baltimore directory: 1324 Harlem Ave. (his father's shoe store and residence)

John Ward Spamer has not been found in the 1930 census. In this census his wife, Lora, resided with her father, Rev. John Edward Smith, at his home at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia; there she is listed as a "widow". The discrepancy could be due to an error if the census taker was told ambiguous information, such as "he's not with us now". J. W. Spamer was a traveling salesman at the time. In the 1935/1936 Philadelphia directory, Lora Spamer is listed as a housekeeper at 820 South St. Bernard St., where also lived her son, Edward, and her sister-in-law, Mabel Smith; again, J. W. Spamer is absent from listings.

In Philadelphia, John Ward Spamer was a member of the Church of the New Jerusalem, 22nd and Chestnut Sts.[572] He is buried in lot 715, River Section, West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Bala Cynwyd, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

211. Roberta Covington[8] Smith (John Edward[7], John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 28 July 1877 in Denton, Caroline Co., Maryland, and died 30 April 1945 in 440 E. Eighth St., Michigan City, LaPorte Co., Indiana. She married Joseph Lathrop Mack 20 October 1904 in Church of the New Jerusalem, 22nd and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, son of Henry Mack and Sarah Lathrop. He was born 28 September 1877 in San Francisco, California, and died 22 July 1952 in Chicago, Illinois.

Children of Roberta Smith and Joseph Mack are:

+	334	i.	Joseph Lathrop[9] Mack, Jr., born 01 August 1905 in Nazareth, Northampton Co., Pennsylvania; died 11 June 1970 in Warm Springs, Montana.
+	335	ii.	Elizabeth Mack, born 28 January 1906 in Nazareth, Northampton Co., Pennsylvania; died 25 May 1990 in New Mexico.
+	336	iii.	Roberta Mack, born 17 June 1909 in Independence, Missouri; died 14 July 1995 in New Mexico.
	337	iv.	Grace Lathrop Mack, born 19 January 1915 in Rockmart, Polk Co., Georgia; died 12 August 1999 in Tucson, Arizona. She married Herbert Johnson Fisher 29 January 1949 in Chicago, Illinois; born 28 April 1903; died 07 May 1989 in Tucson, Arizona.

[571] In January 1943, J. W. Spamer was the informant on the death certificate of his prematurely born grandson, John Edward Spamer. As informant he gave his address as in South Vineland, New Jersey, where lived his daughter-in-law (mother of the child), Jeannette Spamer, and her mother and step-father, Palmina and Leo Sylvester. J. W. Spamer and his wife, Lora, may have resided temporarily with their daughter-in-law while she was pregnant and the father, Edward Lawrence Spamer, was in the army overseas.

NOTES

211. Roberta (Smith) Mack (1877–1945)

Roberta Smith graduated from Duval County High School, Jacksonville, Florida. She died suddenly of a heart attack and is buried in Oakwoods Cemetery, Chicago, Illinois. A newspaper obituary for her reports her year of marriage as 1903.

In the "Smith Genealogy", Edward Seville Smith included notes about his sister, as follows:

> Roberta attended Miss Harkness' Private School in Wilmington, Delaware, the public grade and high school in Easton, Maryland, and graduated at the Duval County High School, Jacksonville, Florida. She was talented in music, played the piano, and had a good soprano voice. She studied music with Dr. William Wallace Gilchrist, who was Director of the Mendelssohn Chorus and leader of the Church Choir of which she was a member.[573]

Joseph Lathrop Mack (1877–1952)
(husband of Roberta Smith)
"Lathrop"

He was educated in Philadelphia Central High School, and he graduated from the University of Pennsylvania where he majored in chemistry. He was a chemist for the Portland Cement Co., Nazareth, Pennsylvania, and later a chemist for the Pullman-Standard Car Manufacturing Co., Michigan City, Indiana. He resided at various times in Canaan, Connecticut; Nazareth, Pennsylvania; Rockmart, Georgia; and finally at 440 E. 8th St., Michigan City, Indiana. In Michigan City he was a Secretary of the Public School Board and interested in civic affairs. Also see Additions & Corrections

J. Lathrop and Roberta Smith Mack were the first to research the genealogy of our Smith family. Her brother, Edward Seville Smith, continued the research after their deaths, and in turn, after his death, research was continued by Lathrop and Roberta's daughter, Elizabeth Mack Munger.

[573] "Smith Genealogy", p. 57. William Wallace Gilchrist (1846-1916), at the age of nine years, studied music in Philadelphia under Hugh A. Clarke, who later (1865-1868) was Professor of Music at the University of Pennsylvania. He was later a soloist at Holy Trinity Church on Rittenhouse Square and at St. Mark's Church on Locust St. In 1874, he was appointed as organist and choirmaster at St. Clement's Church, 20th and Cherry Sts., Philadelphia. At this time he organized the original Mendelssohn Club of Philadelphia, beginning as an eight-voice men's chorus; their first subscription concert was held in Dec 1879. The Mendelssohn Club grew and added women's voices. He also became organist and choirmaster at the Church of the New Jerusalem, 22nd and Chestnut Sts. after it was created; and probably it was here that Roberta Smith knew him. He also founded and conducted the Symphony Society of Philadelphia (1893-1899); in 1900 it became the Philadelphia Orchestra under the German conductor, Fritz Scheel. The Mendelssohn Club of Philadelphia is still an active association. (>>Mendelssohn Club of Philadelphia website, http://www.mcchorus.org/history.htm, accessed 24 Jul 2006.)

337. Grace (Mack) Fisher (1915–1999)

Grace Mack graduated from Michigan City High School, and she attended the Bryant and Stratton Business College in Chicago, Illinois. She was a secretary for a firm of public accountants in Chicago.[574]

Herbert Fisher (1903–1989)
(husband of Grace Mack)

Herbert Fisher, known as "Herb", was a graduate of Pennsylvania State University and maintained great pride in the school for the rest of his life. He worked with the U.S. Department of Agriculture in Chicago, Illinois, for nearly 20 years. An address book of Earle C. Smith (predating 1964) lists the Fishers' address as 600 Elgin Ave., Forest Park, Illinois. Herbert Fisher later transferred to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where he was in charge of the division office.[575] An address for the Fishers there, in Earle Smith's address book, is 1696 Skyline Drive, Pittsburgh. In their retirement years, Herbert and Grace Fisher were "snowbirds", spending their winters in Tucson, Arizona. They later moved permanently to Tucson.

The genealogy of the Mack family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows.

Edward S. Smith included a few notes about the Mack family in the "Smith Genealogy":

> "The Macks had lived at Hammonton, New Jersey, where Mr. Mack represented the Eastern Hydrolic [sic] Press[ed] Brick Co., with offices in Philadelphia. Here [in Philadelphia] they lived in a large house on 48th Street, south of Chester Avenue. The daughter, Rebecca Robins, a graduate of Smith College, was a musician and sang in the Mendelssohn Chorus under Dr. Gilchrist and in the Church Choir.[576] Their son Harry (Henry Ely, Jr.) was a happy soul. He married Ethel Simpson, and was interested in steel products, lock washers, etc. The third son, Samuel Ely, was a good athlete and enjoyed baseball. Sam and his father were planning a trip to California to look after some interests there and were packing of those large, deep trunks then much in use. They were looking for the strap for the trunk. Sam said 'there it is' to which his father replied 'No, that's my belt.'" [577]

> "With the Mack family reduced in size, Rebecca took an apartment in the same area and father, who enjoyed the game of chess, would spend many happy times playing the game with Mr. Mack. Both were good players. I would often spend an evening there at the game. It was delightful to be with them and Mrs. Grace Mack and Rebecca were gracious hostesses."[578]

NOTES

David Mack (senior) (1778–1854) [No. 1] was a Trustee of Amherst College, 1836-1854.

In March 1833, "The Homestead", home of the family of Samuel Fowler Dickinson, was purchased by David Mack. The Homestead had been the home of Samuel Fowler Dickinson, grandfather of the American poet, Emily Dickinson. The house probably was the first brick structure in Amherst, Massachusetts. The Dickinson family rented half of the home for seven years when they were under financial difficulties from debts; the Mack family resided in the other half. In 1840, the Dickinsons left to their own home, a clapboard house (no longer standing) on Pleasant Street. The Homestead was purchased back by Edward Dickinson after the death of Mack. During this second residency, Emily Dickinson began her writings in earnest. The Homestead remained in the Dickinson family until 1916, when it was bought by the Parke family. In 1963, the house was designated a National Historic Landmark, and in 1965 it was sold by the Parke family to the Trustees of Amherst College.[579]

At the time when David Mack bought The Homestead, he was the proprietor of a general store in Amherst, Massachusetts. At the time of the 1850 U.S. census, David Mack was a farmer.

Residences of David Mack (from U.S. censuses):

1810: Montague, Hampshire Co., Massachusetts
1830: Middlefield, Massachusetts
1850: Amherst, Massachusetts

An alternate marriage date for David Mack and Mary Ely is 14 January 1812.

NOTES

212. Edward Seville Smith (1880–1963)

Edward Seville Smith was the author of the "Smith Genealogy" (draft completed in 1963, shortly before his death). In it, he included some autobiographical notes, which are appended at the end of this number (below). He also provided narratives of life during his childhood, which are also appended below. Additional commentary by him in the "Smith Genealogy", regarding other family members, places, and events, have been quoted elsewhere in the present genealogy, with the individual sketches for the persons involved.

He began his career as a real estate and title lawyer, which experience benefited him again when, in retirement, he searched title records in his genealogical avocation.

Occupations of Edward Seville Smith (from U.S. censuses and Philadelphia city directories):

1906, 1910 city directories: Lawyer (337 Land Title Building, 118 S. Broad St.)[581]
1920 census: Collector of Internal Revenue
1930 census: Attorney for a department store

An undated envelope, used by Elisabeth C. Smith for storing some photographs, includes a return address for Edward S. Smith, attorney-at-law, 110 Wyneva St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Residences of Edward Seville Smith (from U.S. censuses and other sources):

1906 city directory: 512 S. 47th St. (with his parents)
1910 census: 614 N. 43rd St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (with his parents)

1920 (January) census: 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia (with his parents; he married later this year)
1930 census: 137 Drexel Rd., Ardmore, Lower Merion Twp., Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania
After 1930: 5110 Green St., Germantown (section), Philadelphia
At time of death: 555 W. Clappier St., Philadelphia

In the 1904 and 1905 city directories, Edward S. Smith is listed as a student, residing at his parents' addresses (3218 Baring St. in the 1904 directory, 508 S. 47th St. in the 1905 directory).

Edward Seville Smith is buried in lot 715, River Section, West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Bala Cynwyd, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

(wife of Edward Seville Smith)

Nothing is now known about the Allen family. Dorothy Allen Smith is buried in the Allen family lot in Mt. Moriah Cemetery, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The cemetery has long been a vandalized property, in great disrepair and in unsafe surroundings. Revolutionary War seamstress Betsy Ross had been buried in this cemetery until she was removed in 1976 to a grave adjacent to the Betsy Ross House, 239 Arch St., Philadelphia.[582]

Laura (Gonzalez) Smith (1891–1966)
(wife of Edward Seville Smith)

The marriage of Edward Seville Smith and Laura Gonzalez was officiated by his father, Rev. John Edward Smith, at Rev. Smith's home, 820 South St. Bernard St., Philadelphia.

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, Laura Gonzalez Smith was a department store saleswoman. For years she worked in the Mourning Department of the Strawbridge & Clothier department store, 8th and Market Sts., Philadelphia.[583] At the time of her death she resided at 555 W. Clappier St., Philadelphia. She is buried in Hillside Cemetery (Roslyn, Pennsylvania?).

[582] Elisabeth (Griscom) Ross Asbourne Claypole (1752-1836) was the Philadelphia seamstress and upholsterer who, as Betsy Ross, is ambiguously credited with having made the first flag for the new United States. The only substantive evidence for the historic claim is a family tradition announced by her grandson, the fact that she was indeed a seamstress and upholsterer who had done some later flag work, and the fact that she sat in a pew in Christ Church adjacent to the pew held by George Washington. She and husband John Claypoole first had been buried in the Free Quaker burial ground in Philadelphia, and were subsequently removed to Mount Moriah Cemetery in Yeadon, Pennsylvania, a Philadelphia suburb. In 1976 their remains were transferred again, to a lot adjacent to the Betsy Ross House at 239 Arch St., Philadelphia (the lot is 241 Arch St., today the side yard to the Betsy Ross House); and yet there is even some ambiguity that Ross ever lived at this location (supposedly 1773-1785). A stereoview published in 1909 shows the worn shop as a tourist attraction, dismally sandwiched between two brick buildings; the adjacent lot that is today a landscaped garden, where she and husband John are buried, was in 1909 a lamp shop. The others (John Wanamaker, Snellenberg's, Gimbel's, and Lit Brothers) had gone out of business outright or, like Strawbridge's, were sold to other concerns. The Strawbridge & Clothier store began as a dry goods store operated by two Philadelphia Quakers, Justus Clayton Little is known of the Gonzalez family; see the Gonzalez collateral genealogy, below. Susan Bollinger's mother was Laura Lovell. The Lovell family, with a long history in Rhode Island, has an interesting Philadelphia history and so a collateral genealogy is available for them, farther below.

Autobiographical Notes by Edward Seville Smith

In the "Smith Genealogy", Edward S. Smith included some biographical comments about himself, which are reproduced here.[584] Additional autobiographical notes from Edward Smith's "Smith Genealogy" accompany the number for his father, Rev. John Edward Smith [No. 92], placed there because those recollections pertain more to Rev. Smith. Separate from these comments are his narratives about life while he was growing upon the Eastern Shore, in Jacksonville, Florida, and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, which are reproduced in the section that follows this one.

> Papa arranged for me a business course at a local business school, where I graduated in bookkeeping, typing, and stenography which proved useful to me. I used it when I entered the law office of John W. Graham as a typist and stenographer. The law firm was Mershon and Graham.[585] Abner H. Mershon and his brother Charles also had a real estate business.

Strawbridge (1838-1911) and Isaac Hallowell Clothier (1938-1911), and it remained at least partly under control of the Strawbridge family until 1996. The landmark building on the northwest corner of 8th and Market Sts. was built in 1928. On the site Thomas Jefferson had had an office when he served as the U.S. Secretary of State, 1790-1793 (when Philadelphia was the U.S. Capital), which was perpetually commemorated, even after the Strawbridge store's closing, by a window display honoring Jefferson. And it was in an earlier Strawbridge building on this site where stage and film comedian W. C. Fields worked (briefly) as a "runner", a courier working between departments. My mother, Jeannette L. Spamer, swore by Strawbridge's for much of her shopping and major purchases. (>>Maureen Milford, "Upper Floors of Philadelphia Store to Become Offices", The New York Times, 7 Apr 2002; Henry J. [585] The law firm of Mershon and Graham had offices in the Land Title Building, 118 S. Broad St., Philadelphia, at least in 1908 when Edward S. Smith also worked in the building. A letterhead item seen was a 1908 letter from John W. Graham, Jr. (who also is noted in Ed Smith's narrative). The letter accompanied the 9 Apr 1904 will of Robert Graham, of Kenton Hundred, Kent Co., Delaware, admitted to probate 21 May 1908. John Graham was the nephew of Robert Graham. (>>Seen on website http://ftp.rootsweb.com/pubs/usgenweb/de/kent/wills/graham22.txt, accessed 24 Feb 2007.)

The Mershon Brothers were the first to build real apartment houses in Philadelphia. A small one at 11th and Winter Streets, the Wylie Apartments, in Francisville, which was destroyed by fire, stood on a part of the Wylie Playgrounds, the Newport and Toraine Apartments, 16th and Spruce Streets, and the Benjamin Franklin.

I became a Registered Student-at-Law and John W. Graham, Esquire, was my Perceptor [Preceptor]. As I could not take advantage of the lectures at the University, I was an office student. Before each county had its law examiners, but now the Supreme Court took charge and appointed a board of Law Examiners for the state. Taking this examination, I was admitted to the Bar in 1905 and was admitted to state and federal courts. My law practice in the courts was not extensive. As a lawyer I was an examiner of titles to real estate, with a bank and trust company which insured such titles and was engaged in that activity for some years.

There were efforts at political reform in Philadelphia and Pennsylvania and, as a Democrat, I joined with the Independents in this effort. At some elections we were particularly successful and we finally elected Hon. Rudolph Blankenburg[586] and some councilmen known as the Reformers. The voters did not give full and sustained support year after year, so such good as could be done was accomplished—gradually the movement faded.

President Woodrow Wilson came to Philadelphia for the Fourth of July celebration one year in the Blankenburg term, and he appointed me one of the reception committee.[587] A large and enthusiastic crowd greeted President Wilson at the Independence Hall celebration.

There were several morning newspapers in Philadelphia. The Record was much favored by the people down the Delmarvia [Delmarva] Peninsula—they just could not do without it. The Inquirer, too, was here—my sweet grandmother[588] called it the "Philadelphia Lear" [sic], and then there was the North American, a vital publication that sometimes stirred and delighted the people. Their cartoons of office holders and politicians were wonderful. The Mayor was John Weaver and one day, it happened to be April first, the cartoon in the North American headed the morning paper and pictured the Mayor as a champion of reform and with city councils out to overthrow the Gang. The sensation and uproar of acclaim and approval was terrific. While the cartoon was an April Food [sic] hoax, it was a prediction for its prophecy did come true. The Gang had run into a feud.

[586] Rudolph Blankenberg (1843-1918), a Keystone-Democrat who in the 1912 mayoral election defeated George Howard Earle, Jr. (Republican) by 4,495 votes. (>>Donald W. Disbrow, "Reform in Philadelphia Under Mayor Blankenberg, 1912-1916", Pennsylvania History, vol. 27 (Oct 1960), pp. 379-396.) George Howard Earle, Jr., was only once a candidate for political office. His son, G. H. Earle, III (1890-1974), was more successful, as Minister to Austria (1933-1934), Governor of Pennsylvania (1935-1939) [failed in bid for U.S. Senate, 1938], and Minister to Bulgaria (1940-1941).

[587] President Woodrow Wilson (Democrat) addressed an audience at Independence Hall on 4 Jul 1914, speaking on "The Meaning of Liberty". He said, "Liberty does not consist, my fellow-citizens, in mere general declarations of the rights of man. It consists in the translation of those declarations into definite action." The Declaration of Independence, he noted in legal parlance, "contains a bill of particulars, but the bill of particulars of 1776. If we would keep it alive, we must fill it with a bill of particulars for the year 1914." He concluded [pointedly, this was before the creation and eventual failure of the League of Nations, which he enthusiastically supported], "I do not know that there will ever be a declaration of independence and of grievances for mankind, but I believe that if any such document is ever drawn it will be drawn in the spirit of the American Declaration of Independence, and that America has lifted high the light which will shine unto all generations and guide the feet of mankind to the goal of justice and liberty and peace." View of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court chamber in Philadelphia, in a period view with which Edward Seville Smith would have been more familiar, having been somewhat altered since then. (Philadelphia City Hall website)

These clever, meaningful and sharp cartoons of the North American eventually brought action by the State Legislature. Fred Taylor Pusey, E[s]quire, a representative from Chester County and a friend of Governor Pennypacker, who was shown at times with his stove-pipe hat and his boots, had a bill passed forbidding the charicature [sic] of people as carrots, cabbages, or other vegetables and as animals and birds, etc. One U.S. Senator was sometimes shown as a wise old owl, with a drooping eye lid.

As a student-at-law and a member of the younger bar, I was interested and active in the Law Academy of Philadelphia[589], an institution incorporated years ago, and the lectures before the Academy have been said to have been the beginning of the law lectures in the Law Department of the University of Pennsylvania. Certainly the same people were interested in both institutions years ago.

The Law Academy, in addition to the officers of President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, and still has a faculty of a Provost and a number of Vice Provosts, who were members of the Judiciary—judges of the Orphans' Court, Common Pleas, Superior or S[u]preme Court of Pennsylvania, who served out of real interest and presided each week, except in vacation, at the Arguments and Trials in the Academy, conducted by duly assigned members. These arguments and trials were, and still are, heard in the Supreme Court Room in City Hall.[590] The business meetings were conducted by the President after the trial or argument.

The election of the Provosts and officers of the Academy were held annually, and these were festive occasions and real contests developed for the several offices. The contest was usually between the Blue or the White Tickets. I had the high privilege and honor of being Secretary, Treasurer, and President of the Academy.

The Annual Address Committee of the Academy arranged for and entertained the Speaker each year, and many eminent and illustrious names are on the long list of those who have delivered this annual address before the Law Academy. The Historical Society [of Pennsylvania] graciously made its halls available for this ocassion [sic].

While President, this incident came to my notice. There had set for years, on the corner uprights of the seven chairs of the Justices, a finely carved owl. The capitol scandal at Harrisburg had been exploded by Mr. Berry, and there was about to be argued before the Court a question in which one or more of the defendants was interested, and a cartoon had appeared in one of the morning papers showing the owls on the chairs, each with one drooping eyelid. What I noticed was that all of the owls had disappeared from their perches.

During the term of President Woodrow Wilson I was appointed Chief Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, by Ephraim Lederer, Collector.

[589] The Law Academy of Philadelphia has had a long association with the jurists and counselors of Philadelphia and Pennsylvania since at least 1822. Many of the addresses made before this organization were published. Somewhere in family records there is a notation that Edward Smith was a founder of the Law Academy, but of course this is incorrect.

[590] The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, the nation's oldest high appellate court, originally had seated itself in Philadelphia as a circuit court, periodically rotating to other locales in the Commonwealth. In 1877, temporary quarters were made available in the Philadelphia City Hall, then under construction, and became a permanent occupant of the building. Room 454 remains the courtroom of the Supreme Court when it sits in Philadelphia. The room had been called "the handsomest court room in the United States" due to the decorative work of George Herzog, much of which has since been painted over. (>> "State Supreme Court Room 454" in "A City Hall Virtual Tour", website http://www.ajaxelectric.com/cityhall/tour11.htm, accessed 21 Jul 2006.)

Mr. Lederer was a gentleman and an able lawyer, of good family, and an orthodox Hebrew.[591] A fairer or more friendly man I have not known. The former Chief Deputy had resigned, and with the new income tax law added to the work to be done and revenue to be collected and handled, the Collector naturally wished the position filled. The two Democratic factions not being able to agree on an appointee, the Democratic County Chairman, Edgar Lank, Esquire, a fellow member of the Bar and a fellow member of the Society of the Sons of Delaware, introduced me to the Collector and recommended my appointment. Edgar was from Milton, Delaware, where the Lanks were a prominent family. While Papa was Methodist minister there he had performed the marriage ceremony for his parents. With so fine a man as Mr. Lederer as Collector, and the personnel of the office and field forces so diligent, industrious, and loyal, the work was done well. Then, when Mr. Harding[592] was elected, Mr. Lederer said, "Well, Smith, on March 4th we will march forth."[593]

I was married to Dorothy Allen, in Philadelphia; she was the daughter of Alfred Allen and Mamie Kinzler, his wife. The Kinzler family once owned the Queen's Hotel in Lancaster. There was a son, Edward Allen Smith, born in April 1922, but the little fellow lived only a few days. Dorothy is interred in the Allen lot at Mr. [sic] Moriah Cemetery, West Philadelphia.

On January 28, 1925, I married Laura Elizabeth Wood, nee Gonzalez, at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia, with Papa offic[i]ating. Laura is the daughter of J[o]seph M. Gonzalez and Susan Bollinger, his wife. She was the widow of Russell Gardiner Wood of Philadelphia, and Laura was born on July 15, 1891. Their children were: Laura Jean born October 20, 1912, and died January 3, 1939, at Philadelphia; Russell Malvern, born April 26, 1914; and Ida Mae born October 2, 1915.[594]

In 1926 we moved to Ardmore, Pa., where I was in the Trust Department of Lower Merion Trust Company.

[591] Ephraim Lederer was active in numerous Jewish associations and causes of the day. He was associate editor of The Jewish Exponent of Philadelphia and Baltimore; secretary of the Dropsie College for Hebrew and Cognate Learning, chair of the Jewish Educational Board, and a trustee of the Jewish Publication Society; all of Philadelphia. (>>For example, The American Jewish Year Book 5677, September 28, 1916, to September 16, 1917, Jewish Publication Society of America, Philadelphia, 1916.)

[592] President Warren Harding (Republican). Lederer retired as Collector of Internal Revenue. On 8 December 1921, civic leaders feted him at a testimonial dinner at the Bellevue Stratford Hotel on South Broad Street. As reported in the Philadelphia Inquirer:

> "The dinner was announced as a non-partisan affair, but in reality proved to be a Democratic rally. Roland S. Morris, former Ambassador to Japan, the first speaker, asserted that all the policies of Woodrow Wilson are now 'non-partisan' and are get[t]ing unanimous indorsement.
> "Much good-natured fun was poked by several of the speakers at the Volstead act. Robert S. Bright was toastmaster, and other speakers were Miss Mary Archer, Thomas F. McMahon, William A. Glasgow, Jr., Judge Horace Stern and Edward S. Smith." (>>"Notables Pay Tribute to Lederer's Fairness", The Philadelphia Inquirer, 9 Dec 1921.)

[593] Presidential inaugurations were in March at the time.

Edward Seville Smith's Narratives About People, Places, and Events During His Early Life

The "Smith Genealogy" includes some of Edward S. Smith's recollections and observations about life on the Eastern Shore, in Jacksonville, Florida, and in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania:[595]

My grandmother, in addition to her patchwork quilts (and some of them were silk and fancy), made large balls of strips of cloth to be manufactured into carpets. In her magic sewing basket she always had a piece of bee's wax. In her years on the farm with my grandfather, Thomas Nathan Sevil, she kept honey bees and raised those proud birds, the peacocks. The bee's wax was of course to strengthen the sewing thread.

When we lived in Easton—1887 to 1892—in addition to the wood stove in the kitchen, a pot-bellied coal stove was in the dining-living room with registers in the ceilings to pass heat to the upper floors.

Then too the good housewives were delighted by the invention by Mr. Hartzhorn of the new spring roller for window shades which relieved them from the venetian blinds. The wicks of the oil lamps had to be trimmed each morning and the chimneys highly polished, with no finger prints. We children took turns.

The owners of carriages, Daytons and buggies took pride in their upkeep and appearance. The makers and wheelwrights took pride and emphasized the decoration of the hubs and spokes. Hair line stripes of color, red, blue, green or yellow, were used to decorate the hubs and spokes and would glisten in the sunlight.

It was then, too, that the "High Wheels" were being displaced by the bicycle. And when a young man had occasion to ride from Easton to Denton or Preston or elsewhere often an item would appear in the paper that he would do so on a certain day. The belles might see him along the way.[596]

* * * * *

In Easton we lived in a nice semi-detached house on Goldsboro Street,[597] over the railroad, the fifth house on the right hand side of the street. The girls enrolled in the public school.

Mr. and Mrs. Sherman lived in the other portion of the house and the Thomas Cox family, Mr. and Mrs. Cox, Milton, Lelia, and William, lived next to the Shermans. On the other side of us was the Godwin family, and the next corner, a family of Roberts.

A lane ran along the rear of the property, and the back of the yard was latticed off to care for the Chick Sales and chicken house. On the back lane was the barn to accommodate the Sherman and Smith horses and carriages. Elouise was born there [in the house!], and to outward appearances it is much the same, except it is now [before 1963] apartments.[598] The vacant lots across the street, where we played, are now occupied by nice homes.

Usually, wherever we lived, the dining room was also the living room. During the school term, the Cook girls, Ethel and Eugie, would come in and they and my sisters did their lessons on the table. Later they became interested in the teachings of one Eugene Debs.[599] Mr. Cook, the father, had a small bottling plant up the street for soft drinks which he sold in Easton and other towns in the County. Sometimes I would make a few pennies washing bottles.

Easton is in Talbot, sometimes spelled Talbott, County which was settled by the English several years after Captain John Smith's visit to the Eastern Shore from Virginia, about 1606. The County was named for Lady Grace Talbot, sister of the second Lord Baltimore. An English flavor still remains.

The richness of the sea and land and the temperate climate have lured many to seek their fortunes there. When we moved to Easton the population was about three thousand. There were open fields or lots at the rear of our house, between Goldsboro and Dover Streets, except for a few houses to town, and sometimes a two-ring circus would use the site.

At school some class rooms would accommodate more than one grade. One of the higher grades had been doing some blackboard work and Miss Pratt asked Prof. Merdaugh for leave to go to the washroom and said she wanted to "wrench her hands off". With a smile he said, "Miss Pratt wishes to perform a painful operation." She rinsed her hands. The Pratts had a farm outside of Easton and the girls, Emily and Helen, often visited us.

It was in March of 1888 that the Great Blizzard hit the County and it did not miss the Eastern Shore.[600] In Easton it sleeted on top of the snow and then froze into a sheet of ice. There were deep drifts and things were at a standstill. In the drifts on the lots across the street we boys had a wonderful time digging caves and tunnels. Papa couldn't get home for ten days—he was on a visit to the Richardsons near Denton, Caroline County, but he enjoyed the time with the family of Mr. William Potter Richardson in Tuckahoe Neck.[601] He had a good farm and the house was set in the rear of a grove of several acres of natural forest.

The weather cleared after the storm and I had to go for "fresh yeast" for Mother. We always got it from Mrs. Gladding who lived a block or so out Goldsboro Street. With the little tin covered bucket, I was able to ice skate over fences and all, and Mrs. Gladding was glad to see me and to have the yeast for Mother.

[598] This lane is still present today, used as a driveway servicing the rear of homes. When visited in March 2004, the home appeared to be a single-family dwelling. When the site was visited in March 2004, it seemed to be a single-family dwelling. When it was revisited in June 2007, the neighborhood was experiencing revitalization and both houses of the duplex were vacant and undergoing repairs, as was a house across the street.

[599] Eugene V. Debs (1855-1926) was an American labor and political leader. He was a founder of the Industrial Workers of the World (IWW) and was a candidate for President of the United States five times on the Socialist Party of America ticket; the final time, in 1920, while imprisoned in Atlanta, Georgia, for having protested the war (World War I) and was arrested under the Espionage Act of 1917. He had been sentenced to 20 years in 1919, but his sentence was commuted on Christmas Day, 1921, by President Warren G. Harding. In 1924 Debs even was nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize. Numerous books by and about this "rebel" and "radical" have been published.

[600] The Great Blizzard of 1888 struck the northeastern United States from the Chesapeake Bay to Maine on 12-14 March, paralyzing even the major cities for days after several feet of snow fell and swift winds piled drifts.

[601] In the 1880 U.S. census for Hillsborough District 6, Caroline Co., taken in June, William P. Richardson was a farmer 52 years of age; his wife, Anne, was 42, and at that time they had six children, ages 1 month to 13 years.

Mother used only fresh yeast when she could get it. She was a wonderful cook and, with her large family, she had plenty of it to do. As long as I remember, she had hot bread of some kind at every meal: in cold weather, buckwheat cakes; warm weather, corn slappers or corn pone; hot rolls, buns, rusks, and Maryland biscuits which required pounding with an iron or some tool to cut the dough. Her ingenuity eased this pounding job. She reversed one of the blades in her meat grinder, which worked fine. She had raised doughnuts too, had a fine recipe[602], and we had them on holidays from Thanksgiving until Papa's birthday, March 17th.

Often it was my job to look after the horse and carriage—see that the horse was fed, curried and brushed, the best my young hands could do, see that he had clean straw in the stall, and to keep the carriage axles greased. Papa needed this equipment to keep his appointments and to go to see friends, members of the family, and take care of some errands.

Sometimes one of the children would go with Papa on these visits or rides. We were always glad to go. But driving and the roads then are not what they are today. One did all right if he drove 17 miles a day, with a single team. Some roads were oyster shell or clay or sandy, and while today the highways are fairly level, then there were hills and grades, some steep for a heavy loaded farm wagon and some not too steep.

In those days a small stream might cross the road, or there would be a bridge, not too high above a stream. On these there were turn-outs, so one could leave the road and give the horse an opportunity to drink, and give a good soaking to the wheels and spokes. A young person was always useful if you wanted the horse to drink—his check rein needed to be released and then refastened—and there was the gate at the end of the farmer's lane—someone got out of the carriage or wagon to open and close that gate. It used to be that at some country houses or manors you would find at the gate a well-mannered, well-dressed, grinning, colored boy, happy to see you and to render the service.

At first we had "Daisy", a fine chestnut mare. She was a good and fast traveller and had what we called a strong mouth—if she could, she would get the bit in her teeth, then it would be hard to control the speed, especially if she was headed for home. They always know. Then we got "Dexter", a fine horse and a good traveller.

I always liked animals, and one summer day this young boy had his breath almost taken—coming into Easton on Goldsboro Street appeared the famous Borax 20 Mule Team.[603] They were big, black, handsome animals, their harness showing the greatest care and the brass trimming shining, drawing the big wagon. There was no sound from the drivers—the teams were walking—just the tread of the mules and the low roll of the magnificent wagon. I just gasped. The outfit was evidently on its way into town to stop at Covey's Livery Stable.[604] Mr. Covey kept a good livery stable. We children enjoyed seeming Mrs. Covey, a fine horsewoman, ride through town. She rode side-saddle and always had a smile for us kids.

[603] 20 Mule Team brand manufactured powdered Borax and boric acid products and was one of the best-known commercial icons of the 20th century. The brand was first used in 1891 and was registered a trademark of the Pacific Coast Borax Co. in 1894. Later the trademark passed to the Borax Co. Large-scale mining of borax ore began most notably in Death Valley, California, in the late 1800s. This natural product of arid environments was used in ceramics and goldsmithing for centuries, its use in industrial and household uses–everything from digestive aids, milk preservatives, cosmetics, and cleaners for washing and laundering people and things–was widely promoted at the turn to the last century and in later decades. Today, the products are used in producing insulation and fine glass for cooking, optical, and laboratory uses. The actual Twenty-Mule Team was purportedly the invention of J. W. S. Perry and Ed Stiles, who worked at the Harmony Borax Works near present-day Furnace Creek Ranch in Death Valley. They devised gigantic wagons, hitched in tandem, with wheels five feet high in front and seven feet high in the rear, that each could carry ten tons of borax ore; the wagons were hauled by two ten-mule teams stretching out 100 feet. To reach the nearest railroad junction was a 165 mile journey, climbing 2,000 feet; the round trip took 20 days. No wonder when one of the promotional teams came through town it took many a youngster's breath away. The Death Valley mule teams were supplanted by railroads in about five years, but they captured the American imagination on both sides of the sales pitch. Twenty-Mule Teams were periodically rebranded during the 20th century, including the popular Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer film, adeptly named, Twenty Mule Team. (>> The 20-Mule-Team and a Sketch of Its

Unlike sandy Caroline County, Tablot [Talbot] County has plenty of clay which in wet weather was soft and muddy. There is a story I heard years ago of the man on horseback who, riding into Talbot, saw a fine man's cap lying in the road. Dismounting to pick it up, he was startled to hear a man's voice beneath the cap ask whether he would please help him get his mule out of the mud. George Ade, in one of his books, used a variation of this story.[605]

One summer the George Hughes family from Jacksonville, Florida, came north and spent several weeks with people on the other side of town, and Carrie Marvin, also of Jacksonville, visited with us. They were friends of Papa and interested in the New Church. He met them on one of his southern trips. They all enjoyed Easton. The Hughes family were Mr. and Mrs. Hughes, George Jr., Florence, and Adalaide. Mr. Hughes was a druggist and they had a nice home in the Riverside section of Jacksonville.

The Misses Warriner, Florence and Laura, were up at one time too. Mr. Warriner, the father, owned the Warriner House in Jacksonville. A group of them with my sisters visited the Pratt farm near Easton and the Pratt sister[s], Emily and Helen.[606]

In Easton, one evening our Night Blooming Cereus, or Queen of the Night, bloomed and many of the townspeople walked past the house. It sat on the front porch, and Mother and Papa enjoyed seeing the people admire and enjoy it. They bloom in the evening and blossoms fade before morning. It was planted in a large wooden tub. The fragrance is almost overpowering. The white, or sometimes faintly reddish tinged, magnificent blooms are from 3 to 5 inches in diameter. [607]

One evening there was a wonderful display of the Northern Lights. The sky seemed ablaze with vivid colors—reds, yellows, greens—most of the rainbow colors were flashing, [604] Several Covey families resided in Easton; which Coveys are referred to have not been discerned.

[605] George Ade (1866-1944) was an American humorist and dramatist. His work was published in newspapers and in volumes of his collected works. In Single Blessedness, and Other Observations (Doubleday, Page and Co., Garden City, N.Y., 1922, pp. 5-6), he set the stage for a thousand retellings: "Down in Indiana, where I used to live, we had black prairie mud. At this time of year it would take four horses to pull a two wheeled cart with a man and a sack of flour on it . . . . The roads had been practically impassable for weeks, but they were drying rapidly, especially on top. You have doubtless seen, gentlemen, a muddy road with this dry crust. At intervals along the road there were deep rucks, or 'mud holes,' as they were called . . . . In those days a mud hole was called a 'loblolly.'" Country lanes and drainage were, in fact, common themes in his writing. (George Ade was the uncle of Louis Phillip Ade, second husband of Ida Mae Wood; they are noted in the Gonzalez Family Collateral Genealogy, farther below.)

[606] "Smith Genealogy", pp. 65-70.

[607] Its scientific name is Hydrocereus undatus, a member of the family Cactaceae. It is widespread in the American tropics and blooms in the late spring and early summer. The white, fragrant flowers can grow to 12 inches across and 14 inches long (or "deep").

wavelike, across the heavens and it was a display of some duration. Some thought it was the end of the world, or were afraid it might be.

Another night in the fall of the year the sky lit up again—the Hubbard Cannery was on fire. It was a block or so back of the house. It was a wonderful sight, with canned tomatoes exploding in the air. Easton lived on canned tomat[o]es for some time. The Hubbards were a fine family. It was a great loss for them, I am sure. Some of the same family are probably still interested in Canneries. On a recent visit to Rock Hall I saw the Hubbard Canning and Packing Company, and we enjoyed some of their oysters, fish, and sea-food.

My father's brother, Captain James Smith (Uncle Jimmy) was planning to move with his family from Centreville to Denver, Colorado. They went shortly before or after our Smith family moved to Jacksonville, Florida. We all went to see them in Centreville in their nice home and buildings used in his construction business—it was right in town on one of the main streets. Uncle Jim and Aunt Teed [Teen] were there, the sons and the daughter, Lulu, were there of course. While there we visited our cousins, the Watsons, who lived on their good farm just across the Corsica River.

One summer Cousin Sarah Augusta Covington Massey, wife of William T. Massey, was ill. Roberta was there visiting and Cousin Julia Baynard Martin was there to help. After Roberta came home, I went to the farm and Mother was there too, for a time.

I was but a boy, but I got my first ride on a water wagon or cart. It was time to thresh the wheat and one day the equipment was in the field and the farm hands ready. The thresher had to have water for the boiler, and the fist thing I knew I was boosted on the cart containing the water barrel. A gray horse, which evidently had been there before, was hitched to the cart. I was to drive to a brook, load the barrel, and continue the process until the work was done. I thought "they must think I can do it"; so I would see how it worked out. Thanks to that horse. At the stream he knew just where and how to back the cart so that it was in good position for bailing the water into the barrel. Evidently he had performed the duty before, more than once. All worked out well and the engine had its water to finish its job.

We loved Cousin Gus. It was her last illness that summer. Papa conducted the funeral service. It was a long, dusty ride, with many carriages, from her farm just below Church Hill to the cemetery at Chestertown.

Uncle Massey was a man of large physique—tall, strong, and over 300 pounds. A man driving into Church Hill said he saw the biggest "peach pluck" he ever saw on a farm just out of town. He had mistaken Mr. Massey for a "peach pluck". He grew lots of peaches. He and Cousin Gus had a fine, well stocked and equipped farm. After her death, he sold the farm and went to Baltimore.

In Easton one day they loaded all the school children, dressed in red and black sashes extending from one shoulder to the waist line, with a black and red rosette at the waist, on a passenger train for a ride to the Shore—reckon the route had just been completed. I do not remember where the terminal of the line was—at the time there were only the shore, water, and trees there. The line may be out of existence by this time.

While Papa was stationed at Easton he lectured and preached at Easton, Preston, Williston, Tuckahoe Neck, Potters Landing [i.e., Williston], and Peach Blossom. He had built a small church at Preston.[608] About 1892 he was transferred to Jacksonville, Florida, where he continued his missionary work in that city and in Savannah, Georgia. In Jacksonville we had a nice, detached home, not far from the Hughes, Warriners, and the Challens, and not far from the Riverside School. It was on Oak Street, No. 743, and about two blocks from Riverside Drive [Riverside Ave.].

In Jacksonville services were held in Library Hall in the center of the city. The building belonged to a Mr. L'Lengle [sic] who with his family was interested in the teaching of the Church. It was on a public square or park, on one side of which was the St. James Hotel and on another side the large Windsor Hotel.

The house of 743 Oak Street was built three or four feet above the ground, and Elouise and Ralph enjoyed playing under it in the sandy soil.

Next door lived Mr. and Mrs. James Bowden, a very nice couple. Her daughter, Hattie Hunter, and their son, William Bowden, lived with them. Mrs. Bowden, a large and buxsom [sic] lady, was from Georgia. At the rear of their lot was their stable where they kept Judy, a fine little mare. Mr. Bowden was in the building and construction business in the city. In the morning July [sic] would not go past the kitchen door until she got her batter cakes from Mrs. Bowden. Elsie Simmons, who was with the railroad, also from Georgia, lived with the Bowdens.[609]

I attended the Riverside public school of which Prof. Brown was the principal, and the high school in the city. The schools at the time had one session a day, from 9 A.M. to 1 P.M. At times I worked in the Hughes Drug Store, including the soda fountain, at Ocean and Bay Streets. Bay Street at the time was the main retail street, and the in the afternoon the street for people to promenade, especially in the late afternoon, after the heat of the day.

Flagler's daily paper, the "Florida Citizen" was published on Bay Street near the viaduct which crossed the railroad yards into Lavilla and Riverside. Plant's newspaper, the "Times-Union", was also on Bay Street, together with the evening paper, "The Metropolis". I worked in the mailing department of the "Citizen" and would report at about 3 o'clock in the morning. Mr. Hockett, who was in charge of the mailing department, lived across the street from our house, and together we walked to work.[610] After the papers were in the mail, I went home for breakfast and then during the school term, went to school, with the afternoon for study and pleasure, when not employed at the drug store.

[608] The location of this church has not been determined. Perhaps the reference is more correctly stated that Rev. Smith built up a congregation in Preston, but it may be possible that a group did in fact fund the construction of a small church, information about which has since been lost.

[609] In the 1900 U.S. census for Jacksonville, J[ames] H. Bowden and his wife, L. C. Bowden, resided at 519 Riverside Ave. In their household at the time also lived Edward Hunter and his wife Hattie Hunter, and boarder E.M. Simmons. James Bowden was born in Virginia; he was occupied as a contractor. L. C. Bowden, Edward and Hattie Hunter, and Elsie Simmons, all were born in Georgia. Edward was at the time a plumber; Elsie Simmons was a railroad cook. Also of note is the fact that Robert Lee Sevil (see the Sevil and Wells Families collateral genealogy) resided at 511 Riverside Ave., Jacksonville, at the time of the 1910 U.S. census and when he registered for the military draft in 1918.

[610] In the 1900 U.S. census for Jacksonville, the family of a D. W. Hockett, occupation "Printer-Compositor", is listed residing at 315 Riverside Ave. Edward S. Smith's narrative, shortly earlier, noted that his home was about two blocks from Riverside Ave., and here he indicates that Mr. Hockett lived across the street. Of course, there is ample time during the several years that passed between the Smiths leaving Jacksonville and the 1900 census, but this still does not also explain the Bowdens, also just mentioned, living next door.

Many men had handsome sail boats on the St. John's River, and at Jacksonville is a wide expanse of water. One of the favorite ocean beaches near Jacksonville was then Pablo Beach, now Jacksonville Beach, reached by rail or bicycles. We boys all had bicycles.

On one occasion the "Citizen" had an excursion by train to St. Augustine and, at another time, up the St. Johns to Green Cove Springs[611], a large sulphur spring. Entertainment was furnished and the excursions were thoroughly enjoyed.

Oranges on trees were certainly a novelty to the Smith boys and girls. At the Warriner house Mr. Warriner gave us a rake and told us to help ourselves from the trees in the yard. We did and enjoyed it. Some of the street shade trees in Riverside and Lavilla were the uncultivated variety of orange. They were not sweet like the cultivated one, but on the sour side, not sour like a lemon. They were good with a little salt, which was the way the natives like them.

There were two institutions in Jacksonville—Fire Chief Haney and his horse and carriage. He was a fearless driver and many time I saw him go around a corner on two wheels. He distinguished himself and his fire fighters at the big Jacksonville fire which took place about 1898, after we had moved north again.[612]

The other was the "old rag man". He with his donkey and cart would drive along the street singing some little jingle. He and the cart and donkey were always highly decorated with rags. He rather frightened Roberta one day. She was wearing a red dress so his jingle ran—"I like the girl with the red dress on, the red dress on," etc. He meant no harm or disrespect—all knew him. One day he became a hero in helping to capture a law breaker and was shot in the foot. That did it—I think he wore his foot bandage for the rest of his days.

On Saturdays I or the other boys went to Library Hall and swept and dusted. On Sunday there was usually a good attendance, including the Hughes family, Llengles [sic], Challens, the Smiths, and others. Papa conducted services in Savannah, also.[613]

When we lived in Jacksonville, milk was 8 cents a quart—much of the food for cattle had to be shipped from the north. One day Jim Bowden[614] was riding in the country where a man was driving some cattle. Just to be neighborly, Jim said "That's a fine herd of cattle". The man replied, "Damn lie, nothing but hoof and hide".

[611] Green Cove Springs, "the Saratoga of the South" according to promotional literature, takes its name from about a dozen natural sulfurous springs near the St. Johns River, now in Spring Park in the city of Green Cove Springs, Florida. The springs were a popular tourist attraction from the mid-1800s, where bathers enjoyed the therapeutic values of the 78-degree mineralized waters. Although the spring water was even prescribed orally for a variety of medicinal reasons, most people simply enjoyed the swimming. (>>City of Green Cove Springs website, http://www.greencovesprins.com, accessed 21 Jul 2006.)

It was in the days of the big leg-of-motton [sic] sleeves. Jim was a small man and Mrs. Bowden was a large woman. She looked over her high sleeves as they rode on their buggy and said "Jim, where are you?"

While we lived in Jacksonville, they electrified the trolley line which was of course a great improvement and caused great joy and enthusiasm; Riverside never shined more brightly.

When I was about 16 years of age Papa was again transferred, this time to Philadelphia, and he rented a large, semi-detached house at 614 North 43rd Street, West Philadelphia.

When we moved to Jacksonville we were not used to drinking water from the sulphur springs, so water was drawn off in buckets, set in the airway, and soon the sulphur taste passed off.

When we came to Philadelphia there was no adequate filtration system and we used, in each household, crockery containers with sand stone filter bottoms in the upper section, making water available in the section below with the tap or spigot. When one took a bath the water might be clear or brown or inky, depending on the weather and streams. Senator James P. McNichol (Sunny Jim), contractor and one of the city bosses, did a fine job of building adequate filter beds, which of course was a boon to the health and comfort of the people of our city. He was a tall, raw boned, good natured Irishman, and he was usually smiling. "Sunny Jim". [615]

The genealogy of the Gonzalez family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows.

In the "Smith Genealogy", Edward S. Smith notes about the Gonzalez family: [616]

> "This Gonzalez family, on the maternal side, are descendants from Stakeley [sic] Westcott[617] (1592-1677) of Providence, Rhode Island, one of the original Groupe [sic] with Roger Williams. And there is a family tradition, too, that they are of the family of James Wilson, one of the framers of the Constitution of the United States. When his remains were brought to Philadelphia and re-interred at Christ Church, Laura's father, Joseph W. Gonzalez, was a part of the procession."

The genealogical relation of the Gonzalez family and James Wilson are as yet uncorroborated. Newspaper reports of the ceremony commemorating James Wilson take note only of the pomp and the notable political attendees. Wilson's remains had been conveyed from North Carolina aboard the U.S.S. Dubuque, and [616] "Smith Genealogy", p. 85. None of these allegations have yet been corroborated. Descendency is claimed from Stukeley Westcott (1591/92-1677), who emigrated from England to Rhode Island and was one of the founders of that colony. The James Wilson descendency relates to the James Wilson (1742-1798), Scottish immigrant, who became a lawyer in Pennsylvania and, when he became involved in the politics of the American Revolution, was elected to both the Provincial Assembly and the Continental Congress when he lived in Carlisle, Pennsylvania. He was one of the moderate members of the Congress who voted for a three-week delay in considering the 7 June resolution for independence, but voted in the affirmative during the 1-2 July ballots and signed the Declaration of Independence of 2 August. He was removed from Congress the following year when his overt conservatism was opposed. He spent the winter of 1777-1778 in Annapolis, Maryland, then returned to live in Philadelphia When during the fall of 1779, during a period of economic inflation and food shortages, a mob set out to attack the republican leadership. Wilson and 35 colleagues barricaded themselves in his home at 3rd and Walnut Sts., which afterward came to be known as "Fort Wilson". After bloodshed leading to a few deaths on both sides, the parties cooled and pardons were issued. During the Constitutional Convention of 1787, he was vigorously involved in the crafting of the American Constitution and, in his representative state of Pennsylvania, he overcame powerful opposition in the adoption of the document. He was in 1789 named by President George Washington as an Associate Justice in the Supreme Court of the United States; the same year he was appointed the first law professor in the College of Philadelphia (later the University of Pennsylvania). In 1797, he moved to Burlington, New Jersey, to escape financial debts; and in 1798 while travelling on court business in North Carolina while under the oppression of political calls for his removal from office, succumbed after a period of mental stress. "He died a tormented man, on the run from his creditors and on the verge of impeachment" (David W. Maxey, "The Translation of James Wilson", Supreme Court Historical Society Yearbook, 1990). He was buried quietly in the Johnston family cemetery of his brother-in-law's family near Edenton, and even the Philadelphia newspapers passed over news of his death; but in November 1906 his remains (as noted in the Edward Smith narrative here) were reinterred with renewed interest and pomp, in the Christ Church Burial Ground in Philadelphia amidst others of the Founding Fathers. [617] Stukeley Westcott (ca. 1592-1677) was one of founders of what would become the state of Rhode Island, one of the twelve original members of the First Baptist Church organized in Providence in 1639. The genealogical relationship is through the Lovell family actually, with the marriage of Susan Bollinger to Joseph M. Gonzalez, Sr. The Bollingers in turn had married into the Lovell family, descendants of Lovells from Rhode Island. The connection is through the marriage of Margaret Westcott (1756-1818), a descendant of Stuckeley Westcott, to Alexander Lovell (1747-1814) [No. 4 in the Lovell Family collateral genealogy].

escorted first to Independence Hall where he lay in state with the First City Troop as honor guard. The casket was taken then to Christ Church on 2nd St., and, after services, to the burial ground at 5th and Arch Sts. The newspapers took no notice of descendants who may have participated in the procession.[618]

[619] Woodlands Cemetery, Philadelphia. The lot is not marked, but is adjacent to the lot holding the remains of members of the Lovell family, who were residential neighbors and family relations of the Bollingers and the Gonzalezes. (Also refer to the Lovell Family collateral genealogy, herein.) The Evans obelisk, to the north of the Gonzalez and Lovell gravesites, marks the burial place of the renowned American dentist, Thomas W. Evans, who died in 1908 ("Dr. Evans' Funeral", The Philadelphia Inquirer, 18 May 1898). The monument is the tallest in the cemetery, and was erected several years later. Woodlands Cemetery is on a small part of the 600-acre estate, The Woodlands, that had once been owned by gentleman horticulturist William Hamilton (1745-1813). He had inherited an original 356 acres owned by his father, Andrew Hamilton, when the elder Hamilton died in 1747. The mansion, which still stands as the cemetery office, caretaker's residence, and meeting space, was built ca. 1770 and modified several times. The Woodlands has its own distinctive history, summarized by James A. Jacobs, "William Hamilton and The Woodlands: A Construction of Refinement in Philadelphia", Pennsylvania Magazine of History and Biography, Vol. 130, no. 2 (Apr 2006), pp. 181-209. Woodlands Cemetery was crafted after portions of The Woodlands were sold off during periods of development in West Philadelphia. In 1839, the Woodlands Cemetery Co. was formed, and plans were laid out for it as a parkland cemetery much like Laurel Hill Cemetery, also along the Schuylkill River in Philadelphia. The Woodlands was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1975. [622] There was a publicly-traded shipping corporation called the International Merchant Marine that was at one time controlled by the American International Corporation. It is not clear whether Edward S. Smith meant this entity or used it as a generic term that embraced the U.S. Merchant Marine; more probably he did refer to the company, which was based in Philadelphia. After the Merchant Marine Act of 1916, the AIC built the American International Shipbuilding Corporation, one of the largest ship-building enterprises that was constructed on Hog Island in Philadelphia, the swampy site of what today is now the Philadelphia International Airport. Martin, "The Saga of Hog Island, 1917-1921: The Story of the First Great War Boondoggle", The Memory Hole website, http://tmh.floonet.net/articles/hogisle.shtml, reprinted from James J. Martin, The Saga of Hog Island and Other Essays in Inconvenient History (Ralph Myles, Colorado Springs, Colorado, 1977).

In any case, the Merchant Marine generally refers to the consortium of civilian-owned cargo and passenger vessels usually conscripted for wartime service, or, in peacetime, under operating agreements with the government entity under which they fall. The U.S. Merchant Marine is thus auxiliary to the U.S. Navy. Prior to World War II it was got home it was another Christmas. He was happiest when he was able to please others, always unselfish. In the oriental ports he would shop for gifts that he knew the home folks would enjoy, and our home has many of his remembrances: fine brasses and ivory pieces, teekwood [sic] screens, and many other lovely things that caught his eye in far-off lands. He was a 32nd degree Mason, St. Alban's Lodge 529." [623]

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census John B. Gonzalez was listed as a "Sailor, merchant marine", residing at 1420 Porter St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

7. William MacPherson Gonzalez (1895–1961)

He worked for the First Pennsylvania Banking and Trust Co. for 44 years until his retirement.[624] He and his wife resided in the Chestnut Hill section of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where they still resided when the "Smith Genealogy" was completed.[625]

Generation No. 3

3. Joseph M.[3] Gonzalez, Jr. (Joseph M.[2], Elizabeth A.[1]) was born March 1889 in Pennsylvania. He married Lida. She was born about 1889 in New Jersey.

Children of Joseph Gonzalez and Lida are:

7 i. Joseph C.[4] Gonzalez, born about 1913 in New Jersey.
8 ii. Eldred W. Gonzalez, born about 1916 in New Jersey.

NOTES

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census, Joseph M. Gonzalez, Jr. (1889–) [No. 3] was a farmer.

Residences of Joseph M. Gonzalez, Jr. (from U.S. censuses and family information):
1920 census: Harrisonville-Woodford Road, South Harrison, Gloucester Co., New Jersey
Ca. 1960: Westville, Camden Co., New Jersey

The "Smith Genealogy" further notes that (ca. 1960) he was retired, had grandchildren, and with his wife had a summer cottage at Harvey Cedars, New Jersey. [626] an organization with far less federal government involvement than is familiar today; it also antecedes the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 and the 1943 establishment of the United States Merchant Marine Academy. An informational website about the U.S. Merchant Marine during wartime is at http://www.usmm.org (accessed 12 Aug 2007). Unfortunately, many of the available historical resources relating to the U.S. Merchant Marine is restricted to the period of World War II and to the 18th-19th centuries. Although the merchant marine in general is an international consortium, there is no separate entity as such.

4. Laura[3] Gonzalez (Joseph M.[2], Elizabeth A.[1]) was born 15 July 1891 in Pennsylvania, and died 22 August 1966. She married (1) Russell Gardiner Wood. She married (2) Edward Seville Smith 28 January 1925 at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, son of John Smith and Ella Seville. He was born 02 March 1880 in Denton, Caroline Co., Maryland, and died 26 September 1963 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Also see Additions & Corrections

See the main Smith genealogy for information relating to Laura (Gonzalez) and Edward Seville Smith.

Children of Laura Gonzalez and Russell Wood are:

9 i. Laura Jean[10] Wood, born 20 October 1912 in Pennsylvania; died 03 January 1937 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

\+ 10 ii. Russell Malvern Wood, born 26 April 1914 in Pennsylvania; died after 1966.

11 iii. Ida Mae Wood, born 02 October 1915 in Pennsylvania; died after 1966. She married (1) Horace Delaney. She married (2) Louis Phillip Ade.

NOTES

Regarding the children of Laura (Gonzalez) and Russell Gardiner Wood, the "Smith Genealogy" remarks, "The children had attended the Methodist Church in South Philadelphia, and continued attending that church in Ardmore."[627]

9. Laura Jean Wood (1912–1937)

She was educated at Lower Merion High School, Lower Merion, Pennsylvania. She did secretarial work at the central office of the First Pennsylvania Banking and Trust Company. Another date of death for her may be 3 January 1939.

11. Ida Mae (Wood) Ade (1915–1986)

She was educated at Germantown High School, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Regarding Ida Mae and her husbands, the "Smith Genealogy" notes: [628]

> "Ida Mae Wood, after graduating from Germantown High School, married Horace Delaney and they lived for a while in Philadelphia and in Washington, D.C. After their divorce, she married Louis P. Ade of Washington where he has been associated with the government service. His library contains nearly the entire works of his uncle George Ade.[629] They live in Georgetown and she is interested in the real estate and insurance business, dealing mostly in Georgetown real estate. Louis Phil[l]ip Ade and his mother, Nellie, came from Indiana. He is a graduate of Purdue and likes to see football there each year. They recently had a fine trip to Europe and often take trips in this country, including California. They enjoy the 'Pennsylvania Dutch' sections of this state and their quaint habits and costumes."

Louis Phillip Ade
(husband of Ida Mae (Wood) Delaney)

He was a graduate of Perdue University. He resided in Washington, D.C., and Georgetown, Virginia. The address book of Elisabeth C. Smith gives their address as "3025 Dunbarton, Old Georgetown, Washington N.W., D.C." A later address book of Earle Smith gives their address as 2924 N St. N.W., Washington, D.C. An envelope from Ade posted 4 November 1969 gives his return address as 2921 Tilden St., N.W., Washington, D.C. Also see Additions & Corrections

10. Russell Malvern[10] Wood (Laura[9] Gonzalez, Susan[8] Bollinger, Laura Edith[7] Lovell, Adfer Eddy[6], Eleazer[5], Alexander[4], Alexander[3], John[2], Thomas[1]) was born 26 April 1914 in Pennsylvania, and died after 1966. He married Emma Adelaide Foos 02 September 1938, daughter of Harry Foos and Helen.

Children of Russell Wood and Emma Foos are:

12 i. Russell Henry[11] Wood.
13 ii. Robert William Wood.
14 iii. Jean Helen Wood, born about 1945.
15 iv. Donald Wood.

NOTES

The "Smith Genealogy" notes about Russell Malvern Wood (1914–after 1966) [No. 10] that "After his graduation [from Lower Merion High School], Russell, like his Uncle John Gonzalez, became interested in the sea. He graduated from the Training Ship at Philadelphia Navy Yard and spent several years in the Merchant Marine Service[630], where he made several trips around the world as an officer and later as Captain." He later worked as trucking superintendent for the American Stores Company (a grocery chain).[631]

According to the "Smith Genealogy", around 1962 Russell Malvern Wood resided in Levittown, Pennsylvania. An address book of Earle C. Smith (predating 1964) lists his address as 40 Jump Hill Rd., Levittown, Pennsylvania.

Jean Helen Wood (ca. 1945–) [No. 14] was known as "Jeannie".

End of Gonzalez Family collateral genealogy

Lovell Family
Collateral Genealogy
(including Bollinger Family)

(45 descendants[632])

The genealogy of the Lovell family, and the Bollinger family into which they married, as they relate to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Thomas Lovell

Generation No. 1

1. Thomas[1] Lovell was from Ipswich, Massachusetts.

Child of Thomas Lovell is:

\+ 2 i. John[2] Lovell.

[630] Regarding the U.S. Merchant Marine, see note under John Bollinger Gonzalez, above.

[631] "Smith Genealogy", pp. 83-84.

Generation No. 2

2. John[2] Lovell (Thomas[1]) He married Elizabeth Pindere 12 September 1689.

Child of John Lovell and Elizabeth Pindere is:
+ 3 i. Alexander[3] Lovell, born 10 April 1698 , of Ipswich, Massachusetts; died 07 October 1768.

NOTES

Notes about John Lovell [No. 2] from J. Lathrop Mack include, "John Lovell fought in King Phillip's [sic] War in Major Appleton's Regiment."[633] John Lovell is noted in the muster rolls of Maj. Appleton, on 24 June 1676 and (under Capt. Johnson and Capt. Jacob) 24 March 1676.[634]

Generation No. 3

3. Alexander[3] Lovell (John[2], Thomas[1]) was born 10 April 1698 , of Ipswich, Massachusetts, and died 07 October 1768. He married (1) Mary Waterman 23 May 1731 in Providence, Rhode Island. He married (2) Jerusha.

Children of Alexander Lovell and undetermined* are:
+ 4 i. Alexander[4] Lovell, born 1747 in Scituate, Rhode Island; died 13 April 1814 in Smithfield, Rhode Island.
5 ii. Margaret Place Lovell.
6 iii. Mary Lovell.
7 iv. Waite Lovell.
8 v. Nathaniel Lovell.

*The mother(s) of Alexander's children is/are uncertain. Alexander's will mentions Jerusha as his wife, and, in addition to his children, a grandson, William Place Lovell.

Generation No. 4

4. Alexander[4] Lovell (Alexander[3], John[2], Thomas[1]) was born 1747 in Scituate, Rhode Island, and died 13 April 1814 in Smithfield, Rhode Island. He married Margaret Westcott about 1780, daughter of William Westcott and Christina. She was born 10 September 1756 in Cranston, Providence, Rhode Island, and died 09 June 1818 in Smithfield, Rhode Island.

Children of Alexander Lovell and Margaret Westcott are:
+ 9 i. Eleazer[5] Lovell, born 30 June 1784 in Massachusetts or Rhode Island; died May 1868 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

[633] Maj. Samuel Appleton, of Ipswich, was the commander of the Massachusetts Regiment in the Narragansett campaign (December 1675). King Philips' War (1675-1676) came as the result of the Plymouth insisting on a monopoly in the acquisition of land from Native Americans, and the mishandling of the captured Wampanoag leader, Wamsutta, who died of illness as the result of his capture. Subsequent breakdowns in relations took place between the colonists and Native Americans led by Wamsutta's successor, his brother, Metacom, also called Philip. However, not all Native Americans took Philip's side and fought alongside suspicious colonial forces; but the native combatants turned the tide of the war. The conflict ended with casualties of one in ten on both sides, including the death of Philip. The native people who lost the conflict were sent into slavery and local servitude. [634] "Men and Officers who served in King Philips War; Major Samuel Appleton and the Forces Under Him", website http://www.worldroots.com/brigitte/famous/a/appletonstory.htm (accessed 9 Dec 2004).

10 ii. Mowry Lovell, died 06 February 1816.
11 iii. Nancy Lovell. She married Jonathan Barnes 02 March 1809 in Smithfield, Rhode Island.

NOTES

Information from the records of J. Lathrop Mack note about Alexander Lovell (1747–1814) [No. 4]:

> "He was listed in the Scituate, R.I. Military Census of 1777—age 16–50 'able to bear arms'. His name appears on list of Scituate names, probably Captain Stephen Knight's Co—(R.I. Historical Society Military Papers, Mss. 632)."

Nancy Lovell [No. 11] was the youngest child, but there were likely more children than those listed here.

Generation No. 5

9. Eleazer[5] Lovell (Alexander[4], Alexander[3], John[2], Thomas[1]) was born 30 June 1784 in Massachusetts or Rhode Island or New Jersey, and died 22 May 1868 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He married Alice Howland 1810. She was born 11 September 1788 in Massachusetts or Rhode Island, and died 07 March 1879.

Children of Eleazer Lovell and Alice Howland are:

12 i. George[6] Lovell.
13 ii. Henry Clay Lovell.
14 iii. Olney Leander Lovell, died after 1857.
15 iv. Phoebe Lovell, died in Cecil Co., Maryland?
16 v. Syra or Sariah Lovell. [See Notes.]
18 vi. Westcott Lovell, born about 1810 in Gloucester, Rhode Island; died 19 March 1887 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
\+ 19 vii. Adfer Eddy Lovell, Sr., born 19 March 1813 in Smithfield, Rhode Island; died 28 February 1897 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
20 viii. Lydia Eddy Lovell, born about 1816; died in Cecil Co., Maryland?
\+ 21 ix. Emer Smith Lovell, born about 1824 in Massachusetts; died 14 September 1894 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
22 x. George Syra Lovell, born about 1828 in Massachusetts; died 14 October 1897 in Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania. He married Mary Frances Whitechurch; born between July–September 1843 in Stepney, London, Middlesex, England; died June 1932 in Pennsylvania.

NOTES

No. 16, Sariah and Syra Lovell, had been entered separately in the database from which some of this information was obtained; no additional data accompanied them. It seems that the two entries refer to the same person; accordingly, the entries are combined here.

9. Eleazer Lovell (1784–1868)

Eleazer Lovell moved to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, by 1860. In city directories, he is always listed as "gentleman", indicating a man of his own means.

Residences of Eleazer Lovell (from U.S. censuses and Philadelphia city directories):
1830: Brimfield Twp., Hampden Co., Massachusetts.
1860 census: 19th Ward, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
1862, 1863 city directories: Cumberland St. below Trenton Ave.
1864–1866 city directories and 1868 death certificate: 723 Wood St.

The 1860 census for the 19th Ward, Philadelphia, also lists a household headed by an Eleazor Lovell, aged 35, grocer, with wife, Alice, aged 33, and children "Wescott", 10, and Lydia, 7; all born in Pennsylvania. Other than the coincidence of names, and a grocer's occupation that other members of the Lovell family held in Philadelphia around 1860, the relationship of this family to the Lovells the subject here is uncertain.

Eleazer Lovell was buried 22 May 1868 in Sec. H., Lot 324, Woodlands Cemetery, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

13. Henry Clay Lovell

The bodily remains of Henry Clay Lovell may have been transferred to Philadelphia from another location. He was interred 4 April 1873 in Sec. H, Lot 324, Woodlands Cemetery, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

14. Olney Leander Lovell (–after 1857)

Residences for Olney Leander Lovell (from Philadelphia city directories):
1857: 86 Walnut St. [business, occupation not listed]; home, Camden, New Jersey
1858: 406 Walnut St. [business, occupation not listed]; home, Camden, New Jersey

His bodily remains may have been transferred to Philadelphia from another location. He was interred 4 April 1873 in Sec. H, Lot 324, Woodlands Cemetery, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

15. Phoebe Lovell

Her bodily remains may have been transferred to Philadelphia from another location. She was interred 16 May 1883, Sec. H, Lot 324, Woodlands Cemetery, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

18. Westcott Lovell (ca. 1810–1887)

Occupations and business addresses of Westcott Lovell (from U.S. censuses and Philadelphia city directories):
1861 city directory: Clerk
1863 city directory: Grocer, Frankford Ave. and Sergeant St.
1869 city directory: Clockmaker
1870 census: Clock dealer
1872 city directory: Salesman, 627 Market St.
1875 city directory: Clerk
1878 city directory: Salesman

Residences of Wescott Lovell (from U.S. censuses and Philadelphia city directories):
1861, 1863 city directories: Cumberland St. near Trenton Ave.
1864–1866, 1869 city directories: 723 Wood St.
1870 census: 6th Ward, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
1872, 1875 city directories: 723 Brown St.
1878 city directory: 315 Arch St.

He was buried 23 March 1887 in Sec. H., Lot 326, Woodlands Cemetery, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

20. Lydia Eddy Lovell (ca. 1816–)

Her bodily remains may have been transferred to Philadelphia. She was interred 2 June 1883 in Sec. H, Lot 326, Woodlands Cemetery, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

22. George Syra Lovell (ca. 1828–1897)

George S. Lovell founded and operated G. S. Lovell & Co., clock sellers, continuing the family business that in Philadelphia dated to 1841. Adfer Lovell, Sr., began with the business of Lovell & Smith, which soon became his business alone, and later, with his brother, Emer S. Lovell. A postal envelope (cancellation date year 18–, illegible) advertises “G. S. Lovell & Co. Importers of Fine Clocks, Bronzes, Etc. and Wholesale Dealers in American Clocks of Every Manufacture, 1019 & 1021 Market Street, Philadelphia.”

Philadelphia city directories list G. S. Lovell as a clock seller first in 1863 at 5 N. 3rd St., then by 1869 at 40 N. 4th St., then by 1872 at 627 Market St. The firm of G.S. Lovell & Co. begins by 1883 at 731 Market St., then by 1885 is situated at 1019-1021 Market St.; partners are listed as George S. and Emer S. Lovell. In the 1893 city directory, the firm changes its name to the G. S. Lovell Clock Co.; George S. Lovell is listed as president, Emer S. Lovell, vice-president; Michael Reed Minnich[635], secretary; Percy Whitechurch, treasurer.[636] (The firm may have incorporated at this time; this is as yet unchecked.) The families of the officers are related by marriage.

In the 1894 Philadelphia business directory, the Seth Thomas Clock Co. also listed its address as 1021 Market St., which indicates that the G.S. Lovell Clock Co. was an official distributor for Seth Thomas; and there was a Seth Thomas post clock displayed on the street in front of the store. In 1902, apparently, the Lovell Clock Co. moved to 18 S. 10th St.; this address is given for the first time in the 1903 city directory.

Occupations and businesses address of George S. Lovell prior to entering the clock business in 1863 (from Philadelphia city directories):

1859: Countinghouse accountant, 406 Walnut St.
1860: "flour", Frankford Ave., corner of Sergeant St.
1861: Clerk, "groceries, flour & feed", Frankford Ave., corner of Sergeant St.
1862: Grocer, Frankford Ave. and Serill St., Frankford [section of northeast Philadelphia]
1880 U.S. census: Clock merchant

Residential addresses for George S. Lovell (from U.S. censuses and Philadelphia city directories):

1861 city directory: Cumberland St., below Trenton Ave.
1863 city directory: Cumberland St., near Trenton Ave.
1864–1866, 1869 city directories: 723 Wood St.
1870 census*: 25th Ward, Bridesburg section, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
1872 city directory: Frankford Rd. near Madison Ave.
1875–1896: Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania; but the 1878 directory lists his home in Ardmore, Pennsylvania. [Not every directory seen for this time period.]
1880 census: Ardmore, Lower Merion Twp., Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania
1897 death certificate: Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania

*In the 1870 census, he appears only in the Second Enumeration, which lists just name, age, and sex of individuals; listed there are George Lovell, 40, and Mary F. Lovell, 25.

George S. Lovell's funeral was held from the Church of the Redeemer, Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania. He was buried 18 October 1897 in Sec. H, Lot 326, Woodlands Cemetery, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Mary (Whitechurch) Lovell (1843–1932)
(wife of George Syra Lovell)

Mary F. Lovell, wife of George S. Lovell, was in 1894 a delegate to the World Convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.[637]

At the time of the 1910 U.S. census she was employed in clock manufacturing; she resided then at 215 Summit Ave., Jenkintown, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania. In 1910 at least, she was the President of the Pennsylvania Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, headquartered in Jenkintown.[638]

[635] Michael Reed Minnich married Mary E. Lovell [No. 29 in this collateral genealogy].

[636] These officers are repeated in an advertisement placed in The American Historical Register and Monthly Gazette of the Patriotic-Hereditary Societies of the United States of America, at least in the volume for Sep 1894-Feb 1895. The advertisement notices "G. S. Lovell Clock Co. Clocks, Bronzes, Jewelry, 1019 & 1021 Market Street, Philadelphia, Pa."

[637] The Philadelphia Inquirer, 21 Oct 1894. Organized in 1874, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is still in existence (website http://www.wctu.org, accessed 19 Jul 2006). Originally pledged to abstinence from alcohol, today it includes tobacco and other drugs. A white ribbon bow has been its symbol since the union's origin.

[638] The Philadelphia Inquirer, 22 Aug 1910.

She was buried 28 June 1932 in Sec. H, Lot 326, Woodlands Cemetery, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. There is no marker on her grave (2006); she is buried to the left of her husband, whose grave does have a marker.

The Whitechurch lineage, as so far as determined, is as follows:

Generation No. 1

1. Honoria[1] was born about 1792 in England. She married Whitechurch.

Children of Honoria are:

\+ 2 i. Robert[2] Whitechurch, born about 1815 in England; died before 1882.
3 ii. William Whitechurch, born about 1822 in England.

Notes

Honoria Whitechurch (ca. 1792–) [No. 1] emigrated to New York aboard the ship Victoria, arriving 24 May 1848 from London, accompanying William Whitechurch, aged 26, William, 9, and Mary, 5. It is uncertain who was the parent of younger William, but presumably it was Robert or William (elder).

She is not located in the 1850 U.S. census. In the 1860 census for the 19th Ward, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, an "Honora" Whitechurch, aged 72, widow, born in England, is living in a household headed by George and Hannah Argue (or Asque), both aged 32, born in Philadelphia; George was an engineer. This "Honora" seems to be the "H. Whitechurch" who is listed in the 1870 census mortality schedule, having had died in Philadelphia in December 1869, aged 82, born in England.

Generation No. 2

2. Robert[2] Whitechurch (Honoria[1]) was born about 1815 in England, and died before 1882. He married Mary. She was born about 1825 in England.

Children of Robert Whitechurch and Mary are:

4 i. Mary Frances[3] Whitechurch, born between. July–Septemeber 1843 in Stepney, London, Middlesex, England; died June 1932 in Pennsylvania. She married George Syra Lovell; born about 1828 in Massachusetts; died October 1897.
5 ii. Margaret Whitechurch, born about 1851 in Pennsylvania.
\+ 6 iii. Una Whitechurch, born about 1853 in Pennsylvania.
7 iv. Perseus Whitechurch, born about 1854 in Pennsylvania; died between 1906–1909. He married Clara; died after 1909.
8 v. Estella Whitechurch, born about January 1860 in Pennsylvania.
9 vi. Violet Whitechurch, born about 1865 in Pennsylvania.

See the Lovell Family collateral genealogy (above) for information relating to Mary Frances (Whitechurch) and George Syra Lovell.

Notes

2. Robert Whitechurch (ca. 1815–before 1882)

He emigrated to New York aboard the ship Victoria, arriving 19 January 1848 from London. He is not located in 1850 U.S. census.

Residences of Robert Whitechurch (from U.S. censuses):
1860: 23rd Ward, Rising Sun [section of] Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
1870 census: 25th Ward, Bridesburg [section of] Philadelphia.

In the 1860 census, he is listed as Robert G. Whitechurch. In the 1870 census, no occupation is available. His name is taken from a second-enumeration sheet that lists only name, age, and sex of the individual.

Robert Whitechurch seems to have arrived in Philadelphia in 1848 or 1849; he first appears in the 1850 city directory, employed as an engraver in Randolph St. above Poplar St.; this information is repeated in the 1851 and 1852 directories. Subsequent city directory entries are as follows:
1853: 161 Randolph St.
1854, 1856, 1857: Frankford Rd., above Orleans St.
1860: Frankford Ave., near Clearfield St.
1860 business directory: Frankford Rd. above Franklin Ave., 23rd Ward
1861: Frankford Ave. near Clearfield St.
1862: Frankford Ave. below Clearfield St.

1866: 2834 Frankford Ave.
1869: "engineer" [error], home 333 Washington Ave.
1872: 333 Washington Ave.

The directories for 1855, 1858, 1859, 1863-1865, 1875, 1878 had no entries for Robert Whitechurch; directories for 1867, 1868, 1870, 1871, 1873, 1874, 1876, 1877, 1879-1881 were not seen.

Robert Whitechurch was an engraver of some renown, having rendered engravings of historical and biographical interest, usually after well-known paintings of the period and done in this medium for wider distribution. One of his better known works was his 1859 engraving of "[Benjamin] Franklin Before The Lords in Council, Whitehall, January 11 [sic, 29] 1774." The engraving was taken after the painting by Christian Schussele. This scene depicted Franklin at his 1774 arraignment before the Privy Council, undergoing an abusive attack of Solicitor-General Alexander Wederburn, charged with disloyalty to the Crown. Afterward, Franklin was dismissed as the deputy postmaster general of the British colonies.[639]

An 1861 engraving of "[Abraham] Lincoln and His Cabinet with General Winfield Scott", after a drawing by Christian Schussele, appeared in Harper's Magazine in 1861.[640]

Perhaps Whitechurch's most well-known—or at least his most prominently displayed—engraving is "The United States Senate, A.D. 1850" which hangs even today in the Old Senate Chamber in the U.S. Capitol, in Washington, D.C. This hand-colored engraving, produced in 1855 after a painting by Peter F. Rothermel, measures 27 × 34 inches and is described in the U.S. Senate website as follows:[641]

> "This engraving depicts the Golden Age of the Senate in the Old Senate Chamber, site of many of the institution's most memorable events. Here, Henry Clay, 'the Great Compromiser,' introduces the Compromise of 1850 in his last significant act as a senator. In a desperate attempt to prevent war from erupting, the 'Great Triumvirate,' of Daniel Webster of Massachusetts, John C. Calhoun of South Carolina, and Clay of Kentucky struggled to balance the interests of the North, South, and West. The image shows all three men, with Caly at center stage presenting his compromise to the Senate. Today, The United States Senate, A.D. 1850, is recognized as one of the finest examples of 19th century American engraving. Originally published in limited numbers, the engraving remains a popular and very collectable work."

In 1989, Senator Thomas Eagleton made the following observation on the floor of the Old Senate Chamber:[642]

> "Mr. President [President pro tempore of the Senate], many a night, while waiting out some interminable speech before a vote, I would take refuge on a big leather couch in the Democratic Cloakroom and stare at that lithograph on the south wall. For some time, I confess, I was only vaguely aware that it depicted an historic event that had occurred in the old Senate Chamber.
> "Then one night, when the television networks had belched out their final tributes to vacuity, I went up and studied the lithograph in detail. By God, there was old Henry Clay addressing the Chair. Daniel Webster was listening with his head—that great Webster head—propped up by his left arm. John C. Calhoun, with that ominous, severe look he carried around late in life, was standing near the curtains. It was 1850—and the Senate was compromising once again. Not only does that lithograph, by Robert Whitechurch, hang in the Democratic Cloakroom, but it hangs here in this Chamber as well—to my right—in this majestic old Senate Chamber. It served, coincidentally, as the cover for this morning's commemorative stamp ceremony as well."

Mary Whitechurch (ca. 1825–)
(wife of Robert Whitechurch)

In the 1882 Philadelphia city directory she is listed as Mary E. Whitechurch; she is listed there as a widow, residing at 333 Stella Ave.

The Old Senate Chamber in the U.S. Capitol, as depicted in the engraving by Robert Whitechurch, "The United States Senate, A.D. 1850"

Whitechurch produced numerous fine engravings of renowned works of art, for wider distribution.

5. Margaret Whitechurch (ca. 1851–)

She never married. At the time of the 1880 U.S. census, she resided in the household of George S. and Mary F. Lovell, in Lower Merion, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania; she is misindexed as Mary A. Whitechurch. At the time of the 1910 census, she was employed as a servant for a private family; she resided with her widowed sister, Mary Lovell, in Jenkintown, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

7. Perseus Whitechurch (Percy Whitechurch) (ca. 1854–1906/09)

In the 1860 U.S. census his name seems to be written "Persons"; in the 1870 census, "Priscus". In the 1878 Philadelphia city directory he is listed as Perseus, but in all volumes seen thereafter (beginning 1883) he is listed as Percy.

Residences of Perseus Whitechurch (from U.S. censuses and Philadelphia city directories, not all years of directory seen):

1878: 333 Stella Ave.
1880 census: 1125 Girard Ave., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
1883-1896: 1118 Girard Ave.
1898–death: 2318 N. Park Ave.

Occupations of Perseus Whitechurch (from U.S. censuses and Philadelphia city directories, not all years of directory seen):

1878-1889 directories, 1880 census: Bookkeeper
1890: Salesman
1892: Manager
1893-1902: Treasurer [of G. S. Lovell Clock Co.], 1021 Market St.
1903-1906: Treasurer [of G. S. Lovell Clock Co.], 18 S. 10th St.

Clara Whitechurch (–after 1909)
(wife of Perseus Whitechurch)
"Carrie"

In the 1910 Philadelphia city directory she is listed as a widow, residing at 2318 N. Park Ave.

8. Estella Whitechurch (ca. 1860–)

Occupations of Estella Whitechurch (from Philadelphia city directories):

1883: Teacher
1884: Boarding house operator

Residences of Estella Whitechurch (from Philadelphia city directories):

1883-1884: 333 Stella Ave.

Generation No. 3

6. Una[3] Whitechurch (Robert[2], Honoria[1]) was born about 1853 in Pennsylvania. She married Charles Frederick Simonin, son of Charles Frederick August Simonin.

Child of Una Whitechurch and Charles Simonin is:

\+ 10 i. Frederick Lovell[4] Simonin, born 22 April 1887.

Notes

In the 1883 Philadelphia city directory Una Whitechurch (ca. 1853–) [No. 6] is listed residing at 333 Stella Ave.

Generation No. 4

10. Frederick Lovell[4] Simonin (Una[3] Whitechurch, Robert[2], Honoria[1]) was born 22 April 1887. He married (1) Gladys Camm. She died 1918. He married (2) Gladys Edwards 03 March 1920 at St. John's Episcopal Church, Cynwyd, Pennsylvania, daughter of Earl Edwards and Katherine McCandless. She was born 03 August 1895 in Germantown [section of] Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Child of Frederick Simonin and Gladys Camm is:

11 i. Charles Frederick[5] Simonin, born March 1910.

Child of Frederick Simonin and Gladys Edwards is:
12 i. Suzanne[5] Simonin, born 04 December 1921.

End of Whitechurch lineage

Lovell Family collateral genealogy continues:

Generation No. 6

19. Adfer Eddy[6] Lovell, Sr. (Eleazer[5], Alexander[4], Alexander[3], John[2], Thomas[1]) was born 19 March 1813 in Smithfield, Rhode Island, and died 28 February 1897 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He married Laura E. Wilder 22 September 1841. She was born 26 June 1817 in Northampton, Massachusetts, and died 31 October 1860 in Marysville, Marshall Co., Kansas Territory.

Children of Adfer Lovell and Laura Wilder are:
23 i. Frances[7] Lovell.
24 ii. Joseph Wilder Lovell, born May 1849 in Massachusetts; died between 1910-1920. He married Anna M. about 1874; born March 1854 in Pennsylvania.
25 iii. Adfer Eddy Lovell, Jr., born about 1843 in Pennsylvania; died between 4 June 1876 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Also see Additions & Corrections \+ 26 iv. Alla Elizabeth Lovell, born about 1845 in Pennsylvania.
\+ 27 v. Laura Edith Lovell, born about 1847 in Pennsylvania; died May 1921.
28 vi. Jessie A. Lovell, born about 1849 in Pennsylvania.

NOTES

19. Adfer Eddy Lovell, Sr. (1813–1897)

There are a number of individuals by the name of Adfer Eddy, born in Rhode Island, who appear in U.S. censuses, who no doubt are family relations or acquaintances.

Adfer Eddy Lovell, Sr., may have been the first Lovell of this family to arrive in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, by 1840. The only Lovells who appear in earlier Philadelphia directories are Peter Lovell, silver plater (1837 directory only) and Asa R. Lovell, gentleman (1839/1840 directory only); they do not appear in any other city directories. Whether they are relations to the Lovell family of interest here is not known.

In the 1841 Philadelphia city directory Adfer Lovell is listed in business as Lovell & Smith, clocks, 183 N. 3rd St. The business of Lovell & Smith continued only to the 1843 directory; thereafter only Adfer Lovell is listed as a clock dealer. In the 1851and 1852 directories, his brother, Emer S. Lovell, is listed as a clock dealer (at New St. and 3rd St. in 1851, and 3rd St. and Wood St. in 1852); in the 1853 directory the firm of A.E. & E.S. Lovell & Co., clocks, appears for the first time, at 183 N. 3rd St. (Adfer Lovell's residential address); in 1854 the firm is at 82 N. 3rd St.

Adfer Lovell seems to have taken his family to Iowa in the late 1850s and tried farming, but in 1860 moved to Marysville, Kansas Territory, where he again became a merchant. Sometime between May 1865 and June 1870, he returned to Philadelphia, when he was listed in the 1870 census for Philadelphia.

Occupations of Adfer Lovell, Sr. (from U.S. censuses, Philadelphia city directories, and other sources):
1841–1850 city directories: Clock dealer
1852 city directory: Clerk
1853–1856 city directories: Merchant
1860 U.S. census (Iowa): Farmer
1860 U.S. census (Kansas Territory): Merchant
1865 Kansas census: Merchant
1870 U.S. census (Philadelphia, as “Alfred E. Lovell”): Clock dealer; parenthetically is written “(Ret)”
1872 city directory: Clerk, 627 Market St.
1875 city directory: Collector
1883, 1878, 1890 city directories (1883 as “Alfred E. Lovell”): Salesman
1891–1894 city directories: “clocks”
1895, 1896 city directories: no occupation listed

Residences of Adfer Lovell, Sr. (from U.S. censuses and Philadelphia city directories):

1842–1844 city directories: Franklin St. above Green St.
1845 city directory: 50 Dillwyn St.
1846–1854 city directories: 176 N. 3rd St.
1850 census: Northern Liberties, 2nd Ward, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
1860 census (11 June): Nodaway, Page Co., Iowa
1860 census (10 August)*: Marysville, Marshall Co., Kansas Territory (as "Alfred Lovell")
1865 Kansas census: Marysville, Marshall Co., Kansas
1870 census: 9th Ward, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (as "Alfred E. Lovell")
1872 city directory: 47 N. 10th St.
1875 city directory: 2301 Madison Square
1878 city directory: Commercial Hotel, 826 Market St.
1883 city directory: 826 Market St. [probably the Commercial Hotel]
1890 city directory: Peabody Hotel, 246 S. 9th St.
1892–1894 city directories: 1003 Dickinson St.
1895–1896 city directories: 1001 Dickinson St.

*On 10 August 1860, an "Alfred Lovell", aged 46, born in Rhode Island, merchant, is registered in the U.S. census of Marysville, Marshall Co., Kansas Territory. The family is known to have gone there at about this time, and there his wife, Laura, died in October 1860. It seems that his double registration in the 1860 census pinpoints the time when he was moving his family to Kansas. That Adfer is enumerated by himself in the Marysville, K.T., census seems also to indicate that he had gone ahead of his family to establish a business and residence there. Sometime between August and October the family did move there, and his wife died in Maryville in October.

At the time of the 1850 U.S. census, the Lovells are enumerated adjacent to the household headed by Philip Leidy, a hatter, whose son, Dr. Joseph Leidy, was then ascending to international renown in the fields of natural history and public health.[643]

In the 1870 census, the Lovells are recorded adjacent to the family of John and Laura Bollinger, who eventually will marry into the Lovell family (see below).

Adfer Lovell, Sr., was buried 3 March 1897 in Sec. H, Lot 326, Woodlands Cemetery, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. There is no monument on Adfer Lovell's grave (2004).

[643] Philip was the father of the renowned Dr. Joseph Leidy; Christiana, Philip's wife, was Joseph's stepmother, by whom he was raised. At the time of this census, Joseph was already old enough to be on his own. Joseph Leidy became one of the most notable and publicly recognized scientists of the 19th century, in part for his discovery of the source of the trichinosis parasite as well as for his champion work in public health. He was the principal comparative anatomist of his day, working in diverse fields like parasitology, invertebrate zoology, and vertebrate paleontology; he discovered evidence for bipedalism in dinosaurs, scientifically described the first dinosaur specimens from North America, and described as well the first-ever nearly complete dinosaur skeleton, Hadrosaurus foulkii, which he named for William Parker Foulke. (Foulke is included in the present genealogy in the appendix of collateral genealogies; see in Appendix 2, Foulke Family collateral genealogy, No. 20.) A celebratory sketch written upon Leidy's death is W. S. W. Ruschenberger, "A Sketch of the Life of Joseph Leidy, M.D., LL.D.", Proceedings of the American Philosophical Society, vol. 30 (Apr 1892), pp. 135-184. The only modern biography of Joseph Leidy is the one by Leonard Warren, Joseph Leidy: the Last Man Who Knew Everything (Yale University Press, New Haven and London, 1997). Leidy also was the president of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia (with which Earle Spamer has had a working affiliation from 1973 to 2007, including staff employment in its research collections from 1986 to 2005). Leidy was the President of the faculty of, and Director of the museum of, the Wagner Free Institute of Science, in Philadelphia, which responsibilities he assumed after the death of its founder, William Wagner. (Parenthetically, Spamer also was on the Wagner Institute's Board of Trustees for ten years, 1988-1998; its Secretary 1993-1997.)

Laura (Wilder) Lovell (1817–1860)
(wife of Adfer Eddy Lovell, Sr.)

The 1840 U.S. census in Northampton, Massachusetts, lists a household headed by Zachariah Wilder, which has one woman within the age range that Laura Wilder would have been in 1840. However, given that there is a 90+ year-old male in the family, and that only heads of households are listed by name, Zachariah could be either the father or grandfather of Laura, depending on whether the father or grandfather was listed as household head. In this census there is also a Shubal Wilder in Northampton, but there are no women of the appropriate age range tallied in his family.

24. Joseph Wilder Lovell (1849–1910/20)

Occupations of Joseph Wilder Lovell (from U.S. censuses and Philadelphia city directories):
1870 census: Clerk in store
1872 city directory: Clerk, 627 Market St.
1878, 1890, 1891 city directories: Collector
1880 census: "sewing machine collector" [i.e., accounts-receivable accountant for a manufacturer of sewing machines]
1892–1894 city directories: Bookkeeper
1895, 1896 city directories: Clerk
1898 city directory: Manager
1900 census: "manager collector"
1910 city directory: purchasing agent
1910 census: dry goods agent

Residences of Joseph Wilder Lovell (from U.S. censuses and Philadelphia city directories):
1870 census: 9th Ward, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (with parents)
1872 city directory: 47 N. 10th St.
1878 city directory: 503 S. 9th St.
1880 census: 1014 Morris St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
1890–1896 city directories: 1003 Dickinson St.
1898 city directory: 915 Dickinson St.
1900 census: 1147 Snyder Ave., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
1910 city directory and 1910 census: 1149 Snyder Ave., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

In the 1880, 1900, and 1910 censuses, Joseph Wilder Lovell's place of birth is given as Pennsylvania.

He had no children.

Anna M. Lovell (1854–)
(wife of Joseph Wilder Lovell)

At the time of the 1920 U.S. census, she was a retail purchasing agent, residing in the household of her late husband's nephew, Joseph A. Bollinger, 1008 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

25. Adfer Eddy Lovell, Jr. (ca. 1843–1876)

At the time of the 1860 U.S. census, he was a farmer residing in his parents' household in Nodaway, Page Co., Iowa. In 1861, he resided in Marysville, Kansas.

During the Civil War, he served in the Union army attached to the 2nd Kansas Cavalry, Co. H. He enlisted as a Private on 5 December 1861, giving his residence as Marysville, Kansas; advanced to full corporal 4 April 1862, and full sergeant 1 October 1862; mustered out on 18 March 1865 in Little Rock, Arkansas.[644]

[644] A lengthy history of the 2nd Kansas Volunteer Cavalry is on the website of the Museum of the Kansas National Guard; source is credited as "Report of the Adjutant General of the State of Kansas, 1861-'65, Topeka, Kansas, 1896 reprint". Also see William S. Burke, Official Military History of Kansas Regiments During the War for the Suppression

The unit experienced numerous redesignations and reassignments during the war, but remained for the most part west of the Mississippi River. The unit participated in a number of battles and skirmishes between 1 March 1862–18 April 1865; Lovell was present with the unit for all but the last engagement, Co. H having by then been mustered out.

In the 1865 Kansas census in Maryville (taken 30 May), Adfer Lovell, Jr., is listed living with his father and two siblings; he was a merchant. He returned to Philadelphia with his father before June 1870, when he is listed in the U.S. census there as "Alfred E. Lovell, Jr.", a store clerk. However, he seems to have maintained interests in Kansas. On 26 July 1872 he received a Government land patent within the limits of the Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railroad, apparently having had made claims on 16 and 25 July 1866 prior to the definite location of the railroad. That the patent was granted is some indication of him having proved the land for cultivation and/or occupation. The patent was for the West ½ of the NE quarter of Section 15, Township 2 South, Range 7 East[645], which is approximately 2 miles Northeast of Marysville.[646] Given the circumstances of his burial in Philadelphia (see below), he may have lived again in Kansas and died there.

Adfer Lovell, Jr., is buried in Sec. H, Lot 326, Woodlands Cemetery, Philadelphia. The cemetery records indicate his interment as "remains", on 19 June 1876, which, together with his age being omitted from the record, seems to indicate that his remains were transferred from another location. The cemetery record also notes, "Soldier (Civil War)". The grave has no monument (2004). Also see Additions & Corrections

Mary Cook (LeValley) Lovell (1827–1905)
(wife of Emer Smith Lovell)

In the 1898 Philadelphia city directory, she is listed as the widow of "Amer" Lovell. In the 1895 and 1898 city directories she is listed as residing at 3200 Powelton Ave. She was buried at Woodlands Cemetery.

The LeValley lineage as it relates to Mary Cook LeValley and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Peter LeValley

Generation No. 1

1. Peter[1] LeValley died 1756 in Warwick, Rhode Island. He married Sarah.

Children of Peter LeValley and Sarah are:

	2	i.	John[2] LeValley. He married Hester.
	3	ii.	Margaret LeValley. She married Christopher Beaubier 30 October 1726; born 16 June 1706 in Marblehead, Massachusetts.
	4	iii.	Mary LeValley. She married Magdalen King.
+	5	iv.	Michael LeValley, from Warwick, Rhode Island.
	6	v.	Peter LeValley. He married Elizabeth Gadsley 03 December 1727.
	7	vi.	Sarah LeValley. She married Peleg Cook.

Notes

Peter LeValley (–1756) [No. 1] emigrated from France, settling at Marblehead, Massachusetts, where he was involved in fisheries. He is supposed to have come from Lyons and was a merchant attacked by pirates. He exchanged his Marblehead real estate for that of Rev. George Pigott, an Episcopalian minister at Warwick, Rhode Island, and removed to that town. He was an admitted freeman in Warwick, 4 March 1727/28. Appointed surveyor in Warwick, 24 November 1740, and in 1741.

Generation No. 2

5. Michael[2] LeValley (Peter[1]) was from Warwick, Rhode Island. He married Almy Bailey 26 August 1757 in East Greenwich, Rhode Island. She was from East Greenwich, Rhode Island.

Children of Michael LeValley and Almy Bailey are:

	8	i.	Amy or Alma[3] LeValley.
	9	ii.	Benjamin LeValley. He married Mary Greene.
	10	iii.	Marcey LeValley. She married Nathan Hathaway; from Coventry, Rhode Island.

	11	iv.	Mary LeValley. She married Israel Johnson 1802; from Coventry, Rhode Island.
	12	v.	Peter LeValley. He married Katherine Parker 11 July 1782.
	13	vi.	Sarah LeValley. She married John Wood.
+	14	vii.	Caleb LeValley, born about 1770.

Notes

Michael LeValley [No. 5] was an admitted freeman, Warwick, Rhode Island, 5 June 1741.

Benjamin LeValley [No. 9] and Peter LeValley [No. 12] went to western New York and never returned to New England.

Generation No. 3

14. Caleb[3] LeValley (Michael[2], Peter[1]) was born about 1770. He married Alice Fenner, daughter of Capt. Arthur Fenner. She died 16 October 1858.

Children of Caleb LeValley and Alice Fenner are:

	15	i.	Uriah W.[4] LeValley, born 11 June 1793.
	16	ii.	Waity LeValley, born 27 June 1795. [Died in infancy.]
	17	iii.	Sterry B. LeValley, born 26 July 1797. He married Dean.
	18	iv.	Joanna LeValley, born 18 October 1799. She married Caleb Remington 25 November 1819.
+	19	v.	Benjamin LeValley, born 03 April 1801 in Coventry, Rhode Island.
	20	vi.	Warren LeValley, born 15 August 1803 in Coventry, Rhode Island; died 15 September 1852 in California. He married Nancy Whalen 03 July 1831.
	21	vii.	Christopher W. LeValley, born 06 May 1811. He married Arvilla Filkins 1849.

Notes

A LeValley family history records about Uriah W. LeValley (1793–) [No. 15], "Went to foreign land when young and West 1817."

Generation No. 4

19. Benjamin[4] LeValley (Caleb[3], Michael[2], Peter[1]) was born 03 April 1801 in Coventry, Rhode Island. He married Emeline Bordon 22 November 1826, daughter of Abner Bordon and Meribah.

Children of Benjamin LeValley and Emeline Bordon are:

+	22	i.	Mary Cook[5] LeValley, born 17 December 1827 in Massachusetts.
	23	ii.	Arthur F. LeValley, born 17 September 1829. [Died in infancy.]
	24	iii.	Adeline R. LeValley, born 17 January 1831; died 08 June 1832.
	25	iv.	William P. LeValley, born 13 April 1834; died 23 December 1861.
	26	v.	Benjamin W. LeValley, born 10 September 1836.
	27	vi.	Sarah F. LeValley, born 22 November 1846; died 04 November 1882.
	28	vii.	Emeline B. LeValley, born 27 June 1849. She married John McArthur 24 November 1870; from Somerville, Massachusetts.

Generation No. 5

22. Mary Cook[5] LeValley (Benjamin[4], Caleb[3], Michael[2], Peter[1]) was born 17 December 1827 in Massachusetts. She married Emer Smith Lovell 12 August 1849, son of Eleazer Lovell and Alice Howland. He was born about 1824 in Massachusetts, and died September 1894.

See the Lovell Family collateral genealogy for information about Mary (LeValley) and Emer Smith Lovell and their descendants.

NOTES

Michael Reed Minnich (1846–1928)
(husband of Mary E. Lovell)

Regarding the spelling of his name, records from Woodlands Cemetery as well as many census records spell the family name “Minnick”; however, the spelling used here is taken from Minnich’s own publication about Michael Hillegas (noted below), the copy of which seen also included his “Compliments of” presentation slip, on which his name is spelled “Minnich”. In censuses, various spellings appear, including “Minnick” and “Minnich”, with either one or two n’s, and various other misspellings. In the Philadelphia city directories he is variously listed as “Michael R. Minnich” (1878, 1894, 1898, 1900) and “M. Reed Minnich” (1885, 1890, 1892, 1893, 1896, 1905, 1910).

Michael Minnich was a graduate of Gettysburg College, 1870, and the Philadelphia Seminary (Lutheran Theological Seminary at Philadelphia[647]), 1873.

[647] The “Philadelphia Seminary”, as it was called in Lutheran circles, was one of eight associated with the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America. In 1864, partly in response to the establishment of the Lutheran Theological Seminary at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, which was perceived to be too liberal of Lutheran orthodoxy, the Philadelphia Seminary was established at 42 North 9th St., graduating its first class in 1865. When Michael Minnich attended the seminary, it was at its larger quarters not far away at 212 Franklin St., opposite Franklin Square, which had been purchased in 1865 and enlarged in 1873. Later, in 1884, the seminary moved to a six-acre property in the West Philadelphia section of the city, but in 1886 decided to purchase a six-acre site in the Mount Airy section of the city on Germantown Ave. at Allen Lane, which site it occupies still. The seminary continued to own the Franklin St. property until 1892, when it was sold for $18,450. (>> Luther D. Reed, ed., The Philadelphia Seminary Biographical Record, 1864-1923 (The Seminary and the Alumni Association, Philadelphia, 1923); “About the Seminary”, Lutheran Theological Seminary at Philadelphia website, http://www.ltsp.edu/about/about3.htm, accessed 5 Jan 2007).

1908-1909: Associate Pastor, Church of the Incarnation, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 1909-: Philadelphia City Missionary uncertain: Secretary, Virginia Synod uncertain: Department Protonotary, Bedford Co., Pennsylvania

According to a biographical sketch published by the Philadelphia Seminary, he left the pastorate in 1878-1880 due to ill health, when he went to work for the clock sellers, G. S. Lovell and Co., which was a family-run firm on Market St., Philadelphia (see the Lovell family collateral genealogical sketch).

In his capacity as a Philadelphia City Missionary, he participated in ecclesiastical outreach programs, as testified by notices in 1909-1910 newspapers, such as: "Rev. M. Reed Minnick [sic] will be the speaker tomorrow evening in the Franklin Home for the Reformation of Inebriates" at 911-915 Locust St.[648] In a 1914 item, he is noted to be affiliated with the Lutheran City Mission, again speaking at the Franklin Home.[649]

NOTES

214. Gilbert Haven Smith (1882–1958)

Gilbert Haven Smith was named for Bishop Gilbert Haven of the Methodist Conference, an admired friend and associate of Gilbert's father, Rev. John Edward Smith.[650] Gilbert studied art at the

[650] Bishop Gilbert Haven (1821-1880) graduated from Wesleyan University in 1846, after which he taught Greek and German in the Amenia Seminary, New York. In Apr 1851 he joined the New York Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church and went to Massachusetts where he served in several pastorates. After the Civil War, he began to reach out to the freed slaves, ministering to them as a missionary in Vicksburg, Mississippi. He was made a bishop of the church in May 1872 with his seat in Atlanta, Georgia. Later, he returned to Massachusetts and set out to found missions in Mexico and Africa. In his work he was an abolitionist, prohibitionist, and women's suffragist, and he defended equal rights even to the point of women's lay representation in the church and inter-racial marriage. Some of his numerous publications include: An Appeal to Our People for Our People (New York?, 1875); National Sermons: Sermons, Speeches and Letters on Slavery and Its War, from the Passage of the Fugitive Slave Bill to the Election of President Grant (Lee and Shepard, Boston, 1869); Our Next-Door Neighbor: A Winter in Mexico (Harper and Brothers, New York, 1875); Te Deum Laudamus: The Cause and the Consequence of the Election of Abraham Lincoln; a Thanksgiving Sermon Delivered in the Harvard St. M.E. Church, Cambridge, Sunday Evening, Nov. 11, 1860 (J. M. Hewes, printer, Boston, 1860); The Uniter and Liberator of America: A Memorial Discourse on the

The birth certificate of Gilbert and Nora's son, Edmund, gives their address as Shermer Ave., Glenview, Illinois, although the address under Gilbert Smith's signature on the certificate gives his address as 12 Park Drive, Glenview. Undated newspaper clippings about Edmund G. Smith, from about 1942, gives Gilbert Smith's address as 12 Park Drive.

He wrote an incomplete autobiography some time after 1923, which contains a narrative of family history and his early life on the Eastern Shore and in Philadelphia, up to the time that he was a student in the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts. This is transcribed in its entirety farther below.

While Rev. Gilbert Smith was in the ministry, he wrote The New Jerusalem: An Introduction to the Doctrine of the New Church (The Academy Book Room, 1944).

Gilbert Smith was for 30 years a pastor in the New Church community of Glenview (Glenview Park)[651], Illinois, and in 1942 he began evangelizing on the New Church Radio in Chicago.[652] Also see Additions & Corrections

When the Emmanuel Church was built in Glenview, Illinois, Gilbert Smith designed the stained glass windows. A church informational brochure describes it:

> The window at the front of the church depicts a composite landscape of representative objects. The two olive trees sand for love towards the Lord and love towards the neighbor. Beyond the trees is Mt. Sinai, which reminds us of the Lord's commandments. At the foot of this mountain flows the river of life, symbolizing the many truths which the Lord desires to teach us. [651] The Village of Glenview first was settled after 1833, when neighboring friendly Potawatomi Indians still resided in the area. Originally the village was called south Northfield, then for a while North Branch; but in 1878 a suggested name was Oak Glen, which was already a name used on the local railroad line. Soon it was called Glen View, which later was contracted to Glenview. The 40-acre site was populated as an enclave of Swedenborgian businessmen and farmers, who in 1899, after a failed referendum in 1898, formally incorporated the village so as to establish a local government of its own. During World War II,[653] the Smiths retired to Shaftsbury[654], Vermont, where they opened an art studio on U.S. Route 7,[655] which they called the Art Shop By the Road. Gilbert sold his paintings to passing travelers, attracting them with large hand-painted signs, "If You Have a Minute Gilbert Smith Vermont Landscapes". He also tried to avoid hesitancy on the part of the passer-by, who might be dissuaded by the closeness of the shop to the road and no parking area; he added a sign, "Drive In On Grass".[656] Nora also sold small gifts at the shop, such as Vermont syrup and the usual tourist gift selections.

While in Shaftsbury, the Bennington (Vermont) newspaper ran an article about Gilbert Smith and his paintings. In part it read: [657]

> "Painting nature is much too hard for most of the so-called modernists so they paint in the abstract," says Gilbert Smith, who is currently exhibiting in the Bennington Bookshop.
> Smith, who has a home and display studio on Route 7 just north of Shaftsbury, has been painting most of his life. He came to Vermont about seven years ago and has concentrated most of his efforts since that time on local landscapes, paying particular attention to the many covered bridges. He estimates that about 600 of his paintings have been sold since he opened his shop, and just this season at least 20 have been purchased.[658]
>
> * * * * *
> In commenting on other contemporary artists, Smith said Grandma Moses visited his shop last year and that he enjoyed meeting her. "I admire her work very much," he added.[659]
> Many of his paintings have been copied for playing cards, some of which are a part of the display at the Bookshop. These include the old Henry covered bridge and the Silk Road covered bridge.

[653] An alternate family reminiscence has the Smiths moving to Vermont after the war; but they were in Shaftsbury on 6 Sep 1945 when they received a telegram informing them that their son, Edmund, had been "returned to military control" after being repatriated from a Japanese prisoner of war camp. (The Smiths had not known of the fate of their son after his plane was shot down over Tokyo in January 1945.)

[655] Today this is Route 7A, renumbered when a limited-access bypass was built between Manchester Center and Bennington, re-routing Route 7 along that highway. Route 7A still is a two-lane highway, passing through rural areas and small towns.

[656] A photograph of Gilbert, posing with some of his paintings next to the signs, is said to have been published in Yankee Magazine, but thus far that issue has not been located.

[657] Bennington Banner (Vermont), ca. 1951; from an undated clipping. The article includes a photograph of Smith at his easel inside the first Shaftsbury house.

[658] Gilbert Smith kept a register of all those who purchased his paintings, but that register, said to survive, is not now forthcoming.

[659] Grandma Moses was the byname of Anna Mary (Robertson) Moses (1860-1961), an American folk painter in the naïve or American Primitive style who received wide critical acclaim. She took up painting in her 70s when arthritis made her favored needlework difficult to create. At the time, she lived in Hoosick Falls, New York. She was featured on the cover of Time on 28 Dec 1953. With more than 1,500 paintings to her credit, the largest public collection of Grandma Moses' work is in the Bennington Museum, not far south from Shaftsbury, Vermont. (>>Encyclopedia Britannica; Bennington Museum website, http://benningtonmuseum.com; accessed 18 Nov 2005.)

After several years in Shaftsbury, the Smiths moved to nearby Dorset, Vermont.[660] But, Nora was discontent with life in Dorset and they moved back to Shaftsbury where they built a new house (adding to an existing structure) and shop, residing in a trailer during construction. (It was in Dorset that Nora's father, Rev. John Faulkner Potts, had had a summer home, and there in 1907 Gilbert Smith was engaged to her.) The first Smith home in Shaftsbury was a short distance farther north on old Rt. 7. [661]

The second Smith home in Shaftsbury was (in 2005) owned by Henry Martinka; the address is 3396 Vermont Rt. 7A. [662] Mr. Martinka owns a John Deere tractor dealership, which is behind the house; the driveway to the dealership is to the south of the house. Although he lives in a house across the street, he still owns the old Smith residence. He had bought the house in 1973 from the widow of Rome Cote. A shed in front of the house, in about the same position as where the art shop stood, was erected in 2004. Mr. Martinka informed us that the original part of the house, in the rear, had been built around the 1820s; in the 1920s the owner had been a used car dealer; and there was the remnant of a cistern under an old addition to the house. He was glad to see some photos of the house at the time that the Smiths had lived there; they showed him, as he had suspected, that there had been a large tree in front of the home, which no longer stands.

At the time of his death, Gilbert Smith had "sold an estimated 1000 paintings to passersby who wanted to take home a picture to remind them of Vermont."[663] He had kept a register of the purchasers of these paintings, but it is not available at this time, in the hands of another family member. A postcard acquired serendipitously by Earle Spamer gives some insight on one sale. It is an acknowledgement sent by Nora Smith to buyers to whom a painting had been mailed home to them; it happens to have been one of the last sales during Gilbert's lifetime:

[660] Dorset Town Office property records indicate that Gilbert and Nora Smith purchased property on 18 Dec 1954 and sold to Ferber on 13 Sep 1956 (Book 42, pp. 95, 96); in 2007 the owner was Liz Wheaton-Smith [no relation] (Pat Carmichael, Dorset Historical Society, to Neva Asplundh, April 2007).

[662] Visited by Earle Spamer and Jane Anderson, Aug 2005. At the time, we were not aware that the Smiths had resided in two locations. We located the house now owned by Martinka by comparing family photographs to the houses still standing. We also spoke by telephone with Nadine Synnestvedt while we were at the house, who provided early confirmation that we had found the correct house.

of Nora standing in front of the shop with an array of paintings on the ground propped against porch posts. Unfortunately, the reproductive resolution of the photos is not good; in fact, in the photo of Nora in front of their shop one cannot tell it is Nora, nor can the subjects of the paintings be discerned. The card very much looks as if Gilbert and Nora each took photos of the other, and then had a local printer run off postcards on the cheap, not trimmed exactly square.

From time to time, Gilbert Smith paintings show up for sale on the eBay Internet auction website. One of these was purchased by Jane Anderson for her husband, Earle Spamer, around 2004. It appears to be an interesting early work of Gilbert Smith, a mountain lake scene; its style less impressionistic than the landscapes for which he is best known. The painting had been reframed in Vancouver, British Columbia (from where it had been obtained from an estate sale and re-sold on eBay with more sales emphasis on its frame). The original wooden mount on which the canvas is stretched has written on it in pencil, faintly, "Loch Lamond [sic] from Tarbet". Loch Lomond is a well-known destination 14 miles northwest of Glasgow, Scotland.[664] The view in the painting is remarkably similar to a painting that is reproduced on the cover of a booklet about Loch Lomond, printed in 1997.[665] It probably indicates that Gilbert had seen a reproduction of this scene, and repainted it with his own interpretive style. What makes this scene especially intriguing is that it is not an American landscape, for which Gilbert Smith is known, but of a familiar scene near Glasgow, from where the Potts family had come. The fact that it seems to be an early work by Gilbert is additionally intriguing because one wonders if it had been painted for Nora or her father. Further, it could have been a student work while he was at the Darby School or the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts. Alas, the answer is lost.

In early 2007, Jacqueline Ross Kline and Neva Gladish Asplundh began a search within the family to obtain photographic or digital copies of all of the Gilbert Smith paintings that can be found.

Gilbert Smith's funeral was in Bryn Athyn Cathedral, Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania. He is buried in the Bryn Athyn Cemetery. His daughter, Renée, was executrix of his estate.

Edward S. Smith included notes about his brother in the "Smith Genealogy":[666]

> He attended the Philadelphia public school and graduated from Central Manual Training School here. Gilbert at an early age was interested in art and really had a talent for painting in oils—mostly of landscapes. As a young man he studied at the Darby, Pa[.], Art School under Tommy Anschutz and Hugh Breckenridge. While studying here he met Daniel Garber and they became great friends. Daniel often came to our home with Gilbert; it seems Daniel was working in art under some handicap because his father was not pleased when Daniel decided upon a career in art. He became a prominent and successful artist in oils, mostly in portraits. He became President of [664] Loch Lomond is the largest freshwater loch in the United Kingdom, 24 miles long, five miles wide, and up to 600 feet deep. The Loch is dotted with islands, and the area is well known for its beauty, which has been recounted in song and verse, although the area has long been developed for tourism. Tarbet is a town on the northwestern side of the Loch. the Academy of Fine Arts[667], Philadelphia. Gilbert, after his training and study in Darby, attended the Academy of Fine Arts and graduated there, as did Nora Potts, whom he later married. Gilbert and Nora were married at Bryn Athyn, Pa., at the home[668] of her parents, the Rev. John Faulkner Potts and Mary Watson Potts.[669] He was the author of Potts' Concordance. [670]

Gilbert took some preparatory courses for the ministry at the University of Pennsylvania and studied at the Theological School at Cambridge, Mass. After his marriage, however, he became interested in the Academy branch of the Church and assisted in the dedication of the Cathedral at Bryn Athyn. In the ministry his pastorates were Chicago and Glencoe, Illinois, and at Glenview where he and his family lived for some years. While there he made many paintings of the shore and lakes around Chicago and of the shore and dunes along Lake Michigan in Indiana and Michigan.

After he retired from the ministry he and Nora moved to Vermont and opened an Art and Novelty "Shop by the Road" at Shaftsbury. The Potts family had had a summer place in Vermont for years. After Gilbert died Nora continued to operate the shop until her death in December, 1961. His paintings were on Vermont scenes after they moved to that area. His art became popular and was in demand. A playing card manufacturer used several of his pictures for the back of its cards.

Nora was born November 23, 1881, as Glasgow, Scotland. Rev. John Faulkner Potts, B.A. was born in Manchester, England, on May 4, 1840. His wife, Mary Watson, was born in London, England, April 2, 1835. She was of the fourth generation in the faith of the New Church on her father's side. One of her ancestors was Thomas Gerardin, a Huguenot, also of the Church. Rev. Potts and his wife brought their family to America in 1890 [1891].[671]

Gilbert Haven Smith and Nora (Potts) Smith

Gilbert Smith and Nora Potts met while they were students at the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, in Philadelphia. They became engaged in 1907 in Dorset, Vermont, where her father had a summer home at "Owl's Head Farm", in Dorset Hollow. Their marriage was officiated by Bishop W. F. Pendleton at the Academy of the New Church, Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania.

Gilbert's intentions must have been astounding news to the parents both of Gilbert and Nora. Rev. John Edward Smith, Gilbert's father, was a member of the "General Convention", a sect separate from the "General Church" that had established itself in Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania, with which Nora's father, Rev. John Faulkner Potts, was aligned. And further, Rev. Potts was of the strongly held belief that younger daughters should not marry until the older daughters had married (and none of Nora's sister did marry). We may infer that Gilbert ameliorated his relationship with stern Rev. Potts by turning away from a less (Right) Gilbert Smith made a pencil drawing of the bronze sculpture of "Little Nell", which he included in a childhood workbook of sketches that is presently in the possession of his daughter, Nadia Smith Synnestvedt.

(Spamer 2784)

(Below) "Little Nell" forms a part of the larger composition, "Dickens and Little Nell", created during 1890–1893 by F. Edwin Elwell of New York and cast by Bureau Bros., Bronze Founders, in Philadelphia. The work was made for the World's Colombian Exposition in Chicago in 1893, and afterward was sent, unsolicited, as a gift to England. However, it was refused by the Dickens family as contrary to the wishes of writer Charles Dickens, who had stated in his will that no memorial was to be erected in his memory. The piece was returned to Philadelphia. It languished in storage, and in 1901 it was installed in Clark Park, in West Philadelphia near 43rd St. and Chester Ave. It remains the only full-size sculpture of Dickens anywhere.

Here, Elwell's "Dickens and Little Nell" is as seen in 2004. The dark green patina is worn away to brilliant bronze on parts of Little Nell's dress and her outstretched arm, and on the shoes and knees of Charles Dickens, the handiwork of generations of children who have climbed the statue—including Earle Spamer.

Little Nell is arguably the most loved of Dickens's literary characters, the principal in The Old Curiosity Shop. Nell Trent, "not quite fourteen", lives in the shop with her grandfather. They experience a predictably anxious series of troubles, surrounded by unscrupulous individuals and n'er-do-wells. The long ending is darkened by the deaths of Nell and her distraught grandfather.

Painting by a here-undetermined artist, which was reproduced on the cover (right) of Ronald McAllister's The Lure of Loch Lomond (Forth Naturalist and Historian, 1997). It would have been a view with which the Potts family was familiar, thus my conjecture that Smith's painting may have been presented to Nora Potts or to her father, Rev. John Faulkner Potts. The imposing romanticism of the mountain beyond, as depicted by this artist, is probably artistic interpretation. Smith could likewise have worked from views more true to life. Features between the two depictions are, nonetheless, noticeably similar.

An early work by Gilbert Smith, unlike his later, more impressionistic landscapes. This reproduces, with alterations, an existing painting of the scene (the source of which has as yet not been determined). It may have been done while Smith was a student at the Darby School or the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts. Original now in the possession of Earle Spamer. Acquired through an Internet auction, ca. 2004, from a dealer in Vancouver, British Columbia, who had acquired it from an estate. (Smith's signature is not clearly visible in this digital reproduction.)

assured life as an artist to study theology at the Academy of the New Church. He was ordained into the General Church and for the most part of his life led a pastorate in the New Church enclave of Glenview, Illinois, near Chicago. And yet, Gilbert continued to paint all his life, often "bartering" goods and services in exchange for a painting; and eventually he and Nora retired to a roadside studio in Vermont, where he sold his paintings and she ran a small gift shop.[672]

Gilbert and Nora's marriage ceremony took place at the Academy of the New Church, in Bryn Athyn. There was a chapel on the second floor of the three-story Academy, where probably the wedding was held. A reception was held at Stancot, the Bryn Athyn home of Rev. Potts, where also the newlyweds' photograph was taken with family members standing on the front steps. Rev. J. E. Smith did attend the marriage ceremony, but returned immediately to Philadelphia; his wife, Ella, may not have attended (according to anecdotal information). Noticeably, none of the parents of Gilbert and Nora appear in the wedding photograph at Stancot. Gilbert's brother, Earle, was to have been the best man in the wedding, but his train did not arrive in time to attend the ceremony; Warren Potts, Nora's brother, stood in for him.[673]

Nora (Potts) Smith (1881–1961)
(wife of Gilbert Haven Smith)

Nora Potts was born at 5 a.m. John Faulkner Potts' own list of family birthdays[674] lists Nora's birthday as 23 November 1882. She was baptized at home by her father on 23 November 1881. She is buried in the Bryn Athyn Cemetery, Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania.

The spelling of his name is from his grave marker in the Bryn Athyn Cemetery, Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania. The "Smith Genealogy" uses the spelling, "Egartha", which is more phonetic.[675] The grave marker also lists his date of death as "Nov. 31, 1908", but there are not that many days in the month.

[672] Gilbert Smith's daughter, Nadia (Nadine), relates her father's use of some of his paintings to obtain some necessities for his family. That her father continued to paint is illustrated, for example, in a newspaper article by James Colvin, "Park is 'Home' to Followers of Swedenborg. Island of Trees West of Glenview is Unique Spot", The Chicago Daily News (30 Mar 1937); an illustration depicts Rev. Smith in his painter's smock, with his pallet and easel and two of his landscapes, as daughter Nadine watches.

[673] Some of the information relating to the attendance at the wedding of Gilbert and Nora were obtained during a visit with Nadia Smith Synnestvedt, 24 Jun 2006. She recalled specifically that her parents' wedding was at the Academy of the New Church, and thought that it was held on the third floor. A description of the layout of the Academy was read in a newspaper article found online, which had been reprinted from the Philadelphia North-American ("Bringing the Spirit World to Earth. Life and Study at Bryn Athyn, Swedenborgian Headquarters in America", cited here from a reprinting in The Macon Daily Telegraph (Georgia), 29 Dec 1907–coincidentally just weeks after Gilbert and Nora's wedding).

Autobiographical Notes by Gilbert Haven Smith

Gilbert Smith wrote an incomplete autobiography, containing a narrative of family history and his early life on the Eastern Shore and in Philadelphia, up to the time that he was a student in the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts. Although it is undated, he notes a publication, The Chesapeake Bay Country, by Swepson Earle, the first edition of which was published in 1923; thus we understand that this was written after 1923. Original pagination is indicated by a bar and subscript number |$_1$ thus.

|$_1$ The Hick from the Eastern Shore

By Gilbert Smith[676]

Down on the "Eastern Shore" of Maryland, best of all possible places in the best of all countries, my father, John Smith, was known years ago as the preacher who "preached with his coat-tails." To that peninsula I am not less partial than he. To me it is the most reasonable of all places to have been born. And my father always said he would claim direct descent from famous Capt. John Smith if it were not for the important fact that the said gentleman never married.

I boast, however, that my father's paternal line went far back in colonial Maryland history; for I can show you the house near Centerville [sic][677] erected by my great-great-grandfather. And then besides that they have found the cellar hole of Smith's Toon [Town] House in old Saint Maries City the original of Baltimore. I am sure my ancestors would have a Town House, as distinguished from the country place. And this was one of the earliest hostelries in Maryland.[678] And across the Chesapeake from old Saint Maries, back of Kent Island, where William Clayborne disputed the sovereignty of the Calverts, there lies in Spaniard's Neck a tract of land known as "Smith's Mistake." This clinches the argument, so far as I am concerned, that this section must have belonged in our family.[679]

---

[676] Gilbert Smith, "The Hick from the Eastern Shore" (typescript, no date, 15 pp.); transcribed from an old photocopy delivered by Nadia (Smith) Synnestvedt, daughter of Gilbert Smith. The title and by-line are written by hand, and a few editorial changes by Gilbert Smith are dispersed throughout the text, which are incorporated into this transcription. The original document was headed, in a more elaborate printing by Smith, "Bryn Athyn", which was subsequently crossed out. The typescript seems to have been produced on a "well-tuned" manual typewriter with a carbon ribbon.

[677] Throughout the narrative, Gilbert Smith spells the town name of Centreville as "Centerville". Presumably, the house he refers to is the brick house built on the property called "Lentley", which had been acquired by James Smith [No. 29] in 1820.

[678] This is the only family reference to John Smith having had a "town house" in Baltimore. While this might have made sense particularly if his business was a thriving one, there is no other evidence for him having had a house in this city. I suspect that the attribution is incorrect; that the house in question had belonged to another man of the same name, one whose association with Baltimore was more prominent.

[679] The will of one landed Richard Bennett of Queen Anne's Co., dated 25 Sep 1749, also takes note of this property, as follows: "To cousin Wm. Tilghman, Smiths Mistake, made over to me by Wm. Bishop for 440a [acres], in Spaniard Neck on Corsica Crk." (Carson Gibb, Abstracts of Wills, from Maryland Prerogative Court (Wills), Maryland State Archives, S538, Liber 28, 1751-1754, folio 466). Whether this is one and the same as the Smith's Mistake of family is not determined here.

Of additional note is an observation made by Frederic Emory in his history of Queen Anne's Co., which cites a "Smith's Neglect" at Centreville in 1724. Emory noted, "In Liber I. K., No. B., Queen Anne's Court Records, we find

[note cont'd →

"Smith's Mistake" integrated with the present Emory Estate.[680] And my Uncle Roe[681] used to take me to ride behind his favorite trotting horse Jim Emory. That was the name I gave my little broom-stick hobby, in preference to the famous J.I.C. [sic]

Do I not know the Corsica River, on whose bank my cousin William Watson feasted the gentlemen of Centerville on huge oysters, |2 brought out steaming on the shell in peach baskets from a special fireplace under the porch? Fine view of the river and town.[682]

Grandfather John Smith built the first hotel in Centerville, which still stands.[683] He was called "Captain John" Smith and owned a brace of sailing boats plying between the Eastern Shore and Baltimore, who always carried his merchant accounts in a tall hat. Family tradition has it that once, raising his hat to a lady on shore, the accounts fell out and scattered over the waters of the bay. Whether it was the lady he married I do not know; but there are indications that this ancestor may have made another of the Smith "Mistakes."

Memories of childhood center for me in the larger town of Easton. The stable, the family horse and buggy. Father was also a horse-trading parson. The stable, most enchanting of all places. I drew horses on scraps of paper, interminably sketching that subtle line that runs from the ears to the tail, over the parapet of intervening stalls. I remember riding with Father on preaching expeditions to what then seems [sic] far distant villages, waving sad good-byes to Mother as she stood, beautiful, like an angel in the lane. It broke me up to leave her for an over-night journey with Father. But it was fun with Father too. I remember how eagerly I contested with him, on the return trip, to see which would be the first to lay eyes upon the Easton standpipe.

I remember watching in summer the terrifying clouds blowing up a "gust," old Mr. Gelon[684] across the way, standing in his shirt sleeves, with his red beard blowing, welcoming the coming storm as relief from sultry afternoons; the torrential rains which sometimes followed, flooding the gutters on Railroad Avenue, filling the dirt street with rivulets through that on Aug. 14, 1724, George Smith conveyed to Anne Marshall part of a tract called 'Smith's Neglect,' lying in Queen Anne's county, on the north side of a branch of Corsica Creek, called Chester Mill Branch, beginning at a tree standing on the north side of Williams's Mill Pond." He continued, "The name Chester Mill applied not only to the mill but also to the village or settlement in the vicinity, and continued in use until 1789, when the name Centreville was substituted . . . ." (Frederick Emory, Queen Anne's County, Maryland; Its Early History and Development; a Series of Sketches Based Upon Original Research by Frederic Emory Originally Published in the Centreville Observer 1886-1887, Maryland Historical Society, Baltimore, 1950, p. 26).

[680] Poplar Grove, which is on the point of Spaniard Neck, several miles west of Centreville. This seems to identify Smith's Mistake as some property in that vicinity. The Emory land holdings had already been long established in the area, and the trail of property ownership is not clear here. However, the will of landed Richard Bennett, 25 Sep 1749, notes among numerous beneficiaries, "To cousin Wm. Tilghman, Smiths Mistake, made over to me by Wm. Bishop for 400 a[cres], inSpaniard Neck on Corsica Crk" (Carson Gibb, Abstracts of Wills, from Maryland Prerogative Court (Wills), Maryland State Archives, S538, Liber 28, 1751-1754, folio 466). The is the same will aforementioned in the genealogical notes for Richard Smith [No. 15].

[681] The identity of "Uncle Roe" is not clear.

[682] An illustration of the house appears in An Illustrated Atlas of Kent and Queen Anne Counties, Md. Compiled and Drawn and Published from Actual Surveys by Lake, Griffing and Stevenson (Lake, Griffing and Stevenson, Philadelphia, 1877).

[683] This record is probably confused with Capt. John Smith's father, James Smith [No. 29], or possibly Capt. John Smith's son, Capt. James Smith [No. 89]. See remarks under Capt. John Smith [No. 46].

[684] Unfortunately, "old Mr. Gelon" has not been identified in various U.S. censuses. In 1900, a younger Gellum family lived in Easton, and a number of Kellum families have been identified in this and other censuses in Maryland.

which the horses splashed; the |3 joyful aftermath of tramping with bare feet in the dammed up rainwater along the side of the road until there were vast areas of soft black mud to "sqush" [sic] in and out between the toes; revelling in winter in the deep moist snow that hung thick on peach, poplar, and maple; watching rich Miss Covey, daughter of the livery man, jingle fur[i]ously by in her black slay [sic] behind high-checked black horses; in the dreamy autumn, lying in the sheltered angle of the front porch, out of the wind, watching the tossing tops of the poplars, their leaves turned up, and catching the broken sound of the voices of people passing, distorted voices in the noisy breeze; just dreaming, and wondering at the mystery of consciousness, and why it was that I was I.

What a place for young boy life, Easton! Sling-shots, birds and bullfrogs; hunting frogs down in the "Branch" that ran along the railroad (Once I found a nickel right on top of one of the ties); hunting eggs in the tall weeds in vacant lots,—duck eggs worth two of the hen's at the little grocery down near the Station,—"Ol Man Chapman's" store, with a large assortment of penny candies to choose from in exchange for eggs; the village idiot "Crazy Ned", putting his hat on a hitching post and gabbling at it; watching the trainmen shifting, coupling and uncoupling freight cars. They had to stand between cars and hold the coupling, dropping the pin into it and leaning out from between the cars as they bumped, lest they be cut quite in two. I was going to do that when I grew up, most thrilling of all work.

I remember the swimming hole at the curve of the Branch, where bul[l]frogs were, big ones; the "Star of Bethlehem" growing amid the first stand of spring wheat; "Iron men" and lesser marbles we played with, though not for keeps; kicking the dust with our |4 bare feet back on Dover Road; shooting pigeons from neighboring barn roofs; watching the lazy buzzards circling over the slaughter house; going "down town" with Father and his market basket; flattening crossed pins into scissors on the railroad track; teasing farmers as they drove their huge wagon loads of tomatoes to the cannery. They hurled the softest ones at us. We caught them and ate them, unfolding from our pockets little papers of salt which we carried. These and countless other delights enriched by life in Easton. Rich neighbors who lived in the "Red Brick House" were then experimenting with high-wheel bicycles. But that was very dangerous. Indoors in bad weather there was the joy of running under the long lace curtains in the parlor, letting them drag across the forehead.

There were wharves and river banks to visit and explore. There was the beautiful Miles River bridge with the draw in the middle of it, and the wharf where the big passenger boat docked, captain in uniform on the upper deck, jangle of bells, gangplanks and all the entrancing things that go with white steamboats. There is magic in the very name Miles River. Now I know that it is a contraction for St. Michael's, an early parish.

Several wonderful visits I made with Father to Perry Hall, vividly recalled today by pictures of the mansion and its fire-place in Mr. Shepson [Swepson] Earle's "Chesapeake Bay Country."[685] This is a brick mansion of Georgian beauty and simplicity in Talbot County, home of Wm. Perry Esq. a man of wealth, brother-in law to Wm. Hindman, Member of Congress.[686] But in my childhood we visited a wonderful woman, Mrs. Mary Hindman Perry Cox, and her four daughters,[687] all of them accomplished, and in my eyes beautiful.

[686] Perry Hall, Maryland, was founded in 1775 by Harry Dorsey Gough, who purchased a 1,000-acre estate, "The Adventure", which he renamed Perry Hall after his family's home near Birmingham, England. There he built a manor that has been known for its gardens and distinctive architecture. After the Civil War, immigrant families settled in the area around the manor, developing dairies and nurseries. The property was purchased in 1875 by Eli Slifer and William Meredith, who sold lots to the immigrants who in turn raised "stoop crops" like celery and carrots.

|5 The hand-carved mantel, the fire-place beneath, with its brass andirons and fenders, the portraits above the mantel, the high ceiling, the quaint furniture, the woven rugs, all the charm of authentic colonial things, stick vividly in my memory. But it was the mother and the four charming girls, each talented in her own way, that won my boy's heart.

Father had a special reason for vi[s]iting this place. He was a preacher, and these people, I suppose, were part of his scattered flock. For Mrs. Cox, as I had heard from my parents very often, without knowing what it meant, was a "New Church Woman." How that made her so different I did not know, except that it meant some spiritual kinship with us, who also were "New Church People." That also gave me a special claim to some particular affinity with the four remarkable girls whom I adored as most awfully perfect and beautiful. I cherished every little attention they gave me, though I scarcely dared to look at them with direct glance. It was only at a distance I adored them, especially the one that "drew,"[688] and as it were out of the corner of my eye.

I did not know what it meant to be "New Church People," at that early age. Still I realized that our family was ecclesiastically different from our neighbors, that we had no nice church building to go to on Sundays, but that my father preached sometimes at "Odd Fellows' Hall" in Easton to a very small group; and that at the front of the platform there was a large chopping block, supposedly, on which there lay a large shining medieval axe with a red handle, and this, I supposed under certain awesome circumstances and woeful disobedience to the order, was to chop off heads.

|6 Well, it seemed just and right after all. People ought not to do what is forbidden. Yet decapitation shocked me, and the Hall took on a little of the atmosphere of a chamber of horrors. But why, after all, should not disobedient people have their heads chopped off? Still my own heart bled for those unfortunate Odd Fellows who must submit their necks to the axe.

It did distress me not a little, though, to compare our mythical "Church" with the First Episcopal in our Maryland town,—with its mighty spire and its glorious booming bell. If it happened to ring when I was passing by on my way from school it nearly vibrated my soul and body out of the small clothes that covered them. And there was something of the martyr's sadness in me at the perceptive intuition that Ethel Stanley, the Episcopal minister's [687] At the time of the 1880 U.S. census for Easton, Maryland, Mrs. Mary H. P. Cox, aged 37, kept house for her four daughters, Mary, Anna, Alice, and Clara, aged 18, 17, 14, 12, respectively. They had an English housekeeper, Elizabeth Scott, a widow, aged 61.

[688] By an astonishing coincidence, it seems that two small wash paintings still in the family might have been created by the Cox sister who "drew". These paintings were held by Lora (Smith) Spamer, a sister of Gilbert Smith, who in turn passed them to her daughter, Katharine S. Spamer. One of the paintings is signed "C. B. Cox"; both are signed lightly in pencil on their backs, "Clara Bell Cox". They may identify which of the Cox sisters was the artist among them. If Clara Cox of Easton is the same Clara Bell Cox who painted these pictures, she would have been about 17 years of age when he did them. They both are dated in September 1885, when Gilbert would have not even been three years of age; so it is unlikely that (if the supposition is correct about the identity of Clara Bell Cox) they were given to Gilbert at that time. Rather, the timing coincides with the arrival in Easton of Rev. Smith and his family, having left Wilmington, Delaware, after he received his calling in the New Church. The paintings could have been a gift to Lora (her 11th birthday came a few weeks after the paintings were made), or as a welcoming gift from Clara to the entire Smith family. Furthermore, if these suppositions are correct, it helps narrow the timeframe when the Smiths were at last in Easton, since Earle Smith was born in Wilmington in February, about when Rev. Smith withdrew from the Methodist church there. (The paintings are now in the possession of Earle Spamer.)

When young, "wonderstruck" Gilbert Smith arrived in Philadelphia in 1895 with his family, he was stunned by the grandeur of the Broad Street railroad station and the collossal City Hall directly across the street from it.

(Above) Broad Street Station, newly enlarged, as Gilbert would have first seen it. From this vantage, City Hall would be behind and to the right of the viewer.

daughter,—with light golden curls down to her waist could never possibly be for me, because I was "New Church." To think of her in any such way was forbidden sweetness. So great was my admiration, however, and my panic at meeting her on the street that I always crossed over to the other side and did not see her.[689]

When we visited Perry Hall I remember my father had long and animated talks with Mrs. Cox. He was positive and eloquent in conversation, and she seemed a woman of great culture and wit. Apparently they had many problems to straighten out; and without understanding a word, I liked to hover near. There was something here that bordered on majesty. But somehow it seemed that the fate of the New Church hung in the balance.

Appologies! [sic] My first attempt to write a book. Must tell my story in my own way.[690]

1 8 9 5 — Father, Mother, and nine of us, their wonderstruck progeny, arrived by night at the old Broad Street Station in Philadelphia.[691] Strange place to us from Florida, after seven happy years, since we migrated from Easton (Father was a traveling missionary). Such [a] magnificent building I had never before seen,—the station and the City Hall, with its breath-taking tower.[692] All the wealth in the world must be concentrated here, I thought. Appalled [689] The Stanley family has not been identified in census records.

[690] This statement signals a change in tenor in Gilbert Smith's narrative. His writing now, regretfully, becomes more telegraphic and less "dreamy". This break may also represent a hiatus in Gilbert's writing of this account.

[691] Gilbert Smith's obituary from a Vermont newspaper takes note that the family traveled to and from Jacksonville on a coastal steamer. The northern terminus would probably have been in Baltimore, Maryland, and their journey would have taken them by train between these two cities.

[692] Broad Street Station was built in 1881 by the Wilson Brothers Co., when it was the largest passenger terminal in the world. In 1891 it was greatly expanded (mostly vertically) by architect Frank Furness (1839-1912), who also had designed the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts (1876); the number of tracks into the terminal was increased at that time, too. The Pennsylvania Railroad advertised the station as "America's Grandest Railway Terminal". The station was dramatically positioned in the heart of Philadelphia, directly across from the west side of City Hall; trains both entered and exited from West Philadelphia across the Schuylkill River on top of the "Chinese Wall" that bisected the city in that area. In 1894, the Pennsylvania Railroad moved its general offices to the Broad Street Station. The train shed burned in 1923. In 1930, the station handled about 450 trains per day. At that time, the construction of 30th Street Station on the west side of the Schuylkill River, and the underground Suburban Station adjacent to the Broad Street Station (for electrically powered locomotives), diminished the practical need for the Broad Street Station. In 1943, the track and platform area of the station burned. Finally, the building and the "Chinese Wall" were razed in 1953. Today, John F. Kennedy Blvd. (formerly Pennsylvania Blvd.) traces the "Chinese Wall", and the Penn Center complex of office buildings occupies the site of the station.

Philadelphia's City Hall occupies Center Square, the middle point of the city of Philadelphia as originally laid out by William Penn. It is the largest freestanding masonry building in the world; its tower is 548 feet tall, including at its top the 36-ft, 4-in tall, 27-ton bronze statue of William Penn sculpted by Alexander Milne Calder. Designed by John McArthur, Jr., in the Second Empire style, it has been periodically denigrated for its overbearingly heavy architectural elements. Plans even to raze the building, in the 20th century, were set aside for the sheer cost of the project; its load-bearing walls of granite and limestone are up to 22 feet thick. Although it was supposed to be the tallest structure in the world, by the time it was completed it was exceeded by the Washington Monument in Washington, D.C., and the Eiffel Tower in Paris. It took 30 years to build (1871-1901), at a cost of $24 million. Around 2000, City Hall began a multi-year program of rehabilitation, including cleaning its entire façade (still in progress in 2007). The unexpectedly dazzling splendor of white stone that emerged from decades of coal-fired grime (in part from the former Broad Street Station) must reproduce the feeling that young Gilbert Smith must have felt when he arrived that night in 1895.

by the size of vehicles and trolleys, and the noise they made. There was the smell of gas in the streets when we set out for the house that was to be our home. It was not a pleasant approach.

The house was an ancient duplex, yellow stuccho [sic], in three stories, Mansard windows at the top.[693] Rooms unnaturally high and gloomy, Parlor windows reaching to the floor. Ceilings ornate with unbelievable designs in tinted plaster. The bell handle at the front door set vibrating, when pulled, an amazing bell on a big spiral spring in the back hallway, making a wild clatter that was more than sufficient. Long narrow back yard with high board fences.

Staid Philadelphia, where people were omniscient, and hucksters changed in the alleys. Feeling of being shut in. Explorations for my brothers and me. We discovered the waterfront, rich with racey [sic] smells, Independence Hall, and Fairmount Park.

After a few unsatisfactory years at public schools, I found my green pastures at the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts.[694] I would be a painter of the first magnitude. But the glorious prospect first opened when my father managed to finance a summer $|_8$ course for me in "Landscape and Figure Painting," at the Darby Summer School, where I first met and soon adored Thomas Anshutz and Hugh Breckenridge.[695] Instructors at the Academy of the [693] The address to which the Smiths moved in 1895 is uncertain. By 1898, when Rev. John E. Smith first appears in the Philadelphia city directory, they were living at 614 N. 43rd St. But given the numerous times the family moved, from one rental property to another, it is not clear whether this was their first Philadelphia residence.

[694] The Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts was described as follows in A Guide Book of Art, Architecture, and Historic Interests in Pennsylvania (A. Margaretta Archambault, ed.) (John C. Winston Co., Philadelphia, 1924), pp. 58-60, which would be more in kind with the Academy as it was known by Gilbert and Nora Smith:

> "Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts . . . was the first art institute in America, founded, 1805; its history is in no small measure the history of American art itself, and dates back to 1791, when Charles Willson Peale attempted to organize in Philadelphia a school of art; from this grew, in 1794, the Columbianum, which held the first exhibition of paintings, in 1795, in Independence Hall. The permanent collection of paintings and sculpture now includes the Gallery of National Portraiture, with the largest number of portraits by Gilbert Stuart to be seen in any museum; and notable works by other early American painters–Benjamin West, Washington Allston, Matthew Pratt, the Peales, Sully, Neagle, Inman, Eichholz, Trumbull, and Bass Otis; the Gibson Collection, largely composed of the Continental schools; Temple collection of modern American paintings; important works by many of the world's greatest artists; and the Phillips collection of about forty thousand etchings and engravings. * * *
> "Since the beginning of the Academy's existence, men and women whose names have become illustrious in the annals of American art have been enrolled as students. The schools are equipped in every way to teach the technique of painting and sculpture, the faculty is composed of representative artists of the day; collections, galleries, classrooms, models, and casts are admirably fitted to afford instruction fully equal to that obtainable in Europe. Many substantial prizes are awarded annually to students upon the merits of their work."

Gilbert Smith and Nora Potts missed the inspirational, sometimes calamitous, tenure of artist Thomas Eakins at the Academy; he was dismissed from the faculty in 1886 for overemphasizing the use of the nude, although many of his innovations (including the nude) remained in the curriculum thereafter. The 100th anniversary celebration of the Academy, at which was, according to The New York Times, the "greatest gathering of artists", is unfortunately not mentioned in Gilbert Smith's reminiscences. (Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts website, http://www.pafa. org, various pages accessed Nov 2005.) In 2005, the Academy was awarded the National Medal of Arts by the National Endowment for the Arts, "the first museum ever to receive the nation's highest honor for artistic excellence" (Dianna Marder, "PAFA is a National Medal of Arts winner", The Philadelphia Inquirer (10 Nov 2005), p. E2.

[695] The Darby School of Painting was established in 1898 by two notable painters, Thomas Pollack Anshutz (1851-1912) and Hugh Henry Breckenridge (1870-1937), both affiliated with the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine

Fine Arts, in the winter, they gathered me into it, only a few short "blocks" from the Broad Street Station where my eyes were first opened to the fabulous splendor of Philadelphia.

Four happy years a tireless student of Art before reaching twenty. Parents regretted my leaving High School, but not I. Painting was mine, and I must prepare for it. "Promising student" indeed! They did not know the half. I would be the greatest painter of modern times!

My large sketches at Darby, my bold splashes of color on big canvasses, had set me up as a genius. But I soon discovered there were other geniuses at the Academy, and some of them were girls. New and disturbing thought. There were clay modellers slopping at bright careers under Grafley [sic].[696] But sculpture was not for me, though the Dago Donatto[697] did wonders with the slippery clay. And there was the truly Philadelphic Joseph Hergesheimer, who only drew and dabbled a little for the sake of breadth. He had a genial and be-monacled eye on the heights of Literature.[698]

Under the "Pink Antique" a stairway dipped and turned and descended to the locker room beneath. And over the high-boarded entrance was the omenous [sic] legend, painted in oils by some student hand, though artistically withal, "Abandon all hope, ye who enter here." Experience taught the full meaning.

It was here that the male geniuses ate their lunches, a large bare room enclosed with wooden lockers with paint streaks and split panels. And one learned to descend into that inferno with extreme |9 caution peering around the edge of the partition to see what stroke of genius might hit his face or body, a splash of water, a morsel of bread, a banana peel, or a piece of furniture. One of the heavy expenses of the Academy was in supplying and renewing the wooden benches that were soon torn to pieces in the play of the geniuses. There were iron pipes across the ceiling that supplied the need for gymnasium equipment. The Arts. Anshutz, a student of Thomas Eakins, succeeded Eakins at the Academy as Instructor in Anatomy, Drawing and Painting. His work was not broadly appreciated until later in the 20th century, but his legacy was better expressed earlier in the works of his students. He worked in oils and watercolors, expressing light and color with strong realism. In 1909, Anshultz became the director of the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, and in 1910 he became also the president of the Philadelphia Sketch Club. Breckenridge was a modernist artist, producing landscapes, portraits, and figure paintings in impressionistic styles and vigorous colorings in paints and pastels. After the time that Gilbert Smith had known him, Breckenridge entered a neoimpressionist phase, and eventually by the 1920s was an abstract painter. Later, Breckenridge established a school in East Gloucester, Massachusetts, and in 1919 he was the Director of Fine Arts in the Maryland Institute, in Baltimore. In 1924, the Darby School persisted still, under Breckenridge alone, as cursorily noted in A Guide Book of Art, Architecture, and Historic Interests in Pennsylvania, A. Margaretta Archambault, ed. (John C. Winston Co., Philadelphia, 1924), p. 65: "Darby School of Painting, Fort Washington, Montgomery County. Outdoor classes. Hugh H. Breckenridge, 10 South 18th Street, Philadelphia."

[696] Charles Grafly (1862-1929) was a Philadelphia-born sculptor and teacher who studied under Thomas Eakins in the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts. After studies in Paris, he returned to Philadelphia and in 1891 began teaching in the Academy and at the Drexel Institute. He had a studio at 22nd and Arch Sts. and resided at 2209 Summer St., not far from the Academy and Drexel. (>>Winterthur Library collection information, http://findingaid.winterthur.org/html/html_finding_aids/col0198.htm, accessed 25 Feb 2007.)

[697] Probably in reference to the Italian Renaissance sculptor, Donatello (diminutive of Donnato) (1386-1466).

[698] Philadelphia-born Joseph Hergesheimer (1880-1954) began his career as a painter, but very soon turned to writing and became an acclaimed novelist. He was considered as the most significant American novelist in 1922, and some of his works even were adapted for (silent) film. His popularity peaked in the 1920s, and his last novel was published in 1938, his works by then out of favor. He died in literary obscurity.

broad window frames were reasonably safe places to take one's mid-day refreshments. But geniuses did more than grow long hair to impress their personality upon others.

There were the two brothers Levinski, Goldberg, and Augie Henkle, and Farraday, and Carles, and Lyman Seyen [sic][699], and Daniel Garber—"Feelers" all, in contradistinction to the "Ticklers", with whom there was nothing in common. Among these latter we must place the names of Wallace Gilchrist and Joseph Pierson. I myself was a "Feeler." We did not tickle with fine brushes but boldly sp[l]ashed with large ones, feeling for the spirit of the object to be drawn or painted.

More distinct than Democrats and Republicans, the Feelers followed the art of "Tommy" Anshutz and "Brecky" the impressionist. The Ticklers hung upon the renouned [renowned] Wm. Chase,[700] who commuted from New York. He strode nattily up Broad Street,—pointed beard, black ribboned eye-glasses, gold-banded neck-cloth, exercising his famous digets [digits], as he walked, with rhythmic precision. He had known and painted Whistler!—and many canvasses of vegetables and fish.

My story presses. I am no good at introspection or character analysis. I cannot draw pictures of people so well in words. But I can tell you what happened. And I want to drop back to that first |$_{10}$ summer at the Darby School, to give you the atmosphere of it.

The Darby School, someday to become as famous as that of Barbison we thought, represented the extreme of impressionism. Originated in old "Doc" Painter[']s barn in Darby, Penna.[701] My introduction to Art and to the entrancing smell of oil paints. I peddled a bicycle back and forth each day from West Philadelphia.

You entered the barn through the carriage door that fronted upon the quaint street, after crossing the wide lawn. It was on a hill side, and at the rear on a lower level was the entrance for cows and smaller cattle and the Doctor's horse. Winding away for a mile or so among [sic] Darby Creek,—fine meadows and trees on either side, with an old mill-race. Flocks of chickens, ducks, and geese. Water tumbling over a dam of jagged rocks. Magnificent reflections in deep pools. Village houses seen from their distant back yards. Purple cows and shadows, Students sketching in two[s] and threes on large canvasses. Romance in the making. Wealthy girl students and poor boys—like me, daubing in spots and splashes,

[699] H[enry]. Lyman Sayen (1875-1918) was an American Modernist painter who first worked brilliantly as an electrical engineer. In 1897, he patented a self-regulating X-ray tube, which was among several other patents for devices that he designed. In 1899, he entered studies in the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts. In 1904, he won a contest for the designs of four lunettes to be painted in the House wing of the U.S. Capitol (Room H-143). Following the usual tradition of studying in Europe, where he was strongly influenced in the first art class of Henri Matisse, he returned to Philadelphia and began creating impressionistic landscape paintings in dramatically abstract styles. At the time of his death, he was beginning to explore folk and American Indian influences in his art. (>>AskART website, citing Dictionary of American Artists and Who Was Who in American Art, http://www.askart/s/h_lyman_sayen/h_lyman_sayen.aspx; accessed 25 Feb 2007.)

[700] William Merritt Chase (1949-1916) was an American Impressionist painter who taught at the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts from 1896 to 1909. It was a part-time arrangement because he also taught at his Chase School of Art (in 1898 it became the New York School of Art) until 1907, in addition to still yet other teaching activities in the New York area. He is known for his work in oils and pastels particularly, mostly portraits, landscapes, and still lifes.

[701] William P. Painter, a physician, resided at 1016 Main St., Darby, Delaware Co., Pennsylvania (1900 U.S. census). Properties were then fairly well separated in this area, judging by the sequence of street-address numbers on the census sheet.

struggling to get the "feel" of nature and the vibrations of light,—no "mud", no finnicky [sic] "tickling,"—we were the "Feelers."

Newspaper men came,—MacDougall came,—to make funny cartoons for the North American, and to scoff at us by making his own sketch in swirls of paint, like so many onions of assorted color. There was old Cook, who enrolled among us younger ones, who could recite Kipping and "Evelyn Hope," and describe "that certain subtle pellucidity" [sic] that was evening mist. And there was McGee, the red haired Irishmen [sic] who kept a saloon on Lancaster Avenue, and exhibited his work in the window—sheep and shepherds, and sunsets, a different one every little while. I could seem them on Sundays on my way to Church.[702]

|11 We had not thought of it, but Dan Garber and May Franklin thrilled the whole colony with the sudden announcement that they were engaged. Daniel, the Hoosier, my best friend, and May, my good friend also who looked like Pocahontas, was original and clever. And I never suspected! A good marriage, leading on to fame. Dan would no doubt "arrive" and succeed, and May would help him.[703]

Winter came, and the Darby School removed to other pastures. No longer were Doc Painter's ducks to suffer death, or his cows develop colic in the night from easting waste paint. My last impression of the place recalls the picture of the physician's pretty young daughter[704] fanning a sick duck to give it breath on a sultry afternoon, but I fear in vain.

But Miss Flemmington [sic]came that summer for a day's visit. I surrendered at once. The most beautiful woman I had ever looked upon. She was a friend of our beloved "Tommy," and she came from Bryn Athyn. This was a place outside Philadelphia of which I had no definite knowledge but many pre-conceptions. I had been advised to keep away from it,—a New Church settlement with a college attached, with sinister attractions for the unwary young. Yet here stood Miss Flemington [sic][705] from Bryn Athyn before my delighted sight, perfect in beauty, charming in manner, with a high philosophy of Art, talking with me without condescension, deigning to notice my ragged and shaggy youthful self. She had heard through "Tommy" that I was "a New Church boy," and some day, she was sure, I would know and love Bryn Athyn. Such persons as I were wanted there. I must be sure to come. What mystery did Bryn Athyn hold?

[702] Here Gilbert Smith has crossed out a parenthetical comment, "(This is a story of my religion too.)"

[703] Daniel Garber (1880-1958) began his art studies in the Art Academy of Cincinnati, but moved to Philadelphia in the late 1890s and enrolled in the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts. During the summers of 1899 and 1900 he also studied at the Darby School of Painting. In 1901, he opened a studio where he did portrait work and commercial artistry. In 1905, after he married (biographical sketches give his wife's name as Mary, who apparently was known as May according to Gilbert Smith's narrative), he received a scholarship from the Academy to study in Europe for two years, where the impressionist masters further influenced his work. When he returned to Pennsylvania, he settled down in Cuttalossa, Pennsylvania, in the area of New Hope along the Delaware River, which provided him the scenes for the impressionistic works of the area for which he is now best known. In 1909, he joined the faculty of the Pennsylvania Academy, remaining there for 41 years. Today, many of his works hang in major art museums and galleries; and as a measure of his continued demand in art communities, numerous examples of Garber's work can be viewed on Internet websites.

1 9 0 1 Began under the sign of the red dragon.

The Academy of Fine Arts was preparing for the "Annual Ball." I was at work on a large piece of decoration,—a huge red dragon on a background of vivid green, with many other colors thrown in. It was a fierce fantastic piece in colored chalks covering the back-drop on the stage in the assembly room. I was alone, or almost so. Various students came in and out, enlivening my labors with art school jargon and superlatives in praise or jibe, often depending upon their sex. But after a long quiet interval of intensive work I turned about, at the sound of a slight feminine cough, to see two girls standing at the front of the stage, in the fading afternoon light, in what I thought to be guileless admiration of my work.

They were students recently enrolled and I did not know how they were. We entered into conversation easily enough. No one ever thought to introduce the students to each other in those days. We would made [sic] it a point of honor to be unconventional; and geniuses could speak to whom they pleased. Boys and girls called each other by their last names. It is last names by which geniuses are to be known. Leanardo [sic] is the striking exception. Who ever referred to Whistler as James McNeal?

They were full of praise, and showed great defference [sic] to one so much farther advanced in art. It was their artlessness that attracted me, and I felt the same compassionate interest in them as that [which] old golfers feel in sweet young ladies who have played the game "only once or twice before." I told these young girls many things about Art, and one of them especially I decided would be quite worth while to cultivate. That girl was Ethel Stanley!

When she told me her name, I dropped the box of colored chalk |13 into the foot-lights. The daughter of the Episcopal minister in Easton. Yes it was the face of her I had loved long since—at a distance—and lost awhile. "Why you don't say so?" I exclaimed. "I came from Easton too,—I'm sure you could not remember me."

She did remember me. But how could she? I had never spoken a dozen words to her in our childhood at school,—I was too deeply smitten at her sweet smile. Later in life I think I have observed that women never forget anything.

The sweet smile was still there, and from this day onward things moved very rapidly and friendship grew between us,—alarmingly. I was soon in love. It was not for the first time, but it was the first time that counted.

I took her to the Academy Masque Ball., for which I had created the red dragon. She wore a scarlet robe trimmed with white fur, and let down her hair in light golden curls, with a band around her temple like the ladies of the time of Robin Hood. I came as Captain John Smith. Girls did not bob their hair in those days. Nor was there anything more jazzy than Rag-time and the Cake-walk. There was good music for waltz, and two-step, and Polka, rendered perhaps by members of Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra.

I knew that outfit. They used to rehearse once a week in that same assembly room of the Academy of Fine Arts, and only a locked door separated them from us who attended the evening sessions of the Life Class. We heard them while drawing the human figure in the nude; and during the intermissions went dancing down the corridors into the Antique room, our linen painting coats flying wildly around to the strains of the Moonlight Sonata or the Symphonic Poem. Those evening[s] were a course in music appreciation. To Wagner music some of the fellows might slide down the back stairway, or the railing of it |14 on a drawing board or a sculptor's ladder. It depended upon what kind of a genius he was.

At the Costume Ball were many good costumes, some classic, some weird, some comic, but all complete in that detail which only artists are capable of carrying out. The Devil was there, and Faust, and many of Shakespeare's favorites, Robin Hood, Dante, and the Yellow Kid, knights, Knaves, and Gibson Girls. I was no dancer. Neither was Ethel. We were the children of the clergy. But we sat out most of the dances and talked, opening our hearts to each other in the most surprising way for those more conservative days. We went over our childhood days.

From time to time my attention was attracted by a mysterious and most attractive girl in black, with a black mask over her eyes. I could not tell whether she was flirting with me or not. She appeared and disappeared in the most unexpected way. At times I would catch her gaze upon me, but it was quickly averted. And though often she circled near us in her dancing with Henry the Eighth, it was then as if she had never noticed me. Once she "Begged our pardon" for brushing our knees with the train of her black gown. Neither of us could make out who she was. But certainly she noticed our intimacy.

It was announced that I Gilbert Smith had drawn the great red dragon, and I was called upon to rise and make a bow in response to the general applause. Ethel was delighted,—and so was I. I could understand the joy of a great painter like Chase, on those dramatic occasions when he would finish a portrait painted in class, with a final flourish of the brush. And the lucky study to whom he gave the finished canvass [sic] would bear it triumphantly out of the room and down the hall followed by an envious group of what we termed "old ladies."

|15 Ethel and I took life rather hard and seriously. We worked at the business of learning to draw and paint with idealistic intensity. We hardly had time to consider how much we meant to each other. Ours was a long and slow romance not recognised [sic] as romance till at last it burst upon as an unexpected delight. She was an idealist, as I was. For a long time I regarded [her] more as a beuutiful [sic] artist's model than as a sweetheart. There was no outward show of affection, no declaration of love,—hardly a realisation of it on my part. And as we often met for lunch at the little German bakery and dairy lunchroom, near the Academy, and she rambled on about the days of our childhood in Easton, I lost myself in the contemplation of the kind of portrait I could paint of her, with her golden hair and dimpled cheeks, set off by her large and lacey picture hat.

We always went "Dutch" to our few social diversions. Of course there were no movies, and the theatre was too expensive for me.

Here Gilbert Smith's typescript ends, in mid-page. The young woman in black remains a mystery.

A Smith Family Road Trip

In 1921, the Smith family traveled in a large touring car to visit the "home folks" in Pennsylvania. Gilbert summarized the adventure: [706]

[706] Transcribed from the records of Gilbert Smith by his daughter, Nadia Smith Synnestvedt; copy received from her June 2006.

August 9th, 1921, Nora and I and our (now) seven children (the youngest Edmund) left Glenview in a large touring car, for a visit to Bryn Athyn, our object being to see the "home folks," since all four of the children's grandparents were still alive, and we thought the opportunity might not soon occur again. We passed south through Indiana from Valparaiso towards Indianapolis, but took a diagonal road to avoid that city, and came upon the "Old National Roads Trail."

We passed through Columbus and Wheeling, W. Va. where we passed the night at [the] home of Mrs. E. A. Pollock. Then we made for the Lincoln Highway and followed it to Philadelphia, on the Monday morning following arriving at Mother Smith's.[707]

After four days visiting at Bryn Athyn and at 820 So. St. Bernard St. we set out for Dorset, Vt.[708], reaching there the following morning, after two nights encampments. On the next Tuesday morning we set out for Chicago through Troy, Buffalo, Erie and Toledo, arriving home on Monday evening at 6:30 after seven days of rather hard going.

We were very glad to be home again. This was one of the big adventures in our family life, and will long be remembered.

We got home August 29th, 20 days from the beginning of our tour.

Collateral Genealogy
(100 descendants)

The genealogy of the Potts family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is given below. Also following farther below are collateral genealogies for the Faulkner and Watson families of England.

The obituary of John Faulkner Potts [No. 9 in this collateral genealogy] begins with a biographical sketch of his immediate ancestors, which is worth starting this outline.[709]

> "Mr. Potts' grandfather was a builder of ships, his father a builder of houses—practical men, both, whose delight was to work with their hands as well as with their heads. His grandfather, Edward Potts [No. 1 here] of Sunderland, England, became wealthy through large shipbuilding industry; his father, Thomas Potts [No. 4], also accumulated wealth in the building of houses. His son John, the oldest of the family, tells of his father's love for manual employment. Every evening, as soon as supper was over, off would come his coat, and he would be engaged in hard work until a late hour,—carpentry, cabinetmaking, or bookbinding. In this the boy joined with great delight, and became expert in all these crafts. And this recreative activity he kept up throughout his life, a [707] The Smiths were Rev. John Edward and Ella Smith, who then resided at 820 South St. Bernard St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

[708] The parents of Nora Smith, John Faulkner and Mary Potts, resided in Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania; they also had a country home in Dorset, Vermont (where also Gilbert and Nora were engaged). Various members of the Potts family frequently took holidays in Dorset. Just over two years after the family trip, Rev. Potts died. By Jan 1930, all four of the grandparents of Gilbert and Nora's children were dead.

For many years, he was Secretary, then President, of the Sunday School Union, and for a period of fifty years was never absent from its annual meetings."

Descendants of Edward Potts

Much of the genealogical data and vital statistics that relate to the ancestors of John Faulkner Potts [No. 9] are derived from family records. Many original documents are presently in the Potts family papers in the Archives of the Academy of the New Church, Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania.[710]

Generation No. 1

1. Edward[1] Potts He married Jane Robinson in County Durham, Low Ford Hylton, daughter of Thomas Robinson and Jane Mowbray. She was born 04 July 1779, and died 28 January 1836 in Seaham.

Children of Edward Potts and Jane Robinson are:

	2	i.	Jane[2] Potts, born 01 April 1801; died before August 1834.
	3	ii.	William Potts, born 17 December 1803; died before August 1834.
	4	iii.	Thomas Potts, born 22 November 1804; died before August 1834.
	5	iv.	Ann Potts, born 31 March 1807; died before August 1834 in Durham. She married G. Reed.
	6	v.	Edward Potts, born 26 October 1809; died before August 1834 in Durham. He married Jane Waters.
+	7	vi.	Thomas Potts, born 09 August 1811 in Hylton, Durham, England; died 06 September 1894.
	8	vii.	Robert Potts, born 18 January 1820. He married Ann Riley.

Jane Robinson (1779–1836)
(wife of Edward Potts [No. 1])

Regarding the Robinson family, thus far only partial information is known regarding her parents and siblings. In 1834, Thomas Potts [No. 7] compiled a genealogical list of his wife's immediate family, the data for which are:[711]

Thomas[1] Robinson He married Jane Mowbray.

Children of Thomas Robinson and Jane Mowbray are:

2	i.	Jane[2] Robinson, born 04 July 1779; died 28 January 1836 in Seaham. She married Edward Potts.
3	ii.	John Robinson, born 14 June 1776; died before August 1834.
4	iii.	Thomas Robinson, born 20 August 1777; died before August 1834 in Newcastle.

[710] The Archives contain numerous items of interest, far more even than are cited in this genealogy. Many papers relating to the personal lives of various members of the Potts and Watson families are kept there, as well as a substantial selection of the business and ecclesiastical correspondence of Rev. John Faulkner Potts. There are likewise a few items that are of unspecified significance, yet they clearly are important records of the family in Scotland and/or England.

[711] The data were taken from an autograph sheet, "Written by Thomas Potts. Aug. 1834", the original of which may be in the John Faulkner Potts papers in the Archives of the Academy of the New Church. The data were taken from a photocopy of this document.

5 iv. Anna Robinson, born 04 November 1789; died 11 June 1812 in Shiney Row.

NOTES

The date of death for Anna Robinson could be 11 June 1802; the original handwritten notation by Thomas Potts in 1834 is ambiguous.

Generation No. 2

7. Thomas[2] Potts (Edward[1]) was born 09 November 1811 in Hylton, Durham, England, and died 06 September 1894. He married Charlotte Anna Faulkner 23 June 1836 in Manchester Cathedral, Manchester, Lancashire, England, daughter of John Faulkner. She was born 15 August 1815 in Manchester, Lancashire, England, and died 26 December 1872.

See Faulkner Family collateral genealogy (below) for that family's lineage.

Children of Thomas Potts and Charlotte Faulkner are:

\+ 9 i. John Faulkner[3] Potts, born 04 May 1838 in Manchester, Lancashire, England; died 15 September 1923 in Bryn Athyn, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.
10 ii. Charlotte Victoria Potts, born between January–March 1840 in Manchester, Lancashire, England; died 05 November 1855.
11 iii. Annie Faulkner Potts, born 1843 in Manchester, Lancashire, England; died 11 November 1855.
12 iv. Emma Faulkner Potts, born 1847 in Manchester, Lancashire, England; died 30 October 1855.
\+ 13 v. Rhoda Faulkner Potts, born 06 June 1849 in Manchester, Lancashire, England.
\+ 14 vi. Rawlinson Faulkner Potts, born 29 October 1853 in Stretford, Lancashire, England; died 07 December 1911 in Oregon.

NOTES

Manchester, Lancashire, was the center of life for the Potts family as well as for some of the families whom they would marry. The city is the preemptive historical focus of cotton textile production in 19th century England. The city finds its beginnings as a Roman fort established in A.D. 79 at the confluence of the Irwell and Medlock Rivers, within the territory of the Celtic tribe called the Brigantes. The fort was abandoned in 411 but its ruins did not entirely disappear until, ironically, the industrial centers of Manchester were built up during the 19th century with the advent of canals, steam power, and railways. In Manchester were devised methods mechanized textile production that were exported to America and elsewhere. The American Civil War instigated the "cotton famine" due to the textile depression as the result of blockaded Southern ports. Still, many mills survived until well into the 20th century, succumbing finally to the economics of foreign imports. Some of the mills survive today, converted for other commercial and industrial uses.[712]

Thomas Potts was Secretary and later President of the New Jerusalem Sunday School Union.

At the time that the Pottses resided in Amwell St., Pentonville, they resided near the family of Charles Dickens. This is recorded in an incomplete, unsigned leaf now in the Potts family papers, perhaps by Thomas Potts:[715]

> "Charles Dickens family was known to the Waites. Letitia Dickens who married Henry Austen, visited at the Waites. She was very stylish. I saw her brother, he was a military man—brother of Dickens. (They all neglected their wives.) They were too fond of themselves.
> "Dickens married Miss Hogarth & her sister lived with them. He left his wife afterwards & said it was incompatibility of [temper?].
> "He used to go around at night to find characters for his novels. I think it wasn't very comfortable for his wife.
> "When he separated young Charles went with his mother—the rest with the father.
> "He lived a very long (rambling) life They were always dramatizing his pieces or any other"—[incomplete]

Charlotte (Faulkner) Potts (1815–1872)
(wife of Thomas Potts [No. 7])

A portrait of Charlotte as a young child was painted by her uncle and renowned portrait painter Benjamin Rawlinson Faulkner; in 2007 this was owned by Nadia (Smith) Synnestvedt. On its reverse is a notation by Nadine's grandfather, John Faulkner Potts:

> "This picture of my ever dear Mother, Charlotte Anna Faulkner, when a child, was painted by her uncle Benjamin Rawlinson Faulkner, who introduced my father and mother to the doctrines of the New Church, and who was a portrait painter in London. He painted also the portrait of my grandfather John Faulkner, now in the dining room, but my grandfather unfortunately died before his portrait was finished. My mother was born Aug. 15th about the year 1815. John F. Potts".

Charlotte Faulkner Potts' obituary the Swedenborgian serial, Intellectual Repository, notes that she suffered a protracted illness in 1866, from which she succumbed suddenly on the day following Christmas, 1872:[716]

> "On December 26th, 1872, Charlotte Anna Potts was suddenly removed by heart disease into the spiritual world in the fifty-ninth year of her age. She was the wife of Thomas Potts, the > indefatigable secretary of the New Jerusalem Sunday School Union, and the mother of the Rev. J. F. Potts, B.A., of Glasgow. Her attention was first directed to the sublime teachings of the New Church about thirty-seven years ago, by her uncle, Mr. Faulkner[717], who became acquainted with the doctrines while engaged in painting the portrait of the late Rev. Mr. Jones, the minister of Peter-street Church, Manchester. The preaching of the late Rev. J. H. Smithson, together with the study of the writings of Swedenborg, deepened into convictions the favourable impressions received by herself and husband, then recently married, from Mr. Faulkner. They united themselves with the Peter-street society, and she shared in the many labours of love and use in which the society has engaged. For many years she discharged the, to her, delightful duty of teaching the first class of girls in the Sunday-school, established chiefly by the labours of Mr. E. J. Broadfield, and her son J. F. Potts, for the children of members. Her influence over the minds of her scholars was most remarkable. Her intelligence, her extensive reading, her pure, beautiful, and loving character, combined with the sweet charm of her manner, eminently fitted her for this most useful and productive work. The zeal with which she devoted her powers to promote the success of the Sunday Union Bazaar in 1861, and the large amount of time and labour she bestowed in preparing for it, will long live in the remembrance of all the Societies of the Church in Lancashire. The prominent position in the New Church uses which has been forced upon her husband and herself, and their frequent attendance at Conference meetings, have considerably extended her acquaintance, and everywhere she has left most charming impressions of her intelligence and sweetness of soul. She will be much missed, and by a large circle of friends. Her life, however, had known several severe afflictions. The loss, about eighteen years ago, of three daughters, who were removed into the world of spirits by scarlet fever, and all within a fortnight, was deeply felt by her, though she learned to say in trust and faith—'The Lord gave, the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord !' A protracted illness in 1866 left the seeds of the disease in her physical system, which, after spending a delightful evening at a school treat and Christmas Tree, where she had deeply enjoyed witnessing the pleasures of the little children, terminated her earthly course. She died without pain, and without even a struggle, in the arms of her husband, as they were returning to their home. God had given her a singularly beautiful soul enshrined in a beautiful physical casket; and as a wife, mother, friend and member of the Church, it may be said of her, 'The memory of the just is blessed!' "

10. Charlotte Potts (1840–1855)
11. Annie Potts (1843–1855)
12. Emma Potts (1847–1855)

The three eldest daughters of Thomas and Charlotte Potts—Emma, Charlotte, and Annie—died of scarlet fever within a fortnight of each other, as noted in a single obituary in the Intellectual Repository.[718] It provides some insight also into the kind of upbringing that was also afforded to their brother, John Faulkner Potts.

> "Died, at Manchester, on the 30th October, in her 9th year, Emma Faulkner, third daughter, and on the 5th of November, in her 15th year, Charlotte Victoria, eldest daughter, and on the 11th of the same month, in her 12th year, Annie Faulkner, second daughter of Mr. Potts, secretary of the Sunday School Union, all of scarlatina[719]. We cannot too deeply and sincerely sympathise with the afflicted parents under this threefold and most severe bereavement. 'What I do though knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter,' were the condescending and consolatory words of Him who for an inscrutable but wise purpose permits the suffering, yet feels the tenderest pity for those whom in love and n mercy he chastises. He who is the alone Faithful and True as promised, and in His own good time will assuredly perform; He will bind up and heal the wounds of the broken in hear. 'For a small moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather three, said the Lord.' Let us note well, and implicitly depend upon His gracious words, then will despair yield to patient endurance, and the calmness of hope animate us to the active performance of those duties which may yet lie in our path, and which the living demand of us, before we too are summoned to our heavenly home.

"The deceased were, from the earliest period of their brief existence, carefully trained by a tender and devoted mother in the principles of obedience, who in her daily conversations with them took especial care to impress upon their opening minds the nearness and reality of the Lord and His kingdom, with the important fact of the ministrations of angels, conveying to them in the simplest form the true idea of the dangerous proximity of evil spirits when the hereditary evils of their fallen natures were called into activity. The doctrine and nature of uses, an their inseparable connection with the love of the neighbour, were most unceasingly inculcated by both parents. The effect of this sedulous and judicious training was, that even as infants they were singularly intelligent, yet preserving, as they grew older, that simplicity of childhood which carries with it its own peculiar charm. The love of justice, and that too rare quality benevolence, were largely developed in their characters and exhibited in their dealings with, and great kindness towards, their playmates. Their young lives were passed, not alone in the practice of such recreations as were suitable to their years, but with a due admixture of those small duties which even children can engage in, to enhance and contribute to the amenities, the cheerfulness, and the requirements of a well regulated home. Towards her last moments, the little Emma appeared to be favoured and much pleased with the visible presence of a youthful angelic spirit, evidently quite unconscious of the heavenly character of her visitant, to whom she spoke in the most familiar terms, thus, in this affecting manner realizing one of the truths she had been so early taught. The perhaps predominating trait in the character of Charlotte was extreme gentleness, and who was remarkable for the affectionate and almost maternal solicitude she ever evinced towards her younger sister and her baby brother. Annie was the last left. In their mutual grief for the loss of two dear ones, her mother explained more fully than hitherto to her not vivid perceptions, the nature of heavenly happiness. She dried her tears and said, she would weep no more for her departed sisters. Possessed of much sweetness, she manifested great energy of character, which made her the child of much promise to her affectionate parents, as well as to kind and observing friends. 'Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it.'"

Generation No. 3

9. John Faulkner[3] Potts (Thomas[2], Edward[1]) was born 04 May 1838 in Manchester, Lancashire, England, and died 15 September 1923 in Bryn Athyn, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania. He married Mary Watson 22 September 1864 in Argyle Square New Jerusalem Church, Battle Bridge (King's Cross), London, England, daughter of Thomas Watson and Mary Johnson. She was born 02 April 1835 in Holborn, London, England, and died 01 April 1929 in Bryn Athyn, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

See Watson Family collateral genealogy (below) for that family's lineage.

Children of John Potts and Mary Watson are:

NOTES

Most of the genealogical data and vital statistics that relate to the family of John Faulkner Potts are derived from family records. Many original documents, including handwritten lists, and original birth and death certificates, are presently in the Archives of the Academy of the New Church, Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania, as part of the John Faulkner Potts family papers.

9. John Faulkner Potts (1838–1923)

Rev. John Faulkner Potts' grave marker gives his birth date as 4 May 1838; a family history gives his date of birth [incorrectly] as 4 May 1840. He was baptized 1 June 1838 by Rev. John Henry Smithson, in the New Jerusalem Church, Peter Street, Manchester, England. [720]

Potts' own summary of important life events note specifically that he went into business on 3 January 1854; to college October 1859; to University of London[721], September 1861 (B.A., 5 November 1863); went to Melbourne, 1 January 1864; and to Glasgow, 3 January 1867. Some credible elaboration is held in the biographical sketch written of him shortly after his death, by Rev. W. H. Alden: [722] Also see Additions & Corrections

> " . . . John was within the powerful influence of the Doctrines from his earliest years, both at home and a church. The effect upon an impressionable and thoughtful mind was to be made evident in his life's work. A photograph of him at the age of sixteen, in the formal dress for grown-ups of that period, reveals a remarkable maturity and seriousness of mind unusual in a boy only halfway through his teens.[723]

> "His father designed him for a silk manufacturer, and he was apprenticed to the craft. It would seem that he did not at first object to this, but cherished from early years the fixed idea that he might some day make money, in order to devote it to the education and support of ministers of the New Church. But as he told his plans to a friend one day, the friend said: 'Why not be a minister

[721] The University of London was founded 1836, "to act as an examining body for its Colleges and other 'approved institutions'", which it did until 1858. As such, it served to monitor and accredit programs of study of its constituent Colleges for a student body that included those who were geographically removed from London. Thereafter the university did continue to "act as an examining body for its constituent Colleges", but at that time "its degrees were made accessible to any qualified candidate in the United Kingdom and students studying by distance learning throughout the world through the External System." It was under these conditions that John Faulkner Potts earned his B.A. from the university. The university continued to grow through the 19th century, and in 1878 it became the first university in the U.K. to admit women to degree-granting programs. In the 1990s, the central responsibilities of the university devolved to the Colleges, and it continues to function as a family of institutions of international renown. John Faulkner Potts' diploma from the University of London is in the Potts family papers, Archives of the Academy of the New Church, Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania. Other than the University's name, date, Chancellor's signature, and the University seal, the entire text reads: "This is to Certify, That John Faulkner Potts obtained the Degree of Bachelor of Arts in this University, after the Two Examinations appointed for the same in the years 1862 and 1863."

> "His course thereafter was not an easy one. For his father, deeply disappointed that his eldest son was not disposed to follow the business career mapped out for him refused him all assistance in securing an education. John persevered, however, and with the very practical assistance of Mr. Edward John Broadfield, supplemented by his own labors, he attended Owens College, Manchester, and received his degree at the University of London. His theological instructors were the Rev. J. H. Smithson, already spoken of, and, later, Dr. Jonathan Bayley, who employed him as a missionary. He always referred with the greatest affection to the influence made upon his mind by the Rev. Samuel Noble, whom he heard as an old man, and by the Rev. O. Prescott-Hiller[724], on whose recommendation he was to succeed to the pastorate of the Cathedral Street Society, Glasgow, which he held for twenty-five years. He was ordained by the Rev. Edward Madeley on October 16, 1866. His first charge was at Melbourne, Derbyshire, which was followed by his pastorate at Glasgow.

John Faulkner Potts' 1864 marriage to Mary Watson in the Argyle Square church[726] was officiated by Rev. O[liver]. Prescott Hiller. An "Album", assembled apparently by J. F. Potts after 1920, includes a leaf written by his father on the day of John and Mary's wedding:[727]

[726] Soon after the Argyle Square church was built in 1843, it was described in The Illustrated London News, as follows ("New Church, Argyle-square", The Illustrated London News, 31 Aug 1844, p. 144):

> "This Church is built for a society of persons who worship the Lord Jesus Christ in conformity with the views of Scripture doctrine presented n the writings of Swedenborg, and who have removed from a small chapel in the City, which they built more than forty years ago. * * *
> "Their new place of worship stands at the south-east corner of Argyle-square, near Battle-bridge, and is a conspicuous object from the New-road–its handsome front being seen on looking up Chesterfield-street. The foundation-stone was laid July 27, 1843; the building was erected during the subsequent part of the year, and the interior finished during the present year. * * * The building is in the Anglo-Norman style of the period of the Conqueror, and exhibits, with the a combination of the refinements and conveniences of the present day, the simplicity and entirety, of the buildings peculiar to that early period. The style has been preserved throughout, even to the most subordinate parts.
> "Most of the buildings that have been erected of late years, in the Anglo-Norman style, have been of the transition period; but this church exhibits a decided exception in this respect; the only trace of the transition period discoverable is on one of the flank walls, where there are twelve windows to the schoolroom, beneath the church, with interlaced arches.
> "The principle features of the entrance front, shown in our engraving, are two towers; about seventy feet high, and the gable of the main building, with a sub-gable; extending over a wide-spreading porch, which reaches from tower to tower. The towers are surmounted by octangular spires, with intersecting angle roofs; the whole of which are covered with stone-coloured molded tiles, laid anglewise, with alternate bands of square tiles. The apex of each tower terminates with a bronze cross. The main gable is surmounted by a stone cross.
> "The front is recessed on stepped corbels, rising from shafts. Within the recess is a wheel-window, and beneath is a series of arched recesses. The gable to the entrance-porch has a pierced cross. The entrance doorway is completely recessed, with indentations containing alternately a column and a chevron moulding surmounted by corresponding archivolts, which, uniting with the archivolts of adjacent windows similarly recessed and decorated, form a triplet embracing the whole space between the towers. The steps are of considerable width, and, in connexion with two perforated stonewalls, which unit them with the towers, add much to the spacious appearance of the entrance."

Bless, Lord, the happy pair,
Tho now, on earth, are join'd
In marriage-hands, to share
One heart, and soul, and mind!
Be thou their Guide to realms of day!
With them abide through all their way!

An additional set of wedding benedictions appears shortly later in the Album, written by William and Emma Mather, brother-in-law and sister of Mary Watson Potts. (Many years later, William Mather would be knighted, the couple then known as Sir William and Lady Mather; see in the Watson Family collateral genealogy.) A verse written by the couple jointly, with appropriate overtones of Swedenborgian doctrine, reads:

To Sister Mary
Sept 22nd—1864

We bless thee Sister dear on this thy bridal morn,
And pray the wedded joys that now upon thee dawn
May deepen & grow stronger as year by year is past,
And lead to love conjugial—a love that aye will last

The marriage stake is happy as two together blend
Their smallest joys & sorrows, and to each other lend
True sympathy & solace, through all life's chequer'd day,
And make their motto ever—"One heart, one mind, one way."

With him thou'st freely chosen for Husband, Guide & Friend,
A fruitful life of Uses we trust thou'lt joyly spend,
And feel as each year passes, a surer, firmer hold
On Him who'll bid thee welcome to His Eternal Fold

[727] The "Album" is described farther below in this biographical sketch of John Faulkner Potts. The original is in the Potts family papers in the Archives of the Academy of the New Church.

Residences of John Faulkner Potts after marriage and prior to emigration to America (from children's birth records and correspondence):

ca. 1865–ca. 1867: Washington Cottage, Ashby Road, Melbourne[728], Derbyshire, England
ca. 1867–ca. 1870: 5 Bloomfield Place, Hillhead Parish[729], Glasgow, Scotland
ca. 1870–ca. 1874: Priory Cottage, Coatskill, Blantyre[730], Scotland
ca. 1874–ca. 1876: 21 Bute Terrace, Queen's Park, Strathbungo[731], Cathcart Parish, Glasgow, Scotland
ca. 1876–ca. 1880: 6 Wendover Crescent, Mount Florida[732], Glasgow, Scotland
ca. 1881–ca. 1890: 5 Eildon Villas[733], Mount Florida, Glasgow, Scotland
1890: 14 Balmoral Crescent, Crosshill[734], Glasgow, Scotland

In the Potts family papers in the Archives of the Academy of the New Church, in Bryn Athyn, there is a well-drawn sketch of a cottage, showing floor plans and an exterior elevation, accompanied by an extensive written description; "It is a very small but snug place", the writer has told the recipient It is very likely a place in Derbyshire, as there also is a page of diagrams of geological strata "From Farey's Agricultural Survey of Derbysh."[735] This very well could be a depiction of Washington Cottage, which was the first home of John

[728] Melbourne is first noted in records in 1086, and the parish church dates to the late 11th or early 12th century. It is a small market-gardening town in South Derbyshire, about eight miles south of Derby and two miles from the River Trent. During the 19th century it was a center for framework knitting and boot and shoe manufacture. (>>Wikipedia informational website, http://en.wikipedia.org; accessed 16 Aug 2006; from the Melbourne city website, http://www.melbourne-uk.com.)

[729] Hillhead is a residential-commercial area of Glasgow, originally the property of the Gibsons of Hillhead. The area was enveloped by the growth of Glasgow during the later part of the 19th century, and in 1891 was administratively taken over by Glasgow. In the area is the University of Glasgow. (>>Wikipedia informational website, http://en.wikipedia.org; accessed 16 Aug 2006).

[730] Blantyre, South Lanarkshire, Scotland, is on the River Clyde, 8 miles southeast of Glasgow. High Blantyre originated from an abbey here in the 13th century and was chartered as a burgh of barony in 1598. In 1785, with the development of water power and a cotton mill, Low Blantyre was built to house the mill workers. In the 1800s Low Blantyre expanded further as coal mining developed. The explorer, David Livingstone, was born in 1813 in the mill tenements of Low Blantyre.

[731] Strathbungo was an outlying district of Glasgow, which became a fashionable residential area, and by 1894 rents had dramatically increased because of it (Andrew Aird, Glimpses of Old Glasgow, Aird and Coghill, Glasgow, 1894, p. 114). Queen's Park is one of the oldest in the city of Glasgow, embracing some 148 acres two miles south of the center of Glasgow. It was named in honor of Mary, Queen of Scots, whose forces were defeated here in the Battle of Langside in 1568 ("Queen's Park", informational website http://www.geo.ed.ac.uk./scotgaz/features/featurefirst1380.html; accessed 16 Aug 2006).

[732] "For a long series of years there stood in Mount Florida only one dwelling. * * * This beautiful district became popular fifteen years ago [ca. 1880], and after the completion of the Cathcart Railway gradually grew in favour, until it is now [1894] a populous locality, with many stately residences on hill and dale. Eildon Villas and a fine row of handsome dwellings on the western side of Cathcart Road, looking both southward and northward, lend dignity to this suburb." (Andrew Aird, Glimpses of Old Glasgow, Aird and Coghill, Glasgow, 1894, p. 114.)

[733] Eildon Villas was prior to the 1940s renamed Cathkinview Road, S. 2 (informational website http://www.glasgowguide.co.uk/info-streetschanged1.html; accessed Aug 2006). In 1982, at least one of the Eildon Villas, a "derelict 3 storey villa above railway line", was razed by the railway board, ruining the vista of Eildon Villas (as seen on website http://www.personal.dundee.ac.uk/~hfcampbe/villa3.htm; accessed 16 Aug 2006).

[734] "Crosshill is a new district. Little more than 100 years ago [late 1700s] it was almost without a tenement; only a few farmhouses were to be seen here and there. No one who walked over its grassy fields could have dreamed that it would be the lively place it is now [1894]. But changes came. The pleasant 'parks' soon were covered with dwelling-houses. * * * Attractive buildings were reared and inhabited, and the population multiplied." (Center and Bottom) The Potts family resided in several places in Scotland, prior to emigrating to America. At center is Strathbungo, in Glasgow, as it appeared in the 1880s; the Pottses lived in Strathbungo ca. 1874–ca. 1876. They then removed to Mount Florida, in Glasgow, which is illustrated at bottom in a postcard from 1904; the Pottses lived in Mount Florida ca. 1876–ca. 1890.

The same collection holds a sketch of a church, showing its appearance from a road between Derby and Melbourne marketplace; it is accompanied by a floorplan, too.

While he was in Glasgow, Rev. Potts was affiliated with the New Jerusalem Church at 61 Cathedral Street.

First Voyage to America

In Spring 1879, Rev. Potts exchanged pulpits for three months with Rev. F. H. Hemperley of the New Church Society in Providence, Rhode Island. This was not met with enthusiasm by his father-in-law, Thomas Watson, as he stated in a letter to John and Mary Potts on 16 January 1879:[736]

> "I am very sorry to find that you John are still entertaining the intention of going to America, because I think if you are to be at the expence of it you are not doing your duty to your Wife & family—surely you cannot spend so much money without great inconvenience—Then again is it wise to leave your Society—suppose some other minister is preferred where would your means of living be? I mention these prominent reasons. You must know whether they are valid or not
> "But if you do go then perhaps the least you can do will be to place dear Mary & the children somewhere in comfortable quarters If they come to London we will do our best to get them housed and look after them."

On 18 April 1879, Rev. Potts left Glasgow aboard the S.S. Circassia.[737] On 28 April, while aboard ship, he wrote the first of twenty-five "letters"—essays actually—that recounted his trip to America and his activities as he traveled and preached. Some of these letters were published in advance of his return to Glasgow, appearing in Morning Light; the remainder upon his return. The set was collected and published in book form in 1880 as Letters From America.[738] During the voyage home aboard the S.S. Bolivia[739], Rev. Potts noted sighting the S.S. State of Georgia at sea during a clear day on an otherwise rainy and foggy voyage that led to his uneasiness, and he commented that her sister ship, S.S. State of Virginia "had been wrecked a few days before a little to the northward of that very spot".[740] The S.S. State of Georgia was herself lost nearly twenty years later, when on 17 February 1897 she was last seen in a field of ice.[741] Although Potts always sailed aboard an Anchor Line ship, with good reputation of safety and service, such observations nevertheless expose the perilous nature of sea travel.

In Letters From America, Potts took note of many numerous places, events, and people as he visited places in the northeastern United States. He also made special attention of listing the names of the vessels on which he sailed, even those that were coastal steamers and riverboats. For example, he sailed on the Columbia on the Delaware River in June. By coincidence, this side-wheeler steamboat is illustrated in an

Excerpts from Letters From America Regarding
John Faulkner Potts' First Trans-Atlantic Voyages

The relative scarcity of John Faulkner Potts' Letters From America (mentioned above)[744], collected and published in 1880, might ordinarily demand lengthy examination and quotation. However, its length does preclude such a desirous addition to this genealogy. Instead, selected remarks from his two distinctly different trans-Atlantic voyages, to and from New York, will suffice to provide some flavor of ocean crossings in his day, as well as to record Potts' personal reflections on the voyages. The selected brief quotations here shine a little light on the pervasive religious and moral character of Rev. Potts. More than a travel narrative and report on his ecclesiastical duties in America, his "Letters" also reflect on various New Church doctrines. In the selections below, his reflections result specifically from his experiences at sea. The entire collection of letters does indeed bear reading, if the reader can locate a copy of his book.

Potts begins his letters with an entry about the S.S. Circassia (Captain Robert D. Munro) on her voyage to New York. The first letter was written aboard, "off the coast of America, 28th April 1879". These selections tell some interesting observations by a Victorian gentleman aboard one of the great machines of the day, in which he observes correspondences of the vessel to the lives of men and the work of the New Church:[745]

> "The Anchor Line steamer 'Circassia' is the last built and finest of the fine fleet of steamers of the Barrow Company. These steamers were built by the Duke of Devonshire and his company at Barrow to trade thence to America; but that hope failing them, the whole fleet were handed over to the Anchor Line, and now run from and to Glasgow instead of Barrow. The steamers, however, are merely chartered by the Anchor Line, and still belong to the Barrow Company.
> "The 'Circassia' is built on a new principle, being double-plated over nearly the whole of her sides and bottom. * * * . . . when the winds are abroad and the ocean a wild tumultuous waste of raging and pitiless waters, such as we have had to cross, the principal joy of the passenger is in the strength and safety of his floating home. * * *
> "Under [engineer] Mr. [Archibald] Brolly's guidance we visited the engine-room and saw the ponderous machine of 3500 horsepower in motion. We even penetrated to the stoke-hole, where eighteen furnaces (nine at each end of the boilers) consume sixty tons of coal per diem. This is the great furious heart of the mighty ship. * * * It is a moving mass of huge pieces of iron, fearful to behold, three stories high, that move up and down with a fierce determination impossible to describe. * * * When I stood in that glowing stoke-hole, and in that deafening and fearful engine-room, I thought it was not for nothing that the Lord has commanded us to love each other, for men are indeed deeply indebted to men.
> "As to what I may call the living arrangements of the ship I shall say very little. If the traveller in such a marine palace is not comfortable, it is certain that the fault cannot be found *out*side of him. The passengers may get up in the morning when they like, but as all lights are extinguished every night at eleven o'clock they generally find it desireable to retire to rest a little before that hour. * * *

In fact, the Narragansett grounded and caught fire in shallow water after the collision in fog; she was later towed to port and rebuilt (informational webpage at http://www.wreckhunter.net/datapages/narragansett-dat.htm, accessed 28 Jun 2006).

[745] Letters From America, pp. 1-9.

As there are on board only eighteen first-class passengers, including our two selves[746], we have plenty of room. At the other end of the ship eighteen second-class and three hundred steerage passengers are crowded together.

"No account of this magnificent vessel would be complete which did not contain any reference to her correspondence. For the truth is, she is a huge floating living parable. We landsmen know that a ship corresponds to doctrine, but we must go to sea in one to fully realize the truth and beauty of that fact. The correspondence is so perfect that it can only be accounted for in one way, and that is, that the entity we call a ship is the result of the existence of a prior entity to which it stands in the relation in which the effect stands to its cause. The existence of what we call doctrine is the cause, that of the ship is the effect of that cause. * * * I suppose that the ships of every age represent the doctrines that prevail at that particular time. * * * The doctrines that are abroad in these times are by no means all of them safe ones to voyage in. To a careless or uninstructed eye they may appear much alike, but the storms of life reveal the difference. * * * Our modern doctrines, like the good ship 'Circassia,' make a great deal of unnecessary smoke. What a pity it is to see so splendid a machine as this perpetually belching forth a column of black impurities, thereby constantly defiling her own beauty ! Her sails that ought to be like so many white wings are as dark and dingy as the buildings in Glasgow streets. Her decks, washed beautifully clean every day, are never perfectly clean for two minutes. The pure and unclouded face of heaven is besmirched and blackened. Sometimes the ship's own way ahead is obscured, sometimes she obscures and darkens the path that she has sailed over to all that follow."

Rev. Potts' final letter of his collection includes his departure from America and the return voyage to Scotland. He was unabashedly apprehensive to be aboard the S.S. Bolivia, which was less well built than the Circassia aboard which he had traveled to America; this, together with rainy and foggy weather and some sea-sickness, made his mood melancholy. In his Letters he wrote of this voyage, selections from which are as follows:[747]

"After coming out in the 'Circassia,' I was not at all well pleased to find myself going back on board the 'Bolivia,' which is an older and less favourite vessel. [Heavily ballasted by cargo,] there was consequently very little sea-sickness among the passengers. As for me, I did not get beyond the 'squeamish' stage. I was fortunate in getting a stateroom all to myself.

"The next day [27 July],it was still raining, and in the afternoon the weather became foggy. This is the worst kind of weather at sea. Although the short squalls that blew across the surface of the ocean were favourable to us, coming from behind and driving us faster on our course, we could not see more than a few yards ahead, and consequently never felt comfortable as to what we might at any moment encounter. The captain and all the officers were constantly on the look-out, the ship's dismal whistle was continually sounding, and nothing but drenching fog was to be seen around. * * * [After sighting the S.S. State of Georgia, aforementioned, he commented,] When out in the midst of the ocean, a passing ship is gazed at with unwinking eyes, I can tell you. They are cheap enough when looked at from the land, but when you are in one, and there is nothing else to be seen, except sea and sky, it is quite a different matter." [A couple of days later the fog rolled in again] ". . . and the whistling recommenced. It is very dismal to hear that going on all night. [Two days later] was a day of incessant rain, but the powerful breeze still continued fair, and we slipped along with all our black sails set at a great rate. We had now been at sea a week, and we began to look forward somewhat impatiently, not to say anxiously, to the termination of our voyage.

[On Sunday, 3 August] "There were three other clergymen on board, so I hoped to escape what is always to me rather a disagreeable duty—preaching to Old Church people. I don't mean that I can't do it, on occasion, but they always seems so cold and stupid in comparison with the people I am accustomed to address. Perhaps it isn't altogether a right feeling, and I would never allow it to influence my course of action, but still I can't help having it. It was with much satisfaction, therefore, that I attended the service that was conducted during the afternoon by a Wesleyan clergyman in the saloon. After it was over I ascended to the promenade deck, and began to walk up and down with the feeling that I had discharged all my public duties for the day in a very satisfactory manner. I hadn't been there long, however, before a gentleman whom I had not spoken to before came up to me and asked me whether I felt inclined to preach to the passengers > in the evening. I told him I had not the least inclination of that kind. He then retreated, and I thought I was safe, but n a few minutes up came a deputation from the passengers with a request of a like nature. I then saw that I had a duty to perform, and at once agreed to perform it. Quite a large congregation assembled in the evening from all parts of the ship, including the Methodist clergyman; but the other two reverend gentlemen were conspicuous by their absence. Of course everybody knew that I was a 'Swedenborgian clergyman,' and, in my sermon, I didn't at all conceal my 'Swedenborgian' character, but I heard no complaints. * * *

[747] Letters From America, pp. 294-303.

> [At last at Rothsay Bay and in view of Gourock at night] ". . . I then went forward to the bridge, where the Captain was standing, and asked him to give orders to sound the whistle three times. 'My wife,' said I, 'is over there, and when she hears it she will know of my safe arrival.' 'But she'll be asleep.' 'If you'll sound the whistle, sir, I'll guarantee she'll not be asleep.' 'Which house is it?' 'The very highest one you can see up on the hill there.' The Captain then, with his own hand, gave three prolonged whistles. I could see that the light-coloured venetian blinds in our house were all down, and I watched them. In a very few seconds I saw one of them go up, and then a sheet made its appearance out the window. 'They're waving to you,' says the Captain, looking through his telescope at the monster signals. Yes, I thought, they are, a little, for by this time signals were flying from every window, and the front door besides. He then gave them an answering whistle, and we passed on to our anchorage at the 'Tail of the Bank.'"

At this very time, Mary Potts had received a letter from her father-in-law, Thomas Potts, written 22 July, which with hindsight strikes irony: "I hope by the time you receive this you will have got John home again, and quite set up again in health and spirits".[748] Rev. Potts indeed arrived home in early August, but, as previously noted, they were resolved to move to America. Within a month's time from when Thomas Potts wrote, the entire family of John and Mary Potts would be at sea and nearly to New York, emigrants to America called by the work of the New Church. Mary would never again return to England.

Emigration to America

In 1891, after years of service in the New Church in Scotland, Rev. J. F. Potts moved his family to the New Church enclave that came to be known as Bryn Athyn, just north of Philadelphia. This remarkably sudden change of homeland came to be is explained briefly in the biographical sketch of Rev. Potts, by Rev. W. H. Alden:[749]

> "In 1890, he again crossed the Atlantic, and on this second visit was present at the Academy celebration of the Nineteenth of June at Knight's Hill (Cairnwood, Bryn Athyn). This meeting made a profound impression upon him, and he determined that he would bring his family to America, so that his children might be educated in the Schools of the Academy. Accordingly, in 1891, he brought his family to Philadelphia."

Thus far, no record has been found in U.S. immigration records of an 1890 voyage by Rev. Potts. The statement is probably in error because Rev. Potts' correspondence in early 1891 indicates no such earlier visit, nor in fact even of clear plans to move to America (at least as of April)—and yet in the same letter are interesting contradictory thoughts that reveal some troubling decisions that were to be made. He wrote to W. F. Pendleton in April, acknowledging his selection as a member of the Academy of the New Church in Pennsylvania:[750]

> "I sincerely thank the Council for this signal proof of their confidence, & will now only say that I do not think they will ever regret having shown it. The selection is highly acceptable to me, both as an honour, and as what will lead to the good of the New Church in general & of myself in particular. I shall look forward to being formally introduced as soon as their [sic] is an opportunity.

> "I am seriously thinking of visiting America this summer, in order to attend the Annual Meeting of the General Church, & to take counsel with our friends there in regard to the subject of the General Church here. I shall be glad to hear at what date you think I ought to arrive in America, if I do come, & what programme I ought to follow in order to spend the short time I can spare to the best use. It will be strictly a business journey. I propose to be away from the Concordance about a month altogether."

This certainly does not indicate any plans to move to America to be a part of the Academy. However, in closing the letter he alludes to plans that were afoot to populate the Academy with New Church teachers from amongst the Church people of the United Kingdom—and perhaps himself as well:

> "I shall look forward to that [bicycle] tour with you on wheels. We must not live separated from each other. A bit of salt water must not keep us apart.
> "We are all well. I read the public parts of your letter to the children, who keep up all their interest in you & the Academy. Mr Bostock has put into the heads of some of them to be trained as lady teachers for the A. schools; & it really seems just the right thing to have thought of.[751] But the aforesaid bit of salt water is a much more formidable obstacle in their case. I do not see how that is to be got over. However, if I come to America we can talk it over & see if there is a way."

From Rev. Potts' correspondence with Rev. Pendleton, it is obvious that his feelings toward removing himself and his family to the Academy's sphere of influence, it being ecclesiastically aligned with his own beliefs in the unalterable doctrines of Swedenborg's Writings.[752] In February he had written to Rev. Pendleton, that "Time & distance only draw me nearer to you, & you are growing dearer to me in spite of them." He added, "You are quite right in believing me to be thoroughly with you, that is, with the men of the Academy. That is my internal state, & it is constantly strengthening."[753]

Rev. Potts followed up on his letter of 11 April, barely a month later, writing again to Rev. Pendleton with his travel arrangements for his trip to attend the Conference in June:

> "I am now therefore looking anxiously forward to a happy meeting with you then. I have very serious matters to lay before the Bishop, which I have kept to myself. I also look forward to my formal admission into the Academy at that time."

And shortly before his departure for America in June, he wrote a letter the first indication of the momentous change to come for his family:[754]

> "You proposed that I should attend the meeting of the General Church, but now that there is to be no meeting of it[755], that leaves me without even that formal object in view. As to the Council Meetings [of the Academy], I feel a great delicacy. It seems to imply so much trust in me that I should attend them. And while I feel that so great a trust would not be misplaced, still I think there may be some who are not prepared to repose so much trust in me. This makes me less anxious than I should otherwise have been to be in time for those meetings. But it does not make me less anxious to come & see you all, to talk matters over with you, & to investigate the prospects for the future. Do you not think that it will be best to regard my visit in this light? Especially as (between you & me) it is almost a foregone conclusion that I & my whole family will emigrate to America before very long."

[751] In fact, two of Rev. Potts' daughters, Jane and Lucy, did become teachers in the Academy of the New Church; and Edith became a librarian in the Academy.

[752] In the letter cited in this paragraph, Rev. Potts noted specifically, "I quite agree with & accept your statement of the position of the A[cademy]. as an internal church in relation to the passages in the Writings which speak of Internal Church."

[755] There was a general conference of the New Church in Philadelphia, in May. ("New Jerusalem Church. Opening of the Seventy-first Annual Meeting–The Delegates", The Philadelphia Inquirer, 24 May 1891.)

Rev. Potts did arrive in Philadelphia in June 1891, during which time his life—and his family's whole future as well—was changed by the new calling. The 71st Annual Convention of the New Church in America had been held in Philadelphia on 23–26 May 1891, in the New Jerusalem Church at 22nd and Chestnut Sts. The keynote address was delivered on 23 May by Rev. Chauncey Giles, who spoke on the subject then held in greatest attention by the church: "The Unity of the Church; What It Is Not, What It Is, and How Attained". Portending the schism, The Philadelphia Inquirer reported that on the last day of the conference several ministers resigned to join the Church of the General Advent of the Lord, among whom were Revs. William H. Benade and William F. Pendleton, along with some 200 members.[756] Also see Additions & Corrections

On his third trip to America, Rev. Potts had arrived in New York in June aboard the S.S. City of Rome[757], attended the meeting in Philadelphia, and returned home, departing New York on 11 July aboard the S.S. Furnessia.[758] A few weeks afterward, Rev. Potts and his family emigrated to the U.S., sailing from Glasgow on 13 August, arriving in New York City from Glasgow and Liverpool on 24 August 1891. They sailed aboard the S.S. Anchoria [759]—parents and nine children traveling as Saloon (First Class) passengers, bringing with them 39 pieces of baggage.

A letter written on 1 August 1891 was surely one of many sent to family and friends around this time, but this is the only one of its kind now located, which apparently had been sent to a friend in Pennsylvania (very probably W. F. Pendleton):[760]

"Glasgow, 1 Aug /91

"You will see from the children's letters, my very dear friend, that we sail in the 'Anchoria' of the Anchor Line, from Glasgow, on Aug. 13th, & expect to arrive in Phila. About Aug 24th. So we shall soon have the delight of meeting, with our whole families. We are all well, & write in love to you & yours.

[757] The S.S. City of Rome was a large, iron-hulled, triple-stack ship built in 1881 by the Barrow Shipbuilding Co., Barrow-in-Furness, England. She displaced 8,415 gross tons, was 560 ft long and 52 ft in breadth. She was launched 14 Jun 1881 for the Inman Line, and in 1882 was transferred to the Anchor Line. She was refitted in 1891 to accommodate fewer First Class passengers and a greater number of Third Class or Steerage passengers; although it is not clear whether Rev. Potts sailed aboard during the earlier configuration or the later one. Her last voyage was on 26 Sep 1901, and she was scrapped in Germany in 1902. (>>N. R. P. [758] The S.S. Furnessia was built in 1880 by the Barrow Shipbuilding Co., Barrow-in-Furness, England. She was an iron ship originally with two funnels; two masts were originally rigged for sails. She displaced 5,495 gross tons, was 445 ft long and 45 ft in breadth. She was launched 19 Oct 1880. In 1891 she was refigured to a single funnel and triple expansion engines replaced the 2-cylinder compound engine; but it is not clear whether the refit took place before or after the voyage on which Rev. Potts sailed in her. She made her final voyage on 12 Aug 1911 and was scrapped on 22 Nov at Barrow. [759] The S.S. Anchoria was a single-stack iron ship built in 1875 by Barrow Shipbuilding Co., Barrow-in-Furness, England, for the Barrow Shipping Co. She was intended for the Glasgow-Moville-New York service and in 1887 was fitted with triple expansion engines which drove the single screw. Her three masts were rigged for sails. She displaced 4,168 gross tons, was 408 ft long, 40 ft in breadth; service speed 14 kts. In 1906 she was sold to another British flag owner, then in the same year to the German-flagged Hamburg Amerika Line, who removed her engines and used her as a depot ship and crew hostel. In 1922 she was scrapped in Germany. (>>Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island Foundation, Inc., website, http://www.ellisisland.org; accessed 29 May 2006.)

In June 1891, Rev. John Faulkner Potts travelled to America, when he made arrangements with the Academy of the New Church to join them in Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania. He would return to Scotland in a few weeks to make preparations to move his family permanently to America. His June voyage was aboard the S.S. City of Rome, which is depicted here in two illustrations (upper left and bottom). The two circular insets (above) show scenes aboard the City of Rome taken by Mary L. Thomson [no family relation], in 1889 (from the Elihu Thomson papers, Series XI, American Philosophical Society, Philadelphia). At left is a deck scene, with passengers bundled against the North Atlantic chill; at right is crewman beating on a cook pan, labelled by Mary Thomson, "dinner gong". These no doubt are scenes much like those Rev. Potts experienced during his voyage aboard this ship.

Before the first Christmas the Pottses celebrated in America, Thomas Potts wrote to his daughter-in-law, Mary, with mixed support and bitterness of his son's move to America, and yet hopeful for their return:[761]

> "You were good enough to send me a post card on your arrival at Philadelphia, and of the kind welcome you received, I should just think they would, the Americans are always glad to [sic] of the poor Englishman who has the bad taste to desert his native land, they think he is a goose ready to be plucked, and they will have the first share of his belongings, and when well done he belongs to no body, and is a no body, well dear Mary you must stick up for the old country with all its faults, and as John says keep friends with both sides that when the day comes for you to turn on a homeward path, you will have friends in the old country to welcome you".

Thomas Potts' disappointment seems never to have left him. In 1892 (probably) he wrote to his granddaughter, Jane Potts (spelling and punctuation thus):[762]

> "I thought of writing to your mother but could not find her letter, and in my searching for it I found your nice letter written on board the steamer on the Clide [Clyde] and since then others giving a larger experiance of the World, I am glad to see that America with all its Wonders has not displaced your affections dear [torn paper] England, 'Rule Britannia' [torn paper] I have nothing to say against uncle sam only he is giving to do a little braging now and then Yanky doodle * * * I fear with you that the Chicago Exibition is too far of, I should have enjoyed very much your showing me all the sights."

John Faulkner Potts legally declared his intention to become a U.S. citizen on 19 November 1892, and he became a naturalized U.S. citizen 24 November 1896 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.[763]

However, the wedding photo of daughter Nora and Gilbert Haven Smith was taken in 1907 on the steps of "Stancot", the Potts' newly built family home in Bryn Athyn. Stancot ("stone cottage") was dedicated on 18 August 1895[764] and completed in 1896; today its street address is 2733 Alnwick Road. Before Stancot was built, however,

John Faulkner Potts is indexed in the 1920 census as "John F. Patts", with a suggested alternate spelling of "John B Petto"!

Rev. Potts made a return visit to England in September–November 1905. He returned to New York City aboard the S.S. Campania[766], arriving at Ellis Island on 11 November. During that time, his children, Lucy and Warren, also were in England where they were spending a year traveling and visiting relatives.

One of the most interesting items amongst the papers in the Potts family collection in the Academy of the New Church is a bound "Album" (as is stamped on its spine), which acts mostly as a memento book or visitors' record to the Potts home. Rather than a blank book in which entries were written sequentially, this appears to be a volume of leaves bound at a time later in his life; this is upheld by the fact that Rev. Potts identified or corroborated numerous writers whose work appears in the Album, and the latest date that appears therein is 1920. That the Album was a product of Rev. Potts—or perhaps even a tradition begun by his father—is noticed in a verse written elsewhere by Rev. Potts in 1862, for Mary who was then his fiancée or at least then the woman of his heart. It begins:[767]

> My Mary bids me—so, without delay,
> As Album-writer, lo, I make essay.

The Album is a wonderfully personal record, although, as now bound, peculiarly in random order. The messages are usually of respect and adoration, decidedly pious or reverent to the Lord; other leaves recite lines of verse, some from great poets, but all in some way meaningful to the writer. Some leaves are handwritten conventionally; others are fashioned with calligraphy of various states of perfection; one, by Carrie Lowe, dated in London, 1864, is a passage from St. Mark, in exquisite Old English letters with a fabulously floral artwork framing the page stemming from an illuminated capital. One leaf elsewhere in the volume actually has a border of dried vegetation of some sort glued to the paper. A leaf written on Christmas 1904 by Rev. Potts' son, Samuel Warren Potts, is a recitation of the Lord's Prayer. Family members, friends, and guests all contributed leaves as the years passed—clearly some were prepared in advance—both in Scotland and in Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania. Some writers selected Bible passages; most were original. Some were concise, others wordy, with their salutations passing to second and third leaves. Most are dated, with the range of dates between 1852 and 1920; but as noted, the arrangement of leaves is seemingly random. The signers are identified either by having their names re-inked to be made more clear, or added there, by Rev. Potts so as to identify the writer. He did this even of his own, one of which happens to be the oldest item in the Album, "To a Young Lady", a verse selected from Cowper, which Potts then signed, "J. F. Potts. 1852." In turn, he signed in full and dated, "John Faulkner Potts. (signed June 7, 1904[)]"; and in turn still, he inked over his original 1852 inscription, which was in pencil, to make it clear again. Many family members contributed leaves that are included in the Album. They include his wife's family, Watsons, as well as John and Mary Potts' own children.

The flyleaf of the "Album" begins with the simple notation, "Mary Watson Manchester 1862"; notably this is before her marriage to Rev. Potts. The first leaf is a handsomely written verse from Mary's father, "Nothing

Her maiden voyage was on 23 Apr 1893, and she set a trans-Atlantic speed record on her return to Liverpool (5 days, 17 hours, 27 minutes). She was a two-funnel, twin-screw ship. She was sold for scrap in 1914, but in turn was reacquired by the British Admiralty and converted into an early seaplane carrier during three conversions during 1915-1916. She was used only for training due to machinery problems. During a gale on 5 Nov 1918 she dragged her anchors, collided with several ships, and sank. The hull may have been salvaged for scrap. Rev. John Faulkner Potts was eulogized at his funeral by Bishop N. D. Pendleton, who began,

> ". . . in our minds we count him as belonging to that past generation of distinguished men who gave the church to us in our youth, and to whom we owe the deepest possible debt of gratitude; to whom we look back with that love and reverence which characterize sons who acknowledge spiritual fathers, and who would, in so far as possible, make fruitful their instructions by carrying forward their works and emulating their deeds.
> "I say that in our minds we see him as one of the leading figures belonging to the church of our youth and young manhood, and this, because he spent the latter years of his life as if in retreat, removed from the active affairs of the church, in quiet and almost cloistral studies."[768]

His diary[769] from this time (1907-1919) provides little help in imagining a cloistered life of study—often one single-line comment per day, and at that, not every day. It includes personal notes and bare notices of weather, house repairs, visits by family or to friends, and reports of health and homoeopathic treatments for various ailments, usually noticed as heart trouble, rheumatism, coughs and different symptoms of colds and bronchitis. Indeed, Rev. Potts battled against illnesses for a long time. He noted in correspondence in 1891, "I have a battle all the time to keep well, & I know all the dangers . . . ."[770] He had eliminated tea and coffee from his regular diet—"they are 'p[o]isen' to me; far worse than the alcoholic kind", but he entertained physical fitness, too—"Yes, I keep up my cycling. It is hard work to be faithful to it, but on the whole I am pretty good." He was seemingly perpetually plagued by respiratory symptoms in his elder years, to which testimony is given in his diary. But even in 1912, he wrote to warn that he might decline an invitation tendered to attend the Pittsburgh District Assembly of the General Convention (as he was also a member of that sect of the New Church, as noted elsewhere herein):

> ". . . I am afraid that I can at present give only a qualified acceptance of your invitation, for the fact is that I have just returned from two & a half months' stay at our farm in Vermont quite a sick man, being troubled with an obstinate cold on the chest & an accompanying cough that wd [sic] make me an unpleasant visitor as well as be quite a dangerous experiment."[771]

He included some eccentric information in his diary, but which likewise seems to record an alarming decline in health. For example, in addition to his general comments on health problems, he kept intermittent track of his weight:

"On Jan. 16, 1895, my weight was	180 lbs.
"In Aug. 1903 it was	155 lbs.
" " " 1913 " "	160 "
" " Feb. 1915 in winter clothes	166 "
" 1918	123 " "

He noted only infrequently some newsworthy items, such as the signing of the Armistice concluding the Great War. Perhaps oddly enough, he wrote very few observations of a spiritual nature; one of them being on 16 January 1914, with no further comment, "Dream of angelic baby girl." In the middle of 1918, his handwriting occasionally becomes larger and coarser, and entries become far less frequent, until they end on 25 April 1919 before the finish of the pages in the volume. His last entry: "Mr. Hoertsch the plumber got

> "His attitude toward men was that of the cultured gentleman of the old school. He was a dignified figure in public speech, a kindly friend to all whom he met personally. Within and without the Church, he was respected and loved. * * * From his father's lips he would quote that 'all good people belong to the New Church.' This remark, to which he ear had been accustomed from childhood, linked to his extreme devotion to the cause of the New Church a kindly feeling a brotherhood toward all good people, wherever he found them." Owl's Head Farm

Probably as the result of his early travels in New England in 1879, Rev. J. F. Potts was attracted to that part of the country, where some time after he immigrated to the U.S. he acquired a farm in Dorset Hollow, Vermont.[774] It is not clear at this time just when he purchased the property, but he corresponded from there by 1899, and it seems that this was at about the time he acquired the property. He called it Owls' Head Farm after the local geographic high point, Owl's Head, which overlooks Dorset Hollow. Today, the property is along Lower Hollow Road, east of Dorset, on the south side of the (presently named) Mettawee River, beneath Owl's Head. It was a retreat for Rev. Potts as well as for members of the family; although, from correspondence that survives it seems that Rev. Potts and Mary infrequently visited there together. At times, one or more of their children would spend time there, too; and it was there that Nora Potts was betrothed to Gilbert Haven Smith.

Little exists now that tells us of the layout of the farm or of life there. What is known is as follows, taken from intermittent correspondence.[775] It seems from these letters that the circumstances of life on the farm were then being established, in late 1899 and early 1900. His notices of Mr. Warren at Glen Farm—who was John Broadfield Warren—seems to indicate that Warren was a neighboring farmer who assisted Rev. Potts in establishing his farm, and with whom he resided for a while, whenever in Dorset, while the Owl's Head Farm was being prepared. By the time that the farm was ready to be occupied by the family in the summer of 1901, many of the Potts children were with their father there—their first visit to the farm—but their mother remained at home.

[774] Dorset Hollow is the stream valley east of Dorset, Vermont. Dorset Village has been a summer haven since the 1800s. While East and North Dorset were "hard-working marble quarry towns", South Dorset "was more of a rural, farming community". Owl's Head is a distinctive secondary peak beneath Green Peak (or Mount Aeolus), the southernmost peak of Dorset Mountain. The population of Dorset had past its peak in 1870 (at 2,195) by the time that Rev. Potts acquired the farm probably in 1899. Marble quarried in this area has been used throughout the northeastern U.S., most notably for the Jefferson Memorial in Washington, D.C. (>>Tyler Resch, Dorset: In the Shadow of the Marble Mountain, Phoenix Publishing, West Kennebunk, Maine, for the Dorset Historical Society, 1989.)

"I keep up a small fire all the day & find wood a very convenient fuel. By putting on a chunk & closing the stove up tight, I can keep the fire for four hours without further attention. I always kindle it as soon as I rise in the morning, & the room is warm in ten minutes, which is very comfortable for dressing. The stove can be opened in front, showing the blaze, but then burns the wood away fast & is apt to make the room too warm in such mild weather as this. However I indulge in my glazing fire often in the evenings. I go to bed about 9, & rise at half past 5, & enjoy a nice reading of the Word and the D.L. & W. by lamplight. As soon as it is daylight I go out & work on the trees, pruning, &c.: at 7.30 we have breakfast, after which I go out again until dinner, at 12. After dinner I lie down for a couple of hours & then sally forth for a final go, so as to have a good appetite for my supper, at 5.30, & after supper I read; or help business with M[r] Tift, until bedtime.

"Please open my lock-up drawer in the study & take out the big paper pocket of 'farm papers', & look through them for a paper written in pencil which is about hay & signed by Tift & me, & send it [to] me at once. It is about sharing the expense of hay if any has to be bought this spring. If it is not there look through the account book in that drawer; it may be between the leaves. I may need it. The small new key opens the drawer. I thought that paper was at the farm in my drawer, but I cannot find it there.

"I think I have found a good man for the farm—Henry Marvin—the one recommended by Burt Harrington. He is well recommended, & I went to see him yesterday. I like the look of him, & he is willing. He comes to see me here this forenoon. His wife has worked here, & the Warrens like her very much. The children are grown up & do not live at home.

"I have let the farm for one year to Henry Marvin, & I believe we have got a very good man. On Thursday, I visited the farm, & found all the Tifts looking very well. They were quite pleasant in their manner to me. The new house is warm & comfortable, but there is still much water in the cellar. The weather is continuously cold, but not extremely so. I have a fire in my bedroom all day,—Johnny comes in to light it about 7. There are fires in all the other downstairs rooms, roaring ones, so that the house is kept warm. * * * I have had a great deal of writing to do the last few days in connection with the letting of the farm . . . . I miss my typewriter. * * * M[r] Warren has given Glen Farm over to Jack[776], & he will live here and manage it so there will be quite a change in the way things go. This is a fine bright morning, temperature 10°, but it has been below zero during the night."

"Yesterday the weather became warmer & I went with M[r] Jones to Manchester to consult a lawyer, M[r] Holden, about some farm business. I had a delightful sleigh drive there & back, the scenery was very fine. The business I went about was settled all right. * * * M[r] Jones lent me a dog-skin coat for the ride, & the fur of it kept me as warm as if I was in bed. * * *

"Some of the business I am having is rather trying to me, but I have kept my peace of mind through all so far, & have not suffered any spiritual trouble, but have been able to know myself on the Lord's love & mercy, so that I have been quite blest internally, & that is almost everything. I do not like worldly business, but I think it is good for me to have to attend to it. It promotes my regeneration, & makes me think more of my neighbour's welfare. So that I can see it to be a great blessing to me although not in the way that most people w[d] think of.

"I am now feeling decidedly better than when I left home. Yesterday was a delightful day & I spent the forenoon at Owls' [sic] Head dividing the calves, corn hay, &c. M[r] Jones helped me & M[r] Marvin was also there. Everything passed off very pleasantly & amicably.

It is such a comfort to have the house all to ourselves—you cannot imagine what a difference it makes. The weather is very warm during the day but quite cool at night. The cows are looking very well. The Marvins are so nice & obliging—a mighty change from the Tifts. Our girls are all very well & are evidently enjoying themselves immensely. Alice & I drove to the village yesterday for provisions in M[r] Marvin's buggy which he offered us. Warren is going to Buffalo before he comes here. I hope you are all safe & well at home.

Stancot

Stancot (Scottish for "stone cottage") is the beautiful, if stern, stone house designed by Rev. J. F. Potts on Alnwick Road in Bryn Athyn. It sits on one acre, mostly hidden today by lush trees and ground vegetation (which as we will see seems to violate the perspective that was intended by Rev. Potts). Its rooms are comfortably small; the large living room hearth, to the left of the front hall, is the largest, perhaps twenty feet in its longest dimension. The original Deed indicates that the land was purchased by John Faulkner Potts from John and Gertrude S. Pitcairn in consideration of $973.00, "Being Lot No. 26 on a plan of lots laid out and surveyed July 26th 1893, by John H. Dye, Civil Engineer and surveyor". The Deed is dated 24 January 1894 and was recorded 10 May 1894 in the Office for Recording of Deeds, Montgomery County. It listed numerous restrictions that today we would recognize as zoning regulations—most notably, "The dwelling house and other structures placed upon said lot shall be in a distinctively rural and not in an urban style"—but an annotation by Potts notes, without explanation, "The whole of these restrictions were removed by a deed executed in October 1896 & recorded at Norristown J.F.P."[777]

By April 1893, the Pottses were already examining potential lots for their new home. He wrote to his wife who then was ill in the city:[778]

> "We have just been up to look at the lots, & have seen many that you did not see at all. Mr Glenn has been giving me some interesting particulars, which I will tell you when I see you. I shall have to come to town on Thursday or Friday on Concordance business, but I need not stay very long."

Even before the Deed was signed, Rev. Potts was at work designing the plans for his new house, and he expected that building would begin soon. He had received an estimate for $3,000, and he expected the cost to rise to $4,000 but would begin building with what he could afford. "I am quite resolved not to borrow a cent," he wrote to Robert M. Glenn.[779] In January 1894, he sent to Glenn his "new sketch plans for our domicile" together with a detailed map of the trees on the property, charging that as many as possible of the trees be spared.[780] Although Potts' "stone cottage" eminently met the criterion of a "distinctively rural" style, apparently there was some consternation about the simplicity of the design that he imagined. He added to his letter transmitting the plans:

> "I have a fear that if these plans are submitted to a professional architect for his modifications, a more pretentious effect will be given than I could endure. As my means are so limited it seems to me that the wisest course is to make no attempt at architectural effect, but to preserve a strictly plain & simple design (not an ugly one). You called my last design 'common place.' I took that as really quite a compliment in these days of extraordinary erections. * * * I should endeavour by the excellence of the materials used & also of the workmanship to make any house of mine respectable in the best sense of the word. And also by the following out of the principle that the external form of a house should grow entirely out of its internal form, which is a form of use.[781] * * * Of course we may make mistakes in the internal form of a house, & fail to carry out the intention to make it a form of use. Here is where I should be glad of the assistance of a good architect; of one who thought only of the uses of a building; or at any rate very little about its look to the eye outside. It is not at all the expense of an architect that I really dread; it is the paying a man to spoil a design. I do grudge that. * * *
> "Of course, my dear Friend, these are very external matters, & I do not desire to make much of them. I care very little where I live, so long as it is in the country. The only reason why I take this special matter seriously is that I feel some responsibility in connection with it. So long as I live in a house built by others I disregard the form of it; but when I come to think of building one myself I feel some concern that it should be like everything else which a Newchurchman does, a part of my religion. It is in the carrying out into act of the principles of the New Church whenever we have an opportunity which makes us real Newchurchmen, & not mere knowledge of those principles.
> " * * * My Wife is in thorough sympathy with what I have said to you, & I speak for her just as much as for myself.

> "I think you will clearly understand that I am not undervaluing beauty in the form of our homes; but that what I am objecting to is essential ugliness & Oldchurchism; & that what I am wanting to get is true beauty, which will be permanent, & an education to all the young of the church who will constantly see it."

However, building was delayed, as he wrote in a letter to Rev. Pendleton in June 1894 that "as we are about to build, I am desirous to save [money] all I can".[782] By April 1895 the house was about ready for occupancy; Rev. Potts wrote again to Glenn, taking note of "the very urgent demands made on my time by the removal into our new house & the preparations necessary for it".[783]

Stancot was dedicated on 18 August 1895 in a reverent affair. The Album assembled by Rev. Potts, from commemorative messages collected during much of his lifetime (as described more fully below), includes the signatures of those who attended, a prominent roster of New Church people, all friends and family:[784]

[785] Mr. and Mrs. Wells presumably are the Potts's neighbors, John A. Wells and Mary Pauline (Starkey) Wells. the Potts's neighbors,

There apparently was a family photograph taken at about this time, showing Rev. and Mrs. Potts and their children at Stancot. Rhoda (Potts) Cowell wrote to her sister-in-law, Mary Potts, shortly before Christmas 1895: [786]

> "The photo of the house came as a very pleasant surprise, during the week I had said 'I wish John could send me a photo of the house', and then it came. Of course we can make out you & John but we cannot name the girls, the house looks very nice indeed, and I hope you may be long spared to enjoy it alltogether [sic] for a long time. I expect you are quite settled now, but I know that when you depend on 'the master' to make things, you have to wait."

During January 1892–April 1893 at least, Rev. Potts also maintained a city residence at 707 Corinthian Ave., Philadelphia,[787] which was in addition to his home in Huntingdon Valley. It seems that although he used the city home probably while he worked in the city (on church business, surely), so also the family may have used it, too. He wrote from Huntingdon Valley to his wife, thanking her for two letters and welcoming the news that she feels better; "but it is very disappointing about Nora. She seems not to do in the city at all. I really do believe that I should catch the influenza if I returned home just now."[788]

The unmarried daughters of John and Mary Potts remained at Stancot after their parents' deaths in the 1920s.

Ecclesiastic Work and Doctrinal Beliefs

Little is recorded, at least in the family records, of Rev. J. F. Potts' church work while he remained in the United Kingdom. His work did take him to France at one time—just when is not certain—as testified by a letter dated only "Monday evening", which he wrote to his family from France. As the only such record, as well as one that documents his first (only?) trip to France, it is interesting to reproduce it here:[789]

We had to wait outside an hour, then we steamed into the harbour & I landed in France for the first time The sun was shining brightly & this town of Dieppe looked very pretty. I walked through the streets a little to look about me & then I marched into this hotel, said [']Bonjour' to the landlady, & then 'une chambre a coucher si'l vous plait'. That was all I said—for a beginning with French. Of course she knew what I meant & told a man to shew me this room in which I am now writing. To that is all that has [illegible] to me so far. I must now go down to see about having some dinner.

[787] The Corinthian Avenue address was determined from return addresses in correspondence found in the Potts family papers, Archives of the Academy of the New Church. The house, still (2006) a single-family row home, is directly across the street from the now-historic Eastern State Penitentiary. Coincidentally, some decades later, Herbert Smith (No. 38 in the Sevil Family collateral genealogy, farther above) would be the warden of this penitentiary.

The London, Brighton & South Coast Railway likewise operated a paddle steamer, Normandy. It is not clear whether either of this ships may have been the Normandy on which J. F. Potts sailed to France.

Unfortunately, the nature of Rev. Potts' work in France is not known at this time; nor is there ample evidence of other work he may have done in the service of the New Church on the Continent.

Rev. Potts' ecclesiastical work in America came upon an eventful time of change in the New Church. In America, the General Convention suffered a schism in the 1890s, which separated the "General Church" from the "General Convention". It is not the purpose of the present genealogy to review the history of the schism, but suffice it to say that it began certainly by the time of the General Conference of the New Church in 1890, in London. Rev. Potts was on the side of those who saw change in the church as contrary to the Writings of Swedenborg. A lengthy letter from Potts to Rev. W. F. Pendleton, then Vice-Chancellor of the Academy of the New Church in Bryn Athyn and Bishop of its priesthood, reviewed the three-day battle in London; but to summarize succinctly, in Rev. Potts' own words, "the orders I gave to my faithful warriors were, 'Let us not yield to them one jot.'"[791] The separation was expected, as was alluded to in correspondence Rev. Potts had in early 1891 with Rev. Pendleton: [792]

> "There will be a separation sooner or later. Some will not go with us into the General Church. I do not know what the actual upshot will be, but I am going ahead, one step at a time. * * *
> "Of course the separation of Mr Tilson, myself, & the other actual members of Conference who sympathise with us, FROM the Conference, is a settled thing. We are now making the final preparations for it.
> "I agree with you that it seems best for the Academy & the External Church to be two perfectly distinct bodies. There might be trouble from jealousy otherwise. Thus loss of freedom. So it seems to me at present."

Whereas the church government of the General Convention was congregational, with no episcopal seat, the General Church did institute an episcopal system of governance based in Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania. The General Convention holds that the writings of Emanuel Swedenborg were "inspired", but that they reflect personal and cultural biases; the General Church holds that the writings were authoritative and equivalent to those of the Bible. Educationally, the General Convention instruct youth through Sunday schools and church camps; the General Church instituted a traditional, structured school system from elementary school to college. In the present genealogy, one will see these differences reflected in the recollections of family members: those of the General Convention, like Rev. John Edward Smith and some of the Spamer relations from Baltimore, note Sunday schools, church camps, and similar religious convocations; whereas recollections by and about family members of the General Church, like Rev. John Faulkner Potts and Rev. Gilbert Smith, frequently note the Academy of the New Church in Bryn Athyn, both its traditional school and its theological school. The positions and practices of the General Convention and the General Church now extend into modern concerns, taking divergent stands on such matters as the ordination of women, social and political activism, open preferences of sexuality in its members and clergy, and abortion. Several branches of the Smith and Spamer families fell into either the General Church or the General Convention, although mostly they aligned themselves with their traditional churches. John Faulkner Potts' memoirist, Rev. W. H. Alden, summarized Potts' enthusiasm for reinstating good relations between the two principal factions; Rev. Potts even became a member of the General Convention, and in April 1908 he served for them as an administrative missionary in California. As outlined by Rev. Alden:[794]

> "Mr. Potts was an early member of the old Academy, and all of his children became members of the General Church. His own social relations were largely with the members of this body. For a time he indulged the hope of securing more friendly relations between the General Convention and the General Church. This seemed very near in the years 1897 to 1901. When the Convention which met at Cleveland in 1898 decided to send messengers to the General Assembly shortly to be held at Glenview, Ill., Mr. Potts declared that the body to which the Convention was invited to send delegates was a new body, within which was a new spirit; the ice had worn very thin, and it only required one beam of heavenly sunshine to melt it away altogether. These remarks were applauded in Convention, and the President, the Rev. John Worcester, expressed the fervent hope that there might be a good, full breath of that heavenly sunshine.
> "At the ensuing General Assembly, Mr. Potts expressed his great pleasure in attending meetings of both the general bodies in the same year. The two ideas which most impressed him were, that they were both excellent and promising bodies of the Church, and that they were distinctly different in genius, so much so that neither could perform the use of the other. From the spiritual aspect, the Church organization was to be regarded as a Grand Man,—all the individuals being as organs, each in his proper place. To amalgamate the two bodies would be to destroy the uses of both; it would be like attempting to amalgamate the heart and lungs, which would destroy the uses of both. The other idea which had pressed upon him was that there was no spirit of rivalry between the two bodies; and it was his observation, in meeting members of the General Convention, that hostile and unkind feelings had disappeared.
> "In 1904, Mr. Potts applied for membership in the General Convention, and was received and enrolled among the General Pastors.[795] His activities, however, were slight. He attended a few of the annual meetings of the Convention, and addressed the Pennsylvania Association on several occasions. In 1908, he undertook a mission to the Pacific Coast, where he organized the California Association, and became its President." Also see Additions & Corrections

During the 1908 Pacific Coast trip, Rev. Potts passed through Portland, Oregon, where presumably he also visited his brother, Rawlinson [No. 14 of this Potts Family collateral genealogy], in nearby Tualatin. In Portland, Rev. Potts preached to the Portland Society of the New Church.[796]

Rev. Potts' membership in both the General Church and General Convention raises a question about his philosophy of New Church doctrine. The answer is simple, really, unencumbered by the sectional biases that are seen in the ecclesiastical differences between the sects; he looked only toward the Light as he saw it, and he hoped it would be enough to mend the rift. This is best summarized by the reflections on Rev. Potts made by Rev. W. H. Alden; he quoted from Potts' own works:[797]

---

[794] W. H. Alden, "John Faulkner Potts. A Biographical Sketch", New Church Life, Vol. 43, no. 11 (Nov 1923), pp. 664-665.

[795] He was in fact Senior General Pastor in General Convention (as noted at least in a letter, J. F. Potts to S. S. Lindsay, 14 Oct 1912; Potts family papers, Archives of the Academy of the New Church).

[796] "Rev. John Faulkner Potts, a well-known author and minister of the Swedenburg [sic] Church, will arrive in Portland tomorrow. He will preach before the Portland Swedenborgian Church Society, in the Knights of the Pythias hall, Sunday morning at 11 o'clock." (Morning Oregonian, 7 May 1908). Another announcement appeared three days later: "Portland New Church Society, Swedenborgian–Rev. John Faulkner Potts, of Philadelphia, will preach at 11 A. M., in Knights of Pythias Hall, Eleventh and Alder streets." ("Sunday in Portland Churches", Morning Oregonian, 10 May 1908).

[797] W. H. Alden, "John Faulkner Potts. A Biographical Sketch", New Church Life, Vol. 43, no. 11 (Nov 1923), pp. 668-673.

> "When you open the Writings of the New Church, and read them, it is not long before you feel a blast from heaven itself." [798]
> "It is in the Writings that the whole doctrine relating to the Word is revealed . . . . Without the Writings, we should know nothing about the Word that is worth knowing."[799]

In the 1890s, during the crucial time of separation and the attempts to mend the tear between the General Church and the General Convention of the New Church,

> ". . . Mr. Potts not alone voiced . . . his loyalty to the Doctrine, but, at a critical period in the history of the New Church, he stood for it at the risk of obloquy and the loss of reputation and influence in the Church. In response to insistence upon a position which seemed to him to abrogate the Doctrine, he answered: 'I will never allow myself to be identified with the repudiation or invalidation in the smallest degree of any point in the Doctrine of the New Jerusalem. For that Doctrine I have lived, and for that Doctrine I will, if necessary, die.'"[800]

Of course, Rev. Potts was foremost a General Churchman, but his acceptance, even if only moderately, into the General Convention reveals the true underpinnings of his practice of the doctrines of the Word and of the Writings of Swedenborg. He sought to close the rift, less by secular arbitration than by Divine intervention through useful work by men, restoring the New Church as it was conceived. The separation of the church factions was not limited to America; Rev. Potts experienced it in Scotland and England, which in the end inspired him to align himself (and his family) with the Academy of the New Church, in Pennsylvania, and its secular doctrine that remained more closely true to the Writings. Two pamphlets written by Rev. Potts while he was still in Glasgow are also among his well-known works; both were published in 1889. One is New Churchmen Leaving Their First Love and the Present State of the Christian World as the Cause of It; the other, How Can We Obtain the Religion of the New Jerusalem?[801] In America, Potts' influence in ministry and education continued even after his death, when these same two pamphlets were selected for reprinting as Two Notable Pamphlets.[802]

[803] John Faulkner Potts (ed.), The Swedenborg Concordance, A Complete Work of Reference to the Theological Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg (Swedenborg Society, London, 1888 [et seq.]). The Concordance was originally distributed in numerous fascicles, bound usually into twelve volumes by the recipients. The wrapper titles read, Concordance to the Theological Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg; by the Rev. John Faulkner Potts, B.A. (with the Swedenborg Society imprint). Not all fascicles were dated. A prospectus, "A Concordance to the Theological Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg", indicated that it was to be published "In Monthly Parts, containing 48 pp., in neat wrapper, price 6d. each."

The Concordance is a prodigious work, now long out of print. A prospectus distributed before its publication outlined in part:

> "The Committee of the Swedenborg Society British and Foreign, have much pleasure in announcing that the great work entitled A Concordance to the Theological Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg, upon which the Rev. John Faulkner Potts, B.A., has been engaged for the last fourteen years, is now ready for publication, and that the Swedenborg Society, confident of a liberal support from the readers of Swedenborg in Europe and America, have resolved to publish it.

productions. It is a word-for-word, idea-for-idea compendium to the collected works of Emanuel Swedenborg, cross-referenced in meticulous detail and annotated with explanations of myriad concepts translated from Swedenborg's original Latin. Occasionally referred to as the Potts Concordance, this monumentally huge production consumed Rev. Potts' attentions to ministerial affairs for decades—indeed, it consumed his health, too. At an annual meeting of the General Convention (probably 1887) took note "that there is reason to fear for the health of the Rev. J. F. Potts, and the consequent interruption of his valuable labor, from over-work in preparing the Concordance for the press, in addition to the duties incumbent upon him as pastor of a society".[804] A resolution was made to collect a fund to relieve Rev. Potts to the duties of the Concordance, but, "On conferring with Mr. Potts it is found quite impracticable for him to give up the duties of his pastorship; but that the purpose aimed at can be substantially accomplished and at less expense than might have been anticipated, by employing an assistant for him." The promotional tract concluded, "Of the magnitude, and the inestimable importance of the work to which Mr. Potts has devoted himself now for fifteen years without remuneration, so much as already been said that we need not add a word."

In fact, Rev. Potts did not complete the mammoth undertaking represented in the Concordance until 1901, having first begun the work on 4 November 1873. He believed then that the work would take five years and that he would defray the cost of publication himself. Potts himself noted that the first model for the Concordance was to emulate Cruden's Concordance to the Holy Scriptures, which took Potts twelve years to complete.

> "But the compiler then discovered that this form was inadequate, requiring too much time to look up the passages referred to. This was, in Mr. Potts' words, 'a terrible discovery.' And it is a luminous commentary to the character of the man, that he 'summoned up resolution to do the work all over again!' * * *

"The aim and method of the Work as stated in the preface by its compiler, are as follows:

" ' The object of the Concordance is to make the Theological Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg more accessible in all their fullness to every reader and student of them, whether learned or unlearned.

'At present no one can feel sure that he knows or can find everything that is contained in the Writings on any given subject. And even when we are sure of the existence of some passage that we should very much like to find, how often, having none but the existing works of reference to aid us, are we overwhelmed and deterred from making an investigation by the dreary prospect of a search through from forty to fifty volumes of compact matter! A reader's attention may also be arrested by some statement which appears to be at variance with one or more other statements that he has met with elsewhere in the Writings. * * *

'In this Concordance the student will find everything that is said in the Writings about every subject of which they treat, with references to the passages where the various statements are to be found. * * *

'The Concordance to Swedenborg now offered to the Church is the result of between thirteen and fourteen years of labour, and claims to be exhaustive and complete. Every theological work of Swedenborg has been gone over twice, word by word. * * *

'The Concordance will contain about seven thousand articles arranged in the English alphabetical order, and ranging in length from a single line to many pages.' "

Nineteen of the works published by Swedenborg during his lifetime, and eighteen additional works published later, were referenced and analyzed by Potts. In the process, he also provided a new translation into English of those works originally published in Latin, and so also standardized some of the English terms.

> the undertaking, he also found at hand in the Academy Library all the works of reference he needed." [805]

Shortly before Christmas 1889, Rev. Potts in Glasgow wrote—on a typewriter—to G. R. Starkey, Secretary of the General Church of Pennsylvania, commenting on "my investment of the money [$100.00] so kindly voted to me by the General Church of Pennsylvania in a type-writer". He explained further: [806]

> "You may not be aware that I suffer from a kind of cramp or rheumatism in my right arm, which was caused by the enormous amount of close writing I had to do in making the first draft of the Concordance. To write with the pen causes me great suffering, and threatens to result in some much more serious malady[.] Type-writers are ther[e]fore absolute necessaries to me. Without them I should have to do the whole of the Concordance work by dictation, and should require two amanuenses in order to work as rapidly as I do now with the aid of the machines. I have now three typewriters at work."

Indeed, how much more quickly he could have accomplished his job with a computerized word processor! Nonetheless, work continued apace, in Glasgow and again after Potts moved to America, by which time the first fascicles of the Concordance had been published. To this end, Rev. Potts was moved to note in another letter to Starkey in April 1890, by which time he had also been afforded the work of a paid clerk:[807]

> "All the mere clerk's work is now done so far as I am aware, and I have very little hope indeed that a man exists who would be able to render me any further assistance, because the few who could do the work that remains are otherwise fast engaged. When I say that all the clerk's work is done I of course mean that which is outside of the daily labours of my daughter Edith [who at the time was but 17 years of age], as I think you already understand that she affords me very great assistance in that way. It is my own work which would have to be done any an additional assistant. All I can say, therefore, is that I will keep my eyes open, and if a suitable man should offer I will at once let you know on what terms I could secure his services. If a man should turn up who could really do some of my own work on the Concordance I should esteem it a duty to both God and man to do all in my power to employ him, but as I said I have extremely little hope of it, because of the peculiar qualifications necessary, and the great demand which exists for men of such a kind. In my own case it required an apprenticeship of fourteen years labour at concordance making before I was ready to turn out any finished work that would be fit for publication, and it is faulty enough even now."

Shortly before Christmas 1896, he was still hard at work on the Concordance at Stancot. His daughter, Ellen, then served as an assistant to him, for which she received a salary from him. He continued to receive some compensation for his duties from the Swedenborg Society in England (£120 per year), and a varying amount from the General Church ($325 in 1896). At this time, the General Church seemed to wish to reduce their compensation. Potts noted in a letter to Robert M. Glenn, "About two months ago Mr Asplundh told me that the Managing Board of the academy had instructed him to ask me 'whether I could do with less' payment for my work." He continued, with justification addressed to the Board:[808]

> "The Concordance takes my whole strength. Year in & year out I work at it exclusively, without any vacation, & if I take a day off I have to make it up. I usually work a good deal on Sundays, in order to have Monday, or Saturday, or some other week-day, for my sabbath or rest day, because I can labour with my hands on a week-day, which is absolutely necessary to me in order to work off brain-fag & other maladies of the material body. I systematically decline all other work, such as preaching & writing for the New Church periodicals, because, being brain work, it unfits me so far for the work which is properly my own. By taking constant care I can just manage to bring out six Parts a year, which is the amount agreed upon between the S.S. [Swedenborg Society] Committee

Such work as this can only be done well when the brain is clear, & I am obliged to take a great deal of physical exercise to prevent a deterioration of my powers there, in addition to the "Ministers' Sunday" I have referred to above. I find that there must be a balance maintained between the brain & the rest of the body; & that all brain work makes me dull in two or three days. Therefore even my physical labour is really a necessary part of the Concordance work, & although it is often wearisome to me in my now advancing years, I persevere with it for the sake of the one great end & purpose"

The Concordance was completed by 1901. In commemoration of the successful conclusion to Potts' work, the Academy of the New Church in Bryn Athyn that year celebrated "Concordance Day" on Swedenborg's birthday, 29 January. A Menu d'Espirit, or program of events, was produced, which lists celebratory and commemorative events of songs and remarks by the church's leading clergy, including Rev. Potts. Of note is an original production by F. S. Hughes, "To Father Potts", sung to the melody of Maryland.[809] How this was received is not recorded. It is a brief song, superlaudatory; but ironically it addresses Rev. Potts as "Father", when he himself preferred not to be addressed as Father even by his children, asserting that there is only one Father.

As for the Concordance, W. H. Alden's memorial to J. F. Potts discusses it at some length,[810] beginning, "The Swedenborg Concordance is the great work of Mr. Potts' life for which he will forever be held in grateful remembrance," and "Its publication marked an epoch in the development of New Church thought and teaching." The prolific works of Emanuel Swedenborg had for decades confounded students' and ministers' easy access alike to the ideas, concepts, and indeed the words written by Swedenborg. Prior to the huge Concordance, the only comparable guides to Swedenborg's writings were a Latin index published in 1779 (just seven years after Swedenborg's death) and a Dictionary of Correspondences published in 1800. Both were depauperate productions in comparison to the Concordance.

Among Rev. Potts' other works are numerous tracts and pamphlets relating to the New Church and the writings of Swedenborg. A sample of these includes "The End of the World. A Series of Lectures on the Dead Churches of Christendom As Prophetically Depicted in the Apocalypse and now Seen Actually Existing in the World Around Us", which was continued by "The New Age. A Series of Lectures on the Second Coming, the Judgment, and the New Church". In all, these were a collected series of ten lectures published in 1883 by the Swedenborgian publisher, James Speirs, in London, in which Potts expounded on key portions of Swedenborg's writings on the internal meaning of the Scriptures.

He died as an infant. His mother chose a verse, which she wrote down and years later was bound into a commemorative family Album[811] sometime after 1920. A notation of identification is added to the leaf on which this was written, apparently by J. F. Potts: "In memory of Robert Faulkner Potts, Chosen by his Mother, M.P."

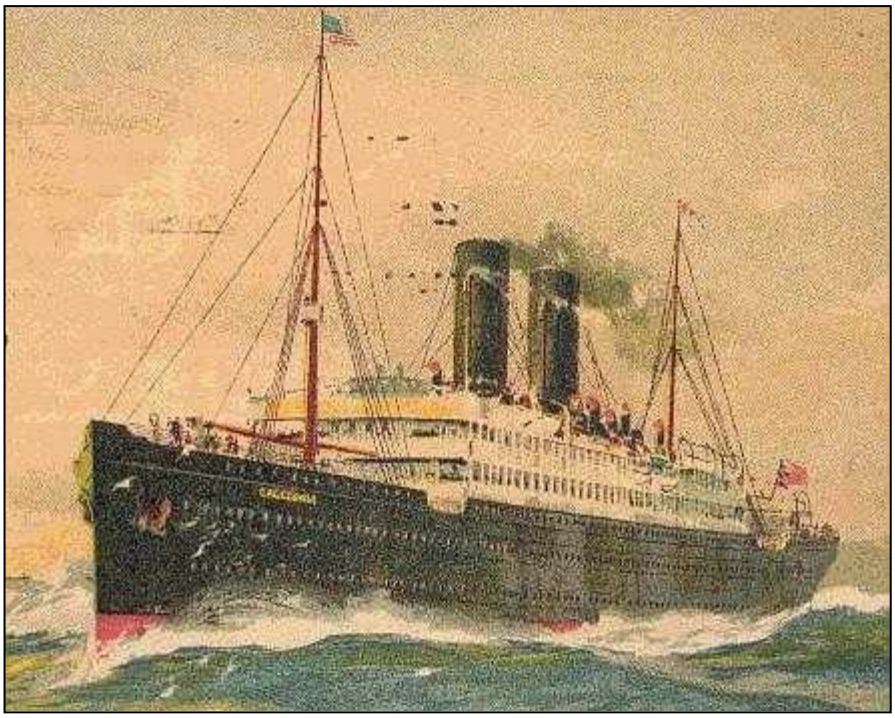
Edith Potts and her sister-in-law, Valerie van der Steen Potts, sailed aboard the S.S. Celtic, arriving in New York in September 1910.

Edith Potts sailed aboard the R.M.S. Antonia, arriving in New York during September 1929.



On 29 July 1905 Lucy Potts and her brother, Warren, departed New York aboard the S.S. Caledonia, built just the year before. They were enroute to a year's stay in England and Scotland.

At the time of the 1900 U.S. census, Edith Potts is listed as "Companion" in the household of John and Pauline Wells, neighbors of the Pottses. The Wells family are also related to the Roses, who are other relations to the Pottses and others.

In September 1929, Edith Potts sailed aboard R.M.S. Antonia [815], in stateroom B104.[816] Nothing more is now known of the circumstances of her voyage.

After her father's death, Edith Potts lived in her father's Vermont home, Owl's Head Farm, in Dorset Hollow. By the will of John Faulkner Potts, the property had been given in equal shares to his nine surviving children. After an unspecified event that may have damaged the home[817], in 1936 she was committed to the Brattleboro Retreat (also known as the Vermont Asylum for the Insane), where she spent the rest of her days.[818] The asylum is at Linden St. (Rt. 30, formerly Asylum St.) and Upper Dummerston Rd. in Brattleboro.[819] Also see Additions & Corrections

Edith Potts is buried in the Bryn Athyn Cemetery, Bryn Athyn, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

20. Annie Faulkner Potts (1873–1924)

She was baptized by Dr. Tafel. Her cemetery marker gives her dates as 1873-1924. John Faulkner Potts' own list of family birthdays[820] lists Annie's birth date as 3 October 1873; other records show 2 October 1874.

She is buried in the Bryn Athyn Cemetery, Bryn Athyn, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

She served on the Cunard Line's London-Canada transatlantic service, and after 1928 in joint service with the Anchor Line. On 27 Sep 1929, on a voyage to Liverpool soon after the voyage on which Edith Potts had sailed, the Antonia collided with the Brio (Norwegian registry), but continued her voyage unimpaired. Author Ernest Hemingway had written at least the title and story ideas for his short story, "Fifty Grand", on stationery from the Antonia (the short story was published in the Atlantic Monthly in 1927). The Antonia saw service during World War II as a troop transport and an armed merchant cruiser; purchased by the Admiralty in 1942 and renamed Wayland was a repair ship. She was scrapped in 1948. 22. Alice Kittie Potts (1876–1931)

Other records give Alice's date of birth as 31 July 1875. Her grave marker gives date of birth as "1875". Her date of birth is listed as 30 July 1877 in the list of Potts family births and deaths in the John Faulkner Potts papers. [821] She was baptized by her father on 20 August 1876 in the New Jerusalem Church, Glasgow.

Alice Potts owned a millinery shop at 3230 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.[822] In the 1900-1930 censuses she is listed as a milliner. She is listed at the Chestnut St. address in the 1923-1935 Philadelphia city directories, at least[823]; her residence is listed in those directories as Bryn Athyn. An undated letter from her gives her residence as 3314 Walnut St.[824], Philadelphia.

On 1 June 1929, shortly after her mother's death, Alice Potts sold the Owl's Head Farm in Dorset, Vermont, to Wallace W. Fahnestock. In 2007, the property was owned by Fred and Judy Taylor.[825]

Alice Potts is buried in the Bryn Athyn Cemetery, Bryn Athyn, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

23. Lucy Emma Potts (1879–1971)

She was baptized at home on 25 March 1879 by Rev. John Presland.[826]

On 29 July 1905, Lucy Potts and her brother, Warren, sailed from New York aboard the S.S. Caledonia[827], beginning a year's visit overseas to their homeland, Scotland and England. During their stay overseas, Lucy kept a diary, which now is in the Archives of the Academy of the New Church.[828] They rented rooms in 374 Camden Rd. during their time in England and Scotland, which they used as a center for their travels and rest. Lucy's diary records her days in a rather matter-of-fact, descriptive way, punctuated with brief historical anecdotes. They visited many family members during their year abroad, and met up with their father when he came from America on church business. Parenthetically, Lucy's diaries take note of going to one or more of the stately homes of her aunt (her mother's sister), Emma Watson Mather. Emma was Lady Mather, wife of Sir William Mather, who was the labor-championing industrialist knighted in 1902 (and later, in 1910, made Privy Counsellor by King George V). Although Lucy describes her pleasant visits with Aunt Emma, there is nary a word of Sir William. (See more about the Mather family in the Watson Family collateral genealogy, below.)

Warren did not always travel with Lucy during their overseas visit. However, Lucy notes in several places in her diary that they both were tutored in French by a woman named Valerie, who must be Valerie van der

Lucy Potts' career was as a teacher in the Academy of the New Church, Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania. Shortly before she returned from her overseas visit in 1906, she wrote from London to Bishop W. F. Pendleton at the Academy of the New Church in Bryn Athyn:[830]

> "After a year of absolute holiday, I feel as if some systematic work in teaching would be most acceptable.
> "Though it has been a rest I think I am more filled to teach than previously. Besides the knowledge one picks up in travel, I think a little course I have taken at the Froebel Institute in London will be of great benefit to me in any work I undertake.
> "I have watched excellent teachers there, and attended lectures, so that my sphere of thought seems wider, still I feel very strongly in favor of a longer course if the opportunity ever presents itself in the future, but perhaps I had best content myself without it at present since the means don't seem to be forthcoming.
> "Should there be a vacancy in any of the Schools of the Academy, I should like to be considered as an applicant to fill it. Of course I'm still a poor disciplinarian with little ones, perhaps with older children who are past the most uncontrollable (for me) stage I might be successful I think.
> "I am rather late in writing but it has taken time to make up my mind. You will excuse my troubling you I hope."

During 1908–1910 about, she was studying at the Teachers College in Columbia University, New York. In February 1910 she wrote from her residence in New York (1230 Amsterdam Ave.) to Bishop W. F. Pendleton at the Academy of the New Church, informing him that she must make a decision regarding her employment as a teacher:[831]

> "When I saw you last I gave you the impression that Easter would be soon enough for me to know whether or not I am wanted to each in Bryn Athyn next winter. Since then I applied to Miss Pratt[832] and have received several notices from her of positions for next winter.
> "Today I saw a lady who is in town for the purpose of securing a new primary teacher. She has an excellent school in Baltimore and offered me a good salary. She says that their primary teachers receive one thousand a year; this of course is attractive at the present time, in view of the expenses of my two years at college. It looks like a good position in all respects, and Miss Pratt said she would advise me to take it. I shall have two weeks in which time to consider before an answer is required. Miss Hamilton, the principal of this school would like to know my decision by the first of March.
> "You see where I stand, do you not Bishop Pendleton? I cannot let an excellent position slip if there is no chance of my teaching in Bryn Athyn. Certain obligations in the shape of debts to my brother force me to consider the financial side.

[829] The S.S. Columbia was a ship of the Anchor Line of Glasgow. She was built by D & W Henderson Ltd, Glasgow, and launched 22 Feb 1902 for Glasgow-New York service. She displaced 8,282 tons, was 485.5 ft long, 56.3 ft in breadth. During World War I she was renamed H.M.S. Columbella. In 1926 she was laid up in the river Clyde and sold to the Byron Line. After just three voyages (Piraeus-New York) she was laid up in 1928 and sold to the National Greek Line; but she never again sailed with passengers. She was scrapped in 1929 in Venice.

> "If you will kindly let me know the official verdict as soon as possible, I shall endeavor to keep the other positions in suspense. I can not I fear keep the one I like best waiting longer than the first of March."

By 4 March, Lucy Potts had her answer from Bishop Pendleton. She wrote in return:[833]

> "It gives me the keenest pleasure to write and accept the position as primary teacher in Bryn Athyn.
> "It was difficult to know which was the right course of action, but now I know without a doubt and I feel very happy about it!"

Here, the eulogy read of her by Bishop George de Charms, in Bryn Athyn on 13 July 1971, will suffice to finish out the outline of her life's work:[834]

> "In 1913 she entered the Normal School of the Academy, and received training under Miss Alice Grant at principal. Having then acquired the necessary education she applied to Bishop W. F. Pendleton for a teaching position, and became a permanent member of the Bryn Athyn Elementary School Faculty. Before that time she had been employed on a part-time basis and had served as a teacher in the seventh grade; but her real forte was with the younger children, and most of her career was devoted to the teaching of the first grade. When I first came to Bryn Athyn, in 1902 [1920?], I was fortunate to be assigned to the seventh grade over which at that time Miss Lucy presided. It was my first experience in any school and I was deeply impressed by Miss Lucy's skill in appealing to the interests of the children, and the quiet way in which she maintained discipline without apparent effort. Later I was intimately associated with her during the years when, as Assistant Pastor of the Bryn Athyn Church, I was in charge of the Religious instruction throughout the grades. She took a leading part in the development of the curriculum, especially in connection with nature study, and the teaching of the Word to the primary grades. She had a keen mind, and she was quick to see the implications of the Writings to the work of education. She was constantly seeking to broaden her knowledge and increase her teaching ability by attending courses in Columbia University and elsewhere. But her primary interest was in the Heavenly Doctrine which she never ceased to delight in studying. She was known for her gentle voice and her firm manner in handling the children under her care. She had a delightful sense of humor and an astonishing memory. She knew her children well. She could recall them individually by name, long years after her retirement, and recite some incident that illustrated their special disposition and character."

Many of Lucy Potts' essays, lectures, and "random notes" on New Church education—nearly all of them handwritten—are in the Archives of the Academy of the New Church. These are: "What is the Ideal School Discipline?", "How to Study", "Memory", "The Educated Man"; "The Teacher"; "Knowledge and Education"; "Modes of Procedure, Principles of Education"; "Education as Gardening"; "The Child Who is Down in his Lessons", "the Use of Teaching", "Individuality", "Foundations", "The Third Day of Creation", "Psychology", "Experiments in Distinctive New Church Education", "Concentration", "Notes for Course in Nature Study", "Random Notes on Order", and "A Dream of Famous Men".

In addition, there is a collection of "Papers for Classes in Academy of the New Church", all for 1928, which include: "Environment—Its Place in Human Development" (that is, environment as "a study of man in relation to the life about him"), "The Dawn of Consciousness", "Secular Aims", "Anatomy of the Brain and Mental Faculties", and "The Teaching on Heredity in the Writings".

Lucy Potts is buried in the Bryn Athyn Cemetery, Bryn Athyn, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

In correspondence to Mary (Watson) Potts, Rhoda Cowell noted that "We also like our new house[837], but it is not worth photo-ing, it is just one of a row, in the usual Manchester style, much larger than Hulton St one, but in no way pretentious . . . ." She added in this letter, "We have started a branch in Manchester of the London Woman's League, I am Sec., we have not done very much yet, but are improving." One additional remark in the letter is of interest, which she says with regard to women seeking advanced education: "We are getting quite used to ladies possessing degrees coming to visit Rosie. I find them very like ordinary mortals."[838]

14. Rawlinson Faulkner Potts (1853–1911)

Family records for Rawlinson Potts indicate his date of birth is 29 October 1854, which differs from the 1853 year given on his cemetery headstone and in a biographical sketch published in 1903 (see below).

At the time of the 1871 England census, when he was 17 years of age, he resided with his parents. He does not appear in the 1881 England census because, as we know now, he was in America. He appears again in the England census, fortuitously in the 1891 census, while he was visiting his family and (as we

A biographical sketch of Rawlinson Potts published in 1903[840] gives his birth as 29 October 1853, in Manchester. He emigrated to America, where he went to Texas, Colorado, California, and Oregon. Around 1891, he returned to England for nine months, there marrying and returning with his wife to Tualatin, Oregon, to continue farming. In April 1900 he entered merchandising and, as of 1902-1903, he was also the postmaster in Tualatin.[841] The complete text of the 1903 biographical sketch is as follows:

> "RAWLINSON F. POTTS, who is filling the position of postmaster of Tualatin, was born October 29, 1853, in Manchester, England. In early life he served an apprenticeship to the dry-goods trade in his native city. He acquired his education in England and remained in that country until twenty-six years of age, when, attracted by the possibilities and opportunities of the new world, he crossed the Atlantic to the United States and took up his abode in Texas. There he followed several pursuits, living in the Lone Star state for three years, after which he removed to Colorado, where he followed mining for one year. He has gone through the experience of being caught in two snow-slides, but fortunately he escaped with his life in both instances. The year 1883 witnessed his arrival in California, where he became connected with agricultural interests, thee following farming for three years. In 1886 he arrived in Tualatin [in Oregon], where he was located for four years, following farming in this portion of the state. On the expiration of that period he returned to his native country and spent nine months in re-visiting the scenes amid which his boyhood and youth were passed, renewing the friendships of his early life. While in his native country he was united in marriage to Miss Eleanor [sic] Birchal. He then returned to Tualatin and resumed farming, which he followed continuously until April, 1900, when he embarked in merchandising, and is to-day one of the successful representatives of commercial life in the town in which he makes his home. He carries a well selected stock of goods and his reasonable prices and honorable dealing [841] Tualatin, Oregon, began in 1853 with Samuel Galbreath's ferry service on the Tualatin River at a village he named Galbreath. The name was changed to Bridgeport when Galbreath built a bridge across the river in 1856. It was not until 1886, however, that Tualatin came into being as a platted town when John Sweek sold a right-of-way through his property for the Portland & Willamette Railway Co. Businesses and population grew once the town became just an hour's train ride from bustling Portland. In 1906, the Oregon Electric Railroad put its Portland-Salem line through Tualatin, creating yet another boom in prosperity and population. By 1910, a four-year high school was established and the first automobiles arrived. The town was incorporated in 1913. The parents have many warm friends in this locality and their own home is noted for its hospitality. He belongs to the Swedenborgian Church and his religious faith is indicated by his upright, honorable life."

Rawlinson Potts emigrated to the U.S. from England aboard the S.S. Ethiopia [845], arriving in New York on 8 September 1879. He passed through the immigration checkpoint at Castle Garden, at the lower tip of Manhattan.

When he returned to England in 1891 (or late in 1890), he met Ellinor Birchal [846], whom he engaged to be married. The news was sent from his father, Thomas Potts, to Thomas's daughter-in-law, Mary Potts:[847]

> "Master Rawlinson has engaged himself to Nelly Birchall, and they are to be married about the 19th or 20th of next month, and to sail for Tualiton [sic] early in September."

Rawlinson Potts became a naturalized U.S. citizen in 1897, in Washington Co., Oregon. In the 1900 U.S. census he is listed as "Rawlin F. Potts". In the 1910 census he is listed as a widower; his given name [842] The Grange (officially, The Order of Patrons of Husbandry) is a national fraternal organization first organized in 1867 in Minnesota. Originally established for the welfare of farmers and rural residents, the organization now embraces agricultural and industrial causes, still with a rural focus. Formerly known as the National Grange, the members are organized into lodges that also participate in and support community affairs. [843] Probably the United Artisans Life Association, of Portland, Oregon, later the United Artisans Association.

[844] The Woodmen of the World was organized in 1890 in Omaha, Nebraska, and through mergers with other fraternal benefit societies became the largest such society in the United States. It organized originally to provide life insurance to its members, and through a system of local lodges the members became involved in community services to those in need. The women's auxiliary group was known as the Woodmen Circle. Today, the Woodmen of the World remains in service, providing disaster relief through a partnership with the American Red Cross. Woodmen's members often have the Woodmen emblem on their grave markers, but although uniformity of the design had been intended, personal preferences and marker manufacturing whims have created a proliferate variation, from emblem designs on flagholders and plaques to tree-shaped monuments. Some variations are also likely due to the creation of newer Woodmen groups from existing ones. (>>"History", Woodmen website, http:// www.woodmen.org; accessed 30 May 2006. [845] The S.S. Ethiopia was registered in Glasgow and was owned by the Anchor Line of Glasgow. She was built by Alexander Stephen & Sons, Glasgow, and launched 12 Aug 1873. She was in the Glasgow-Moville-New York service. She was a single-stack steamship, partly rigged for sail. She displaced 4,004 gross tons, was 400 ft long, 40 ft in breadth. In 1874 she was sold to the Barrow Steamship Company but continued to be operated by the Anchor Line, to which firm she was sold back in 1893. Her last departure from Glasgow for New York was 24 May 1907, after which she was scrapped. Woodrow Wilson, while he was President of Princeton College, sailed aboard the Ethiopia on 30 May 1896 for a visit to Scotland. appears to be written as “Rawlanson”, “Rawlansan”, or “Raulanson” (with one or two l’s), the ambiguity due to the illegibility of the census sheet, which led him also to be misindexed as “Raw Duncan F. Potts”!

It is not entirely clear that Ellinor Birchal Potts ever saw her father again. A letter from Thomas Potts to his daughter-in-law, Mary Watson Potts, takes note of “Mr. Birchal” having arrived in New York, but was dismayed not to have heard anything from John Faulkner Potts, “as Mr. Birchal was looking forward to have a chat with him”. Thomas Potts noted that > “Birchal was on his way to California, and intends to go to see his daughter (Rawlinsons wife and Baby) I do not know what stay he is making he is on business in auditing the accounts of some Estate.”[848]

In January 1971, Rawlinson’s daughter, Dorothy Cheek, wrote to her cousin, Lucy Potts. Her letter noted that she was searching for relatives of her father, and, although she initially had expected failure in this task, she found Lucy through the postmaster at Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania. She had first written to the postmaster, a Mr. Redmile, to whom she inquired of a connection to the Potts family; and he sent her contact information for Lucy Potts. Dorothy’s letter (the one cited here) was a reply to one she had already received from Lucy; the earlier correspondence seems not to survive. Dorothy included a narrative form of genealogy regarding her parents and siblings, which is reproduced as follows:[849] > “Rawlinson was my father. He married Ellinor Birchal, August 31 1891. She was 28, and he was nearly 38. They went directly to Tualatin, Oregon. There were 4 of us children—Vera—July 1892. Tom—Oct 1894 Me (Dorothy) March 1899, and Reginald, Feb. 1901. His birthday was Feb. 7—nearly the same as yours, Lucy.

> “Tom died in 1962—on Vera’s birthday, and Reggie, Christmas day, 1966, of a heart attack.
> “Father had a general store at Tualatin, which was quite a nice business. He and mother separated in 1910, & Father died of a heart attack in December 1911. Mother moved to Palo Alto, California soon after she & Father were divorced, where she lived until 1938, until she died after a lengthy illness. She had a sister Lucy, and a brother, Duncan, neither of whom married, and Mother’s sister Clara died when she was a young woman, also unmarried. So you see, I had no cousins on her side. Father, for some reason, didn’t keep in contact with his family. I think Mother must have spoken of the relatives, though, for I have some knowledge of them—rather vague, tho.
> “I suppose if we hadn’t taken that trip to England, and found Mr. Hilton, the minister at the church in Manchester, all of this wouldn’t have happened. One never knows what one step will lead to, does one?
> “I only wish this had come about years ago, though.”

Rawlinson Potts was buried 10 December 1911 in the Winona Cemetery, Tualatin, Washington Co., Oregon (row 23, lot 125, plot A). Also listed for the same grave site (lot 125, plot F) is one Mabel Potts (May–August 1911), whose relationship is not determined (she died 17 August 1911 in Washington Co., according to the Oregon Death Index). Rawlinson Potts’ grave has a marker denoting him as a member of the Woodmen of the World. There are no other markers in lot 125.

Ellinor (Birchal) Potts (1863–1938)
(wife of Rawlinson Faulkner Potts)
“Nelly”

Her given and maiden names have been spelled variously as “Eleanor” and “Birchall”, in different combinations with “Ellinor” and “Birchal”. The spellings, Ellinor Birchal, as used in this genealogy, are taken on the authority of her daughter, Dorothy.

Ellinor and Rawlinson were divorced in 1910, and she then moved to Palo Alto, California.

NOTES

15. Samuel Warren Potts (1865–1939)
"Warren"

In England, Warren Potts served as an apprentice in the firm of Alley and Maclellan, Engineers, Glasgow, during 1 October 1881–1 October 1886; two years in the Drawing Office, 2½ years in the Pattern Shop, and six months in the Fitting Shop. Thereafter he was a "draughtsman" in the firm.[850] In 1887–1890, at least, he was employed in the Finnieston Engine Works, Glasgow; two years in the Pattern Shop and one year in the Drawing Office.[851] Once he was in America, however, the nature of his work is less clear (see below).

He emigrated to the U.S. with his parents and siblings. According to his U.S. naturalization papers, on 17 July 1890, while in Pennsylvania, he officially declared his intention to become a citizen of the U.S., and he became a naturalized citizen on 26 October 1896 in Hartford, Connecticut, where he then resided.[852] Note that the dates do not correspond to what is known of the family's immigration, in August 1891, where Warren Potts is listed among all nine children arriving with their parents aboard the S.S. Anchoria (see the sketch regarding John Faulkner Potts). The discrepancy in dates has not been resolved, although inferentially the official, legal record of naturalization is correct.

In a letter to Bishop W. F. Pendleton in Bryn Athyn, in 1916, Warren Potts hoped that Bishop Pendleton or another officiating minister would baptize "our little girl" [Florence] during the Thanksgiving Day service.[857] After the death of Valérie Potts, the children did not live with their father; they have not been located in the 1920 or 1930 censuses.

In the 1920 U.S. census, S. Warren Potts is listed as "Warren E. Potts". There is additional information that seems to conflict with that known for S. W. Potts; the person of interest here is listed in the 1920 census as 50 years of age, married, born in England but immigrated to the U.S. in 1901 and naturalized in 1906. Note, however, that the immigration and naturalization dates are both exactly ten years from the documented dates for S. W. Potts; that in 1916 S. W. Potts is known to have resided in Mt. Vernon, New York; and further, the "Warren E." Potts listed in the 1920 census has a listed occupation as an engineer in a factory, which does corroborate more certain information for S. W. Potts in the 1930 census.

In the 1930 census, S. Warren Potts is listed as "Warren S. Potts", there indicated to be 64 years of age, widower having first married at age 44, born in England, immigrated in 1891 and now a naturalized citizen. His occupation is listed as "Laborer" in an industry given as "Engineer" [sic].[858] At this time he lived in the Bronx.

While it seems that we gain a sense for what kinds of work S. Warren Potts undertook while he was in America, it is not altogether clear at what professional level it was or the exact nature of the work conducted by the firm(s) for which he worked.

S. Warren Potts is buried in the Bryn Athyn Cemetery, Bryn Athyn, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

Valérie Clémentine (van der Steen) Potts (–ca. 1919) Also see Additions & Corrections (wife of Samuel Warren Potts)

She was an adopted child, and her maiden name is that of her adoptive parents. The surname has also been given in Potts family records as "Vanderstein". However, the spelling "van der Steen" is taken from the invitation to Valérie's wedding as announced by her adoptive mother, "Madame van der Steen"[859] (her adoptive father may have been deceased at that time). She may have been called familiarly, "Valé", inasmuch as she is referred to by this name in the diary of John Faulkner Potts.[860]

The marriage of Samuel Potts and Valérie van der Steen was officiated by William Frederick Pendleton, Bishop of the General Church of the New Jerusalem; witnesses were Alice K. Potts and John Faulkner Potts.

Valérie died when her youngest child was about three years old. Also see Additions & Corrections

21. Rudolf[4] Potts (John Faulkner[3], Thomas[2], Edward[1]) was born 11 January 1875 in Blantyre, Scotland, and died 1962 in Canada. He married Ella Louisa Stroh 02 July 1903 in Carmel Church, Berlin, Ontario, Canada, daughter of Jacob Stroh and Elizabeth Seiler. She was born 20 February 1875 in Canada, and died 1965.

Child of Rudolf Potts and Ella Stroh is:
35 i. Ronnie[5] Potts, Adopted child.

NOTES

21. Rudolf Potts (1875–1962)
"Rudy"

Rudolf Potts was baptized by his father. He married a Canadian and lived in Kitchener, Ontario. In Canada, he owned, in 1927 at least, the Potts' Pattern and Machine Co. Ltd., dealing in aluminum and brass castings.[862]

In 1900, he resided in Sydney, Cape Briton, Nova Scotia.[863] Also see Additions & Corrections

Ella (Stroh) Potts (1875–1965)
(wife of Rudolf Potts)

A family photograph of "Uncle Rudolf Potts" and his wife, Ella, identifies her there as "Aunt Ella Roschman Potts".

Regarding her family, only her parents are thus far known: Jacob Gaukel Stroh (1848–) and Elizabeth (Seiler) Stroh (1848–18 May 1913). Elizabeth Seiler was born in Waterloo, Ontario.

Jacqueline Ross Kline received correspondence from a Stroh relation, Nancy (Stroh) Dawson, who had been raised in Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania, but is now in London. Nancy Dawson noted that "For many years now I have looked after the library at the Swedenborg Society . . . ."[864]

29. Thomas S.[4] Potts (Rawlinson Faulkner[3], Thomas[2], Edward[1]) was born October 1894 in Oregon, and died 10 July 1962 in Multnomah Co., Oregon. He married Rose L. She was born about 1897 in Oregon.

Child of Thomas Potts and Rose is:
47 i. Harold T.[5] Potts, born about 1925 in Oregon.

NOTES

Occupations of Thomas S. Potts (1894–1962) [No. 29] (from U.S. censuses):
1920: Coffee house miller
1930: Oil company driver

Residences of Thomas S. Potts (from U.S. censuses):
1920: 1485 E. Hoyt St., Portland, Multnomah Co., Oregon
1930: 423 Monroe St., Eugene, Lane Co., Oregon

One "Rose M. Potts" is listed in the Oregon Death Index; she died in Multnomah Co. on 20 February 1968. This could be Rose, wife of Thomas S. Potts.

30. Dorothy[4] Potts (Rawlinson Faulkner[3], Thomas[2], Edward[1]) was born 11 March 1899 in Oregon; died 11 January 1985 in Marion Co., Oregon. She married (1) Oren McDowell in 1917. He died 27 April 1947 in Portland Co., Oregon. She married (2) Monroe Sal Cheek in 1943. He was born 21 August 1891 in Georgia; died 3 February 1973 in Marion Co., Oregon.

Child of Oren McDowell and Dorothy Potts is:
30a i. Oren[5] McDowell, Jr. He was born 12 September 1918 in San Diego Co., California; died 31 October 1968 in Marion Co., Oregon. He married Sylvia.

30. Dorothy (Potts) Cheek (1899–1985)

She divorced Oren McDowell. At the time of her death she resided in Salem, Marion Co., Oregon.

In a letter to Lucy Potts[865] (discussed above under Rawlinson Potts), Dorothy also included brief information about her two marriages and child, the vital statistics for whom are a part of the standard genealogical data given above. She described Monroe's health at more length. Additional data in the present genealogy were derived from public records.

Oren McDowell, Sr. (–1947)
(husband of Dorothy Potts)

Occupations of Oren McDowell, Sr. (from U.S. censuses):
1910: Picker in woolen mill
1920: Butcher in packing plant

Residences of Oren McDowell, Sr. (from U.S. censuses):
1910: 2106 Lee St., Salem, Marion Co., Oregon (with parents)
1920: 766 S. 18th St., Salem, Marion Co., Oregon

At this time, the parents and siblings of Oren McDowell (Sr.) are known only as follows (from 1910 U.S. census):

[865] Dorothy Potts Cheek to Lucy Potts, 9 Jan 1971 (Potts family papers, Archives of the Academy of the New Church).

Henry C.[1] McDowell was born about 1860 in Oregon. He married Sarah O. She was born about 1865 in Oregon.

Children of Henry McDowell and Sarah are:

i. Ralph Leonard[2] McDowell, born about 1891 in Oregon.
ii. Oren C. McDowell, born about 1893 in Oregon; died 27 April 1947 in Portland Co., Oregon.
iii. Henry Clay McDowell, born about 1905 in Oregon.

Notes

At the time of the 1910 U.S. census, Henry C. McDowell was a livestock buyer; he resided at 2106 Lee St., Salem, Marion Co., Oregon.

At the time of the 1910 census, Ralph Leonard McDowell resided with his parents; he was a butcher in a slaughter house.

30a. Oren C. McDowell, Jr. (1918–1968)

He enlisted in the U.S. Army during World War II; enlisted 22 February 1942 in Fort Lewis, Washington. He had had two years of college education.

Monroe Sal Cheek (1891–1973)
(husband of Dorothy Potts)

He had previously been married to Blanche V. She was born about 1918 in Iowa.

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, Monroe Cheek was a partner in a service station; he resided at 745 E St., Salem, Marion Co., Oregon. At the time of his death, he resided in Salem, Marion Co., Oregon.

Generation No. 5

34. Florence Valerie Warren[5] Potts (Samuel Warren[4], John Faulkner[3], Thomas[2], Edward[1]) was born 22 June 1916, and died 14 January 2005. She married Ulrich Schoenberger about 1946. He was born about 1904, and died about 1974.

Children of Florence Potts and Ulrich Schoenberger are:

\+ 48 i. Lisa[6] Schoenberger.
49 ii. Mark Christian Schoenberger.
\+ 50 iii. Hans Ulrich Schoenberger.
51 iv. Fritz Rudolf Schoenberger.

NOTES[866]

34. Florence (Potts) Schoenberger (1916–2005)
"Babs", "Babette"

She was a 5th grade teacher in the Academy of the New Church, Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania. Hans Schoenberger recalled, "She apparently was quite a striking woman and whenever her name was raised around her former students (particularly the male students) there would be a plenty [sic] of commentary on just how beautiful she was."[867]

For most of her married life she resided in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. One address for her was on Ben Hur St., Pittsburgh. At the time of her death, she resided at Cordia Commons, Meadville, Pennsylvania.

49. Mark Schoenberger

As of 2006 he resided in Huntingdon Valley, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

51. Fritz Schoenberger

According to his brother, Hans, in 2005, Fritz was "estranged from the family and we believe he lives somewhere in Southern California." There is a Fritz Schoenberger who currently resides at 1159 6th Ave., San Diego, California. An address for him is also given as 7416 Ben Hur St., Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, which must be the same as the former address noted for his mother (above).

Faulkner Family
Collateral Genealogy
(5 descendants)

The genealogy of the Faulkner family, as it relates to the Potts lineage (above) and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of William Faulkner

Generation No. 1

1. William[1] Faulkner He married Elizabeth.

Children of William Faulkner and Elizabeth are:

+	2	i.	John[2] Faulkner.
	3	ii.	Joshua Wilson Faulkner, born 1780; died about 1820.
	4	iii.	Benjamin Rawlinson Faulkner, born January 1787 in Manchester, Lancashire, England; died 29 October 1849 at 7 Rosa Villas (later Lillie Road), Fulham, London, England.

NOTES

3. Joshua Wilson Faulkner (1780–ca. 1820)

He was baptized 28 February 1783 at St. Ann's Church, Manchester, Lancashire. He was a painter, known mostly for his miniature portraits of military officers.

4. Benjamin Rawlinson Faulkner (1787–1849)

He was baptized 17 January 1787 at St. Ann's Church, Manchester, Lancashire. He was a prominent portrait painter whose works include notables of the early 1800s of England, and whose works today hang in private collections and public galleries. Sir Walter Scott's novels include engravings after portraits by Faulkner.

He also was an accomplished musician and was for a time the organist at the Caledonian Chapel, Hatton Garden.

Residences of Benjamin Rawlinson Faulkner:
Ca. 1816: Hatton Garden, London
1830s–1840s: Newman St., Soho, London
At death: 7 Rosa Villas (later Lillie Road), Fulham, London

A biographical sketch of Benjamin Rawlinson Faulkner appears in the Oxford Dictionary of National Biography.[868] It summarizes, "Painted before the age of photography and without swagger, Faulkner's portraits are usually half or three-quarter lengths, showing the sitter in clerical robes or military uniform or seated at a desk, defining the sitter's claim to fame." And of course as we see, he also indulged in family portraits.

One of B. R. Faulkner's family portraits in fact remains in the family. He painted his niece, Charlotte Anna Faulkner, when she was a young girl, in the early 1840s. Charlotte later married Rev. John Faulkner Potts (see Potts Family collateral genealogy, above). In 2007 this portrait was owned by Nadia [Nadine] Smith [868] L. H. Cust (revised by Sarah Wimbush), "Faulkner, Benjamin Rawlinson" in H. C. G. Matthew and Brian Harrison (eds.), Oxford Dictionary of National Biography; in association with The British Academy: From the Earliest Times to the Year 2000 (Oxford University Press, 2004), Vol. 19, p. 147. The biography likewise appears in earlier editions.

Synnestvedt of Huntingdon Valley, Pennsylvania. On the reverse of this painting is a notation written by Nadine's grandfather, John Faulkner Potts:

> "This picture of my ever dear Mother, Charlotte Anna Faulkner, when a child, was painted by her uncle Benjamin Rawlinson Faulkner, who introduced my father and mother to the doctrines of the New Church, and who was a portrait painter in London. He painted also the portrait of my grandfather John Faulkner, now in the dining room, but my grandfather unfortunately died before his portrait was finished.[869] My mother was born Aug. 15th about the year 1815. John F. Potts".

Generation No. 2

2. John[2] Faulkner (William[1])

Child of John Faulkner is:

\+ 5 i. Charlotte Anna[3] Faulkner, born 15 August 1815 in Manchester, Lancashire, England; died 26 December 1872.

Generation No. 3

5. Charlotte Anna[3] Faulkner (John[2], William[1]) was born 15 August 1815 in Manchester, Lancashire, England, and died 26 December 1872. She married Thomas Potts 23 June 1836 in Manchester Cathedral, Manchester, Lancashire, England, son of Edward Potts and Jane Robinson. He was born 09 August 1811 in Hylton, Durham, England, and died 06 September 1894.

See the Potts genealogy (above) for information on that lineage and the descendants of Thomas and Charlotte (Faulkner) Potts.

End of Faulkner Family collateral genealogy

Watson Family [of England][870]
Collateral Genealogy
(288 descendants)

The genealogy of the Watson family, as it relates to the Potts lineage (above) and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Thomas Watson

Generation No. 1

1. Thomas[1] Watson was from Norwich, Norfolk, England. He married Elizabeth Dewing 17 March 1783 in St. Andrew's, Norwich, Norfolk, England.

Children of Thomas Watson and Elizabeth Dewing are:

2 i. Sophia[2] Watson, born before 20 February 1785.

---

[869] The portrait of John Faulkner may have remained overseas. Its disposition is not known at this time.

[870] There is a lineage of Watsons in Queen Anne's Co., Maryland, who are directly related to the Smiths and who appear elsewhere in this genealogy. The two Watson lineages are not related. Much of the genealogical data relating to the Watson family of England was supplied in 2005 by Alan Misson of London, a Watson descendant.

+ 3 ii. Thomas Watson, born before 18 August 1788, of Norwich, Norfolk, England; died 04 March 1835 in London, England.
4 iii. Robert Watson, born about 1801 in Norwich, Norfolk, England. He married undetermined wife 1823.

NOTES

1. Thomas Watson

Recollections of Lucy Potts, taken down in 1971, include mention of a "Thomas Watson worker of Norwich".

Observations from Alan Misson on the Gerardin connection: "[Thomas Watson of Norwich] must have married a sister of Francis' [Gerardin] wife Mary Dewing so that Thomas Watson Snr. would become Francis Gerardin's nephew. So we are looking for a [Thomas Watson] who married someone called Dewing."[871]

Information received from Misson recovers Thomas Watson's marriage to Elizabeth Dewing. At the time of their marriage,

> "Thomas was living in the parish of St Michael at Thorn, Norwich and Elizabeth was living in St Andrew's parish. Thirteen years later, Mary Dewing married Francis Gerardin at St Luke's, Old Street, London on 29th March 1796. Although I cannot yet prove that Mary and Elizabeth were sisters, the evidence from Rev Dr Bayley's 'New Church Worthies' and the reminiscences of Lucy Potts strongly suggest they were."[872]

2. Sophia Watson (before 20 February 1785–)

She was baptized 20 February 1785 at St. Julian's parish church, Norwich, Norfolk, England.

Information from Alan Misson, June 2006: In the church register for the Brownlow Street and Dudley Court Church, "there is a Sophia Watson baptised as an adult on 16th April 1809", possibly the sister of Thomas Watson (Sr.) who is in the same register. "A Sophia Watson and a John Burley married on 25th September 1811 at St. Anne's Soho, London"; a death certificate for Sophia Burley indicates she died aged 76 in 1862, widow of John Burley, Pewterer Journeyman (the same occupation as that of Thomas Watson Sr.).

4. Robert Watson (ca. 1801–)

At the time of the 1861 England census he resided in Norfolk.

Generation No. 2

3. Thomas[2] Watson (Thomas[1]) was born before 18 August 1788 , of Norwich, Norfolk, England, and died 04 March 1835 in London, England. He married Mary. She was born about 1786, and died 19 December 1834 in London, England.

Children of Thomas Watson and Mary are:
+ 5 i. Thomas[3] Watson, born 25 June 1812 in Holborn, London, Middlesex, England; died 23 September 1879 in London, Middlesex, England.
+ 6 ii. Mary Ann Watson, born 16 April 1814 in Holborn, Middlesex, England; died 1887.
7 iii. Frances Watson, born 27 December 1815; died after January 1835.
8 iv. Susanna Watson, born 02 July 1817.
9 v. Maria Watson, born 17 October 1819; died after January 1835.

[871] Alan Misson to Earle Spamer, 2005. [There is a Dewing family into which Elisabeth Covington Smith (No. 350, see under Earle Covington Smith, No. 215) married. The Dewing branches are not known to be related. –E.E.S.]

[872] Alan Misson to Earle Spamer, Oct 2005.

+	10	vi.	Henry Watson, born 03 March 1822 in Holborn, Middlesex, England.
	11	vii.	Samuel Watson, born 26 August 1824 in Holborn, Middlesex, England.
	12	viii.	Elizabeth Watson, born 11 June 1827.

NOTES

3. Thomas Watson (senior) (before 18 August 1788–1835)

He was baptized 18 August 1788 in St. Julian's parish church, Norwich, Norfolk, England. As an adult, he was baptized into the New Church on 20 September 1807 in the New Jerusalem Church in Brownlow Street and Dudley Court, Holborn, London, England.

Reminiscences taken down by Alice Potts' niece, Alice Gladish, in 1971 include notice of this Thomas Watson as "Thos Watson worker of Norwich".[873] This is corroborated by John Faulkner Potts' own recollection, as noted in genealogical information in the Potts family papers:[874]

> "Thomas Watson, son of Thomas Watson, worker, of Norwich. Went to London when 13. Became apprentice to his uncle M[r] Gerardin, who had been introduced to the New Church doctrines by his relation M[r] Peckitt [sic]. Attended Dudley Court & York St. under M[r] Proud. Was married to Mary Johnson by D[r] Hodson."

Thomas Watson went to London, where he went to work for his uncle, Francis Gerardin, a pewterer. Later he became a partner with Gerardin in the firm of Gerardin–Watson and Co. in Poland Street, near Oxford Street, London. In 1829 the London Post Office Directory lists Gerardin and Watson, Petwerers, 21 Poland Street, Soho. Chapter 27 in New Church Worthies (which chapter is about Thomas Watson junior) notes about Thomas Watson senior that the partners of Gerardin and Watson in Poland Street were Gerardin and his brother-in-law Watson; however, this seems to be in error, and the Watson there was Gerardin's nephew, Thomas (Sr.).[875] In clarification, notes from Alan Misson indicate:

> ". . . in about 1801 Thomas Watson Senior becomes an apprentice to his uncle Francis Gerardin who owns a business specializing in pewter at 21 Poland Street, Soho, London. Later, both Thomas Watson Senior's son Thomas Watson Junior and in turn his son Thomas Gerardin Watson take up the pewter business for some time. Some time around 1811 Thomas Watson Senior marries Mary (unknown) and eight children follow, of which the first three are Thomas Watson Junior born 1812, Mary Ann Watson born 1814 and Frances Watson born 1815."[876]

An obituary for Francis Gerardin appeared in the Intellectual Repository for the New Church.[877]

[877] Intellectual Repository for the New Church (Apr-Jun 1821); transcribed by Alan Misson and sent to Earle Spamer in 2006:

> "On the 9th February last, at his house in Poland Street, London, Mr. Francis Gerardin, in the fifty-third year of his age. Mr. Gerardin was a native of France, and was led to come over here in consequence of the convulsions which agitated that country at the revolution, designing to return when times should become more auspicious: but seeing a prospect of success in this country, and marrying an English wife, he finally settled here. He had been educated in the Roman Catholic religion; but having seen clearly that the clergy of that country made the pretence of religion little else than a cloak for the acquisition of wealth and influence, he became extremely averse to all religious profession; and probably his scepticism would have settled into confirmed infidelity, had not Providence thrown in his way the doctrines of the New Jerusalem Church. So great was his aversion to all profession, that he could not be prevailed upon to pay any attention even to these doctrines, for a considerable time after they were brought into his family: but advantage being taken of the affections excited in his bosom by the loss of a child, and by a serious illness with which he was attacked

[note cont'd →

At the time of his death, Thomas Watson senior resided at 21 Poland St., London. His will was dated 29 January 1835, entered in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury. His obituary indicated that he died of "consumption of the lungs", which had afflicted him for 4-5 months.[878]

Thomas Watson and his wife, Mary, died within a few months of each other in the Winter of 1834-1835. The biographical sketch of Thomas Watson (Jr.) indicates that his parents' death left young Thomas as "the head of a family of five, three of them comparatively young." [879] Thus, some of the children were either old enough to be on their own (as was Thomas Jr.) or they had died young.

After the death of Thomas Watson, a combined obituary for Thomas and Mary Watson appeared in The Intellectual Repository:[880]

> Died, on the 19th of December last [1834], Mrs. Mary Watson, in the 48th year of her age. Less than a month previously, she was active in performing the duties of an affectionate wife, in attendance on her husband, who had some time been suffering from severe illness. Little thoughts were then entertained that she was about to be called away. She had been affected with an asthmatic complaint for some years, but which presented no very formidable aspect; when she was seized with an inflammation about the region of the heart, which carried her off in about a fortnight. She was a highly estimable member of the Cross Street Society. She had scarcely ever known any other religion than that of the New Church, having been introduced to it by friends with whom she lived in early childhood, and having, as she grew up, entered into it herself with warm affection. Though then very young, she was one of the worshippers at the Temple, as it was first called, in Cross Street, at its first erection and opening in the year 1797; and she was one off the most regular attendants on worship there since its restoration to the New Church, and in the places which the Society had occupied in the intervening period; being seldom absent, except when, in the winter, her asthma confined her at home. In all the domestic and social relations, we are assured, by those who knew her best, her conduct was exemplary; and a more satisfactory instance cannot be given of her care in imparting to her children an attachment to the religious principles which she so highly valued herself, than the fact, that as they have grown up, they have taken upon themselves the profession of Christians of the New Jerusalem, with zeal, affection and intelligence.
> On the 4th of March [1835], Mr. Thomas Watson, of Poland Street, London, the husband of the subject of the preceding notice, followed her into eternity, after a brief separation of about ten weeks, in the 47th year of his age. His disorder was consumption of the lungs, which had been actively preying on him for four or five months. He could not be himself, he was induced to listen to the views of the new Church respecting heaven and hell and the life after death: when he was powerfully struck by their reasonableness and simplicity, accompanied as these are with grandeur and sublimity. Continuing his examination, he soon became convinced of the divine origin of the whole: when he testified the sincerity of his conviction by submitting to the ordinance of baptism. He ever since, being a period of about 20 years, continued steadfast in his reception of the doctrines of the New Church, and was a liberal supported of the chief efforts made for their propagation. In business he was active and industrious, by which qualities, and especially by his inflexible integrity, he obtained in an extraordinary degree, the esteem and confidence of all who had dealings with him. In his domestic relations his conduct was exemplary; an the numerous persons under his employ regarded him as a father. Though a man of temperate habits, he had for many years suffered severely from that painful disorder, the gout; the sudden removal of which from the extremities to the vital parts occasioned his death, after a serious illness of only two days. Though his immediate warning was so short, he did not appear to be unprepared for his change. So long as he retained his recollection he repeatedly exclaimed, 'The Lord's will be done.' He afterwards fell into a dozing state, and, expired without a struggle."

restrained from attending his wife's funeral, though he had then been confined to the house for many weeks; nor did he appear to sustain any injury from the effort. He also attended in Cross Street Church on the Sunday following to hear her funeral sermon; but this was the last time he ever was out of doors. But he was not entirely confined to his bed a single day. The evening before he departed, he sat with his family and a friend, and took pleasure in hearing his son read the Service for the Sick from the Liturgy, and some other religious pieces; but early on the following morning, after he had just spoken kindly and placidly with his daughter, he was seized with a fit of coughing, and before he could relieve himself of the fluids which pressed to be discharged, he expired. His mind at times wandered as he drew near his end; and then he always fancied his wife was still present. Sometimes he would call for her, and was with difficulty brought to recollect that she was beyond hearing. "They were lovely and pleasant in their lives, and in their deaths they were not (long) divided." Like her, being from childhood with friends who were attached to the religion of the New Church, he at an early period became affectionately interested in the heavenly doctrines, and studied them with delight; and he always was impressed with the necessity of evincing their influence on the life. This was the constant subject of his admonitions to his children in his last illness; as it was the injunction of their mother, uttered with her last breath. Five young persons, three within the period of nonage and childhood, are now bereaved of both parents; may they all cultivate assiduously the good seed which has been sown in their minds, and thus secure the perpetual protection of their Heavenly Father, who can, and then will, provide better things for them, than were within the control of the parents they have lost!"

Children of Thomas and Mary Watson

All of the Watson children were christened in the New Jerusalem Church, Cross Street, Hatton Garden:

Thomas Watson, 16 August 1812
Mary Ann Watson, 8 May 1814
Frances Watson, 28 January 1816
Susanna Watson, 27 July 1817
Maria Watson, 12 March 1820
Henry Watson, 31 March 1822
Samuel Watson, 26 September 1824
Elizabeth Watson, 29 July 1827

Generation No. 3

5. Thomas[3] Watson (Thomas[2], Thomas[1]) was born 25 June 1812 in Holborn, London, Middlesex, England, and died 23 September 1879 in London, Middlesex, England. He married (1) Mary Johnson 18 June 1834 in St. Andrews parish church, Holborn, London, England, and New Jerusalem Church, Cross St., Hatton Garden, daughter of John Johnson and Blanney [given name]. She was born 25 September 1813, and died 05 November 1845. He married (2) Mary Ann. She was born 1794 in Canterbury, England, and died 25 February 1879.

Children of Thomas Watson and Mary Johnson are:

+	13	i.	Mary[4] Watson, born 02 April 1835 in Holborn, London, England; died 01 April 1929 in Bryn Athyn, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.
+	14	ii.	Thomas Gerardin Watson, born 12 June 1839 in St. James, Westminster; died 14 March 1912.
	15	iii.	Ada Watson, born after 1839.
+	16	iv.	Jesse Henry Watson, born 1841; died after May 1904.
+	17	v.	Emma Jane Watson, born 1843 in St. James, Westminster; died 10 November 1921.
	18	vi.	Kate Watson, born 1845 in St. James, Westminster; died 10 November 1923.

NOTES

5. Thomas Watson (junior) (1812–1879)

He was baptized 16 August 1812 by Dr. Churchill in the New Jerusalem Church, Brownlow Street and Dudley Court, Holborn, London.

Some sources give his place of birth as in London, perhaps an assumption because he spent his entire working life in that city. He is the subject of a separate chapter in New Church Worthies.[881]

Reminiscences taken down by Alice Potts' niece, Alice Gladish, in 1971 include: "Thos Watson son of Thos Watson worker of Norwich went to London when 13 years old became apprentice to his uncle Mr. Gerardin [sic], who had been introduced to the New Church doctrines by his relative Mr. Beckett."[882] Thomas Watson took up his father's trade as a pewterer, at 43 Poland St., Soho, London, at which address the firm was still present when Thomas Watson wrote the (first) codicil to his will, 2 August 1871. His brother, Henry Watson, and his son, Thomas Gerardin Watson, were co-partners in the pewterer's business at 43 Poland St., but around 27 June 1871 the co-partnership was "dissolved by mutual consent", as further indicated in the codicil.

Thomas Watson and Mary Johnson were married in a double-wedding ceremony, with his sister Mary Ann Watson marrying Camp Penn (see No. 6 below). The register was signed in the presence of John and Jane Johnson. At that time weddings could not be solemnized in the New Church so the local parish church was used. In this case St. Andrew's had become the fashionable place to marry for many people in the city.[883] The marriage was solemnized by Rev. S. Noble.[884]

Residences of Thomas Watson (from legal documents):

1855: 4 Highbury Crescent, London
1861: 19 Highbury Crescent, London
1871: 19 Highbury Crescent, London
1879: 42 Warrior Square, St. Leonards, Hastings; and 19 Highbury Crescent, London[885]

In 1855, his son, Thomas Gerardin Watson, noted in correspondence that > "I dare say you often think about the House that Papa has bought. There is some difficulty at present, the Builder not having obtained a license to build from the person to whom the freehold belongs—I hope it will soon be settled or else I expect it will not be ready for us by Midsummer."[886]

It is not clear where this new house was, but it might have been the one at 19 Highbury Crescent, in which the Watsons resided by 1861.

Thomas Watson was buried 29 September 1879 in Kensal Green Cemetery.[887]

Mary (Johnson) Watson (1813–1845)
(wife of Thomas Watson (junior) [No. 5])

Her maiden name and the names of her parents (John and Blanny Johnson) are written on a loose genealogical ledger sheet, by Rev. John Faulkner Potts. Rev. Potts also there wrote,

> "Her father was a relative of the 1st. named Mary Johnson & was introduced to the New Church doctrines by the father of M^{r} Henry Butter. She was born Sep. 25th 1813 & baptized at the New Jerusalem Chapel, Friar St., Doctors' Commons by the Rev. Manoah Libley."[888]

Thomas Watson, Jr. (1812–1879), his second wife, Mary Ann (1794–1879), and his children by his deceased first wife (left to right): Jesse Henry Watson (?) (1841–after May 1904), Mary Watson (1835–1929, later the mother of Nora Potts), Thomas Gerardin Watson (?) (1839–1912), Kate Watson (1845–1923, never married), and Emma Jane Watson (1843–1921, later Lady Mather).

Studio portrait by "T. C. Turner. 3, Cheapside, Between Newgate Stand Paternoster Row".

Potts family reminiscences note that Mary Johnson Watson died when her daughter, Mary, was ten years of age. Another date of death is given as 1 November 1845. Her death certificate indicates that she died of typhus fever; the informant was Robert Watson.

Mary Johnson's mother survived her. The mother was alive at the time when Thomas Watson wrote his will, 21 November 1861; he provides a small inheritance for her, "Mrs Johnson the mother of my first wife".[889]

Mary Ann Watson (1794–1879)
(wife of Thomas Watson (junior) [No. 5])

Her maiden name has not been located. Potts family reminiscences recall that stepdaughter Mary Watson (later Mary Potts) did not like her stepmother and called her only "Mrs. W."

The following notes were received from Allan Misson: [890]

> "In June 1923 Rev William A Presland, a New Church minister in London wrote a memorial notice for Miss Kate Watson, youngest daughter of Thomas and Mary. He said that Thomas Watson, the 'Model Deacon' of Bayley's 'New Church Worthies' had 'sons and daughters who grew up in strong attachment to their Church. The eldest—the late Thomas G. Watson of Southport, and his sisters, Mrs. J. F. Potts and Lady Mather and Miss Kate Watson . . . their cousin on the mother's side, the Rev John Presland'.[891] William Presland and John Presland were brothers and their father Thomas had married a Jane Johnson. The fact that William Presland refers to 'their cousin on the mother's side' strongly suggests that Thomas Watson's wife was indeed Mary Johnson, a sister of Jane."

15. Ada Watson (after 1839–)

She apparently died young, as there is no family information about her and she does not appear in the family photograph taken in 1852.

18. Kate Watson (1845–1923)
"Kittie"

She never married.

6. Mary Ann[3] Watson (Thomas[2], Thomas[1]) was born 16 April 1814 in Holborn, Middlesex, England, and died 1887. She married Camp Penn 18 June 1834 in St. Andrew's parish church, Holborn, London, England, and New Jerusalem Church, Cross St., Hatton Garden, son of John Penn and Ann Jones. He was born 1811 in Northampton, and died 13 February 1896.

[891] Rev. John Presland was a minister of the Argyle Square Church, who published numerous books and tracts of Swedenborgian theology through James Speirs, publisher in London. Included among them is the intriguing title, The Divine Mission of the Printing Press: a sermon delivered at the Argyle Square Church, King's Cross, on Sunday, March 30, 1884, in aid of the Printers' Pension, Almshouse, and Orphan Asylum Corporation (E. W. Allen and James Speirs, London, 1884).

Children of Mary Watson and Camp Penn are:

+	19	i.	Camp[4] Penn, born 1835 in Paddington, Middlesex, England.
	20	ii.	John Denston Penn, born 1837.
+	21	iii.	Mary Ann Penn, born 1838 in London, Middlesex, England; died 1908.
+	22	iv.	Amelia Penn, born 1840; died 1908.
	23	v.	Georgina Penn, born 1843 in Middlesex, England.
	24	vi.	Charlotte Maria Penn, born 1844.
+	25	vii.	Clara Fanny Penn, born 1845; died 1924.
	26	viii.	John Arthur Penn, born 1847.
	27	ix.	Albert Thomas Watson Penn, born 1849; died 1924. He married Zillah.
	28	x.	Bertha Jane Penn, born 1851 in Middlesex, England; died 1931.
+	29	xi.	William Henry Penn, born 1852; died 1928.
	30	xii.	Walter Edward Penn, born 1854; died 1939. He married Kate Wright.
	31	xiii.	Harry Watson Penn, born 1857.

NOTES

Mary Watson (1814–1887) [No. 6] was christened 8 May 1814 in the New Jerusalem Church, Brownlow Street and Dudley Court, Holborn, London.

Camp Penn (1811–1896), husband of Mary Watson, was baptized 18 May 1828 in the New Jerusalem Church, Cross Street, Hatton Garden. He was christened 20 March 1811 in St. Giles, Northampton.

Camp Penn and Mary Watson were married in a double-wedding ceremony, with her brother Thomas Watson (Jr.) marrying Mary Johnson (see above). The register was signed in the presence of John and Jane Johnson. At that time weddings could not be solemnized in the New Church so the local parish church was used. In this case St. Andrew's had become the fashionable place to marry for many people in the city.[892] The marriage was solemnized by Rev. S. Noble.[893]

10. Henry[3] Watson (Thomas[2], Thomas[1]) was born 03 March 1822 in Holborn, Middlesex, England; died after August 1879. He married Jane. She was born 1824; died after August 1879.

Children of Henry Watson and Jane are:

32	i.	Jane M.[4] Watson, born 1850.
33	ii.	Rosalie M. Watson, born 1853.

NOTES

Henry Watson (1822–after August 1879) [No. 10] was christened 31 March 1822 in the New Jerusalem Church, Cross Street, Hatton Garden. Both Henry Watson and his wife, Jane Watson (1824–after 1879), were included in the second codicil to the will of his father, Thomas Watson, dated 26 August 1879.

Generation No. 4

13. Mary[4] Watson (Thomas[3], Thomas[2], Thomas[1]) was born 02 April 1835 in St. Andrews, Holborn, London, England, and died 01 April 1929 in Bryn Athyn, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania. She married John Faulkner Potts 22 September 1864 in Argyle Square New Jerusalem Church, Battle Bridge (King's Cross), London, England, son of Thomas Potts and Charlotte Faulkner. He was born 04 May 1838 in Manchester, Lancashire, England, and died 15 September 1923 in Bryn Athyn, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

14. Thomas Gerardin[4] Watson (Thomas[3], Thomas[2], Thomas[1]) was born 12 June 1839 in St. James, Westminster, and died 14 March 1912. He married Mary Hordern Atkinson 1867.

Child of Thomas Watson and Mary Atkinson is:
\+ 44 i. Mary Atkinson[5] Watson, born 1869.

NOTES

14. Thomas Gerardin Watson (1839–1912)
"Tom"

At the time of the 1861 England census, Thomas Gerardin Watson was a pewterer. He later went into iron manufacturing.

Residences of Thomas Gerardin Watson (from England censuses and correspondence):
1855: 4 Hybury Crescent, [Manchester?]
1861 census: Norfolk (residing with granduncle, Robert Watson)
1911 census: Kersal, 7 Trafalgar Road, Birkdale, Lancashire

In much of the family correspondence seen from Thomas Gerardin Watson by 1895, he gives his address as the Salford Iron Works, Manchester.[894]

In 1855, he noted in correspondence to his sister, Emma,

> "I believe you have heard about my going to Germany with Dr Bailey. He is not going till Midsummer, so I shall see you again before I go. Papa received a letter from Dr Bayley a few days ago, in which he told us that he was coming to London at Easter, & Papa has offered him a bed during his stay. He was also so kind as to send me a ticket for a Concert at Exeter Hall."[895]

Dr. Jonathan Bayley[896] was a minister of the New Church who ran a boarding school originally in Accrington., but had moved to Dresden, Germany. Thomas G. Watson's brother, John Faulkner Watson, also had been instructed at the school. Also a student there was William Mather, whom later would marry Emma Watson.

By 1911, Thomas Gerardin Watson was in failing health, as he alluded in a letter to his sister, Mary Potts:[897]

> "As you know, I am somewhat of an invalid and have to take care of myself and to be taken care of, which is not altogether to my taste. However we have to make the best of these things and should be thankful that we are well as we are. I hope soon to be able to get out of doors again, after confinement to the house of six months."

16. Jesse Henry[4] Watson [Henry Watson] (Thomas[3], Thomas[2], Thomas[1]) was born 1841, and died after May 1904. He married Emily Atkinson. She was born 1843.

Children of Jesse Watson and Emily Atkinson are:

45 i. Emily[5] Watson, born 1872.
46 ii. Harry Watson, born 1874.
47 iii. Florence Watson, born 1879.
48 iv. Gertrude Watson, born 1877.
49 v. Robert William Watson, born 1876.

NOTES

Jesse Henry Watson (1841–after May 1904) [No. 16] was known as Henry Watson. At the time of the 1881 England census, he resided in Manchester. No members of the Jesse Watson family have been located in the 1891 or 1901 English censuses.[898]

In 1904, he wrote a letter[899] to his sister, Mary Potts, in which he indicates that since about three years earlier,

> "I have been enjoying private life having given up Business & I enjoy my Country life and pursuits—I'm one way or another am as fully occupied as ever was in my life—this is the way I take it—to prevent rusting away
> * * *
> "My Boys all in Business together along with Mr Allan and are doing well * * *
> "I have a nice garden of an acre—with a range of vineries 300 feet long, also a Conservatory adjoining House—and I have a useful man to assist me & look after pony trap."

He added, "I hope the [Church] Convention will go off well, & that you will all enjoy the St Louis Exposition". However, there is no known evidence that any of the Potts family visited the exposition, although some might have.

17. Emma Jane[4] Watson (Thomas[3], Thomas[2], Thomas[1]) was born 1843 in St. James, Westminster, London, and died 10 November 1921 in England. She married William Mather 02 September 1863 in the New Christian Church (Swedenborgian), Argyle Square, London, son of William Mather and Amelia Tidswell. He was born 15 July 1838 in John Street, Manchester, Lancashire, England, and died 18 September 1920 at Bramble Hill Lodge, Bramshaw, New Forest, Hampshire, England.

Children of Emma Watson and William Mather are:

\+ 50 i. Alice[5] Mather, died after November 1921.
51 ii. Colin Mather, died before November 1921.
\+ 52 iii. Dorothy Christine Mather, died after November 1921.
\+ 53 iv. Florence Mary Mather, died after November 1921.
\+ 54 v. Marjorie Edith Mather, died after November 1921.
55 vi. Norman Watson Mather, died before November 1921.
56 vii. Grace Emma Mather, born about 1876; died 11 June 1893 in Fontainebleau, France.

Amelia Tidswell Mather, mother of Sir William Mather

William Mather, father of Sir William Mather

\+ 58 ix. Loris Emerson Mather, born 1886 in Higher Broughton; died 16 April 1976.

NOTES

The Mather family comprises a dynasty of successful entrepreneurs and captains of industry, first in England during the early years of the Industrial Revolution in the 19th century, and by the early 20th century on an international stage. This history traces that of the firm of Mather and Platt Ltd., which while it no longer exists in its original Manchester, is diversified now as a multinational corporation with other ownings. From more humble beginnings in the manufacture of fire-sprinkler devices, the firm now includes such diversified enterprises as with the manufacture of wastewater management equipment and a vegetable harvesting division. Some of the historical information relating to the Mather family's business affairs was garnered in the exhaustive website of "The History of Mather + Platt (U.K.) Ltd.).[900]

17. Emma (Watson) Mather (Lady Mather) (1843–1921)

When her husband received a knighthood, she became known as Lady Mather. At the time of her death, she was survived by a son, four daughters, 14 grandchildren, and one great grandchild.[901]

Her marriage to William Mather was officiated by Dr. Jonathan Bayley. (See in the Potts Family collateral genealogy, above, under John Faulkner Potts, for an 1844 description of the Argyle Square church, in London.)

A memorial notice in the Mather & Pratt company magazine, Our Journal, mentioned a few aspects of Emma Mather's activities on behalf of the firm's employees:

> "Our own people at Salford Iron Works and at Park Works have cause to remember with thankfulness Lady Mather's kind thought for them and her generosity to their children. In the early days of the Queen Street Institute, Lady Mather provided dinners there for school children at a charge of a halfpenny. She was one of the founds of the Salford and Manchester Sick Poor Nursing Association, and during the Great War she sent a gift of books each Christmas to the children of all our men who had joined the forces."

She kept in touch with her American sister, Mary Potts, although of the correspondence that survives there is little more than the polite conversation of current goings-on between members of the close family.[902]

She was buried at St. Mary's, Prestwich parish church.

William Mather (Rt. Hon. Sir William Mather) (1838–1920)
(husband of Emma Watson)

His son, Loris, compiled the laudatory biography of Sir William Mather; the title is The Right Honourable Sir William Mather, P.C., LL.D., M.Inst.C.E.[903]

Of his parents and grandparents, sparse information is available. William Mather's parents and siblings are as follows:

William[1] Mather [senior] died 1858. He married Amelia Tidswell 1834, daughter of J. Tidswell.

Children of William Mather and Amelia Tidswell are:

i. Alice[2] Mather. She married John Massey Hewitt.
ii. Amelia Mather. She married Andrew Manson.
iii. Charles Mather. [Died in childhood.]
iv. Colin Mather, Sr., died 1857 in Killarney.
v. William Mather, born 15 July 1838 in John Street, Manchester, Lancashire, England; died 18 September 1920 in Bramshaw, New Forest, Hampshire, England. He married Emma Jane Watson 02 September 1863 in New Christian Church (Swedenborgian), Argyle Square, London; born 1843; died 10 November 1921.
vi. John Mather, born about 1841. He married Nellie Metcalfe.

Notes

The father of William Mather (senior) was from Montrose, Aberdeenshire.

The mother of Amelia Tidswell, whose given and maiden names are not known, was born about 1800.

Amelia Mather was known as "Amy".

William Mather had been enrolled in Dr. Jonathan Bayley's[904] boarding school in Accrington, and later, when Bayley moved to Dresden, Germany, he attended there with Thomas and Henry Watson. Bayley conducted his school under the religious tenets of Emanuel Swedenborg and the New Church theology which the Mathers had embraced.

William Mather was Magistrate for county Lancaster; Member of Parliament for South Salford, 1885-1886; elected M.P. for Lancashire (Gorton Division), 1889-1895, and Rossendale Division, 1900-1904. He was knighted in 1902 for his assistance in reorganizing the War Office during the Second South African War, and, in 1910, made Privy Counsellor[905] to King George V.

He was first apprenticed by 1850-1852 at the Salford Iron Works, the family-run foundry and machine manufactory begun in Salford by his father in 1824. During his early working years, William Mather continued his schooling with Dr. Bayley, spending a short while during 1854-1855 in Dresden, Germany, when Bayley removed his school to that city. Afterward, Mather returned to Salford, where in 1852 his brother, Colin, had become a partner with William Platt of the Salford Iron Works, manufacturing boilers, pumps, and textile machinery. William Mather was appointed Assistant Manager of the firm in 1858 and became a partner in 1863 (shortly before his marriage). As an engineer, he joined the Institution of Mechanical Engineers in 1867. By 1871 he assumed the position of Manager of the firm and, by 1877 as other firm partners retired, senior partner—inaugurating Mather & Platt as it is still known. In 1892 the firm became a private limited company and he assumed its chairmanship.

Under the directorship of William Mather, the firm of Mather and Platt grew by an order of magnitude, from 300 to 4,000 employees. During the time prior to World War I, the firm was continuously profitable, having by then diversified its manufacturing to include electrical machinery (marking Edison-designed dynamos) and food manufacturing equipment. In 1883, William Mather purchased the patent rights for the American-made Grinnell sprinkler (patented 1882) for all areas outside of North America. The device had been invented by Frederick Grinnell for fire suppression in cotton mills and warehouses.[906] By 1886, the firm installed the first fire sprinkler in Australia.

[904] "Jonathan Bayley, 1810-1886", New Church Herald (Yorkshire, 1886).

[905] The current definition of the Privy Council is as follows: "The Privy Council goes back to the earliest days of the Monarchy, when it comprised those appointed by the King or Queen to advise on matters of state. As the constitution developed into today's constitutional monarchy, under which The Sovereign acts on the advice of Ministers, so the Privy Council adapted. Its day to day business is transacted by those of Her Majesty's Ministers who are Privy Counsellors, that is all Cabinet Ministers and a number of junior Ministers. Membership of the Privy Council brings with it the right to be called 'Right Honourable'." (>>Privy Council Office website, http://www. privy-council.org.uk/ouput/page25.asp; accessed 1 Oct 2004).

Internationally, Mather and Platt grew to include offices in Berlin, Bombay, and Calcutta. William Mather undertook some fifty trips to Russia during his career, and he was interested in trade with China as well. (He used some of his Russian trips also to propagate the teachings of the Church of the New Jerusalem.[907]) But he was probably best known for his indefatigable efforts in workers' education and labor relations. He was by the 1890s a supporter of a 48-hour work week and an 8-hour work day. When he had been Member of Parliament for Gorton (Lancashire), he helped establish the Technical Instruction Act of 1890 and a Local Taxation Act that raised money for technical education. He helped establish Owens College, later renamed Manchester University, which institution awarded him an honorary LL.D. in 1908.

William Mather also received an LL.D. from Princeton University. On the Princeton campus is the Mather Sundial, in the court of McCosh Hall, which is a replica of the Turnbull Sun Dial constructed in 1551 at Corpus Christi College, Oxford. Mather had been the governor of Victoria University, Manchester, which gave the replica sundial to Princeton to "symbolize the connection between Oxford and Princeton". The sun dial is a "monumental shaft, rising from a broad base to a height of more than twenty feet . . . topped by a pelican, religious symbol of Corpus Christi." It was dedicated in 1907 by Viscount James Bryce, British ambassador to the United States. For some time, the steps surrounding the Mather Sundial were the exclusive seating area for Princeton seniors.[908]

In various correspondence from Emma Potts Mather, the return addresses are as follows, some of them reflecting multiple residences:[909]

1876: Kerstal Dale, Higher Broughton
1895: Wood Hill [Wood Hill House, Prestwich]
1897: Caradon Court, W. Ross, Herefordshire
1904-1905: 16 Kensington Palace Gardens

The Mather homes were proportionately more spacious and landed as William Mather's wealth and fame increased, and as he relinquished more of his control over business affairs, holding multiple country properties by the time of his elder years. He first obtained both country residences and one in London in the mid-1890s. Around 1908 he had obtained Bramble Hill Lodge, at Bramshaw in the New Forest. The home in New Forest occupied part of old Royal hunting lands, first created as "Nova Foresta" in 1079 by William I (William the Conqueror). Over its 900 years it has seen changing priorities of use, from deer-hunting, to source of huge timbers for Royal Navy vessels, to commercial timber production, to recreation and conservation. Today the land is still largely in the possession of the Crown and is a "nationally important environment of woodland pasture, heaths, bogs and the remains of 17th, 18th and 19th century coppices and timber plantations".[910]

In 1916, William Mather retired from his chairmanship of Mather and Platt and last visited Manchester in 1917. His worth at the time of his death was £405,841. He was buried at St. Mary's, Prestwich parish church, 22 September 1920.

Relatively little news is had of William Mather in the Watson or Potts family correspondence thus far seen; most of it being more directly personal between the correspondents. However, in 1911 the following was conveyed by Thomas Gerardin Watson to his sister, Mary Potts in America, which serves up a small slice of life in the Mather world at the time:[911]

> "You will doubtless have heard from Kattie of the travels of two of Emma's daughters, Dorothy & her husband to India & Marjorie (also to India I suppose) to meet her husband, with whom she will return, after travelling about (where I don't know) with him for some time. Then too William is in Egypt, where he had to winter instead of in India, as he had intended, & Loris who went with him & did continue his travels in India, partly in the interests of the business of Mather & Platt Co. We hear he has been doing very well & hope he is laying the foundations of a large Indian business— In intervals he has been enjoying himself—having amongst other things, succeeded in shooting a tiger. We hear that Dorothy & her husband are now with William & we suppose that they will all be soon setting their faces homeward. It has been rather hard for poor Emma, to be left, almost alone, for so long, but she is such a philosopher & so patient, that no doubt she has made the best of things in William's absence. Of course, Alice & her family have been with her a good deal & Kittie has stayed with her once or twice, I believe. And then she has had Marjorie's baby to take care of—rather an anxiety I should fancy."

Children of Emma (Watson) and William Mather

NOTES

123. William Loris Mather (Sir William Loris Mather, O.B.E.) (1913–1998)

He was educated in the Oundle School and Trinity College, Cambridge, earning an M.A. in Engineering and Law.

During World War II he served as Major in the British Army under Gen. Bernard Montgomery in the 8th Army Headquarters. During the Allied advance from the Rhine to the Elbe, he served as a tank commander. He was Director and Chairman of Mather and Platt Ltd. (Director, 1955–; Chairman, 1960–), in addition to numerous other directorate positions with firms and organizations. In 1970 his residence was at Whirley Hall, Macclesfield, Cheshire; he maintained his office at Park Works, Manchester, and at 22 Great Smith St., Westminster, London.[915]

Regarding the Georges, an American family into which he married, the following historical side note may be made:

George Family: A Connection to California Forty-Niners

The maternal line of Eleanor Ames George can be tracked through marriages and census information to one of the Forty-Niners of California gold-mining lore, which here traces an interesting diversion .

Eleanor George's mother was:
Katharine Hunt Ames (born 25 December 1889 in Newtonville, Massachusetts); she married Robert Hudson George (born 25 December 1889 in Brookline, Massachusetts; died 12 October 1979).

The brother of Katharine Hunt Ames was:
Lawrence Coffin Ames (born 9 February 1897 in West Newton, Massachusetts; died 6 May 1981 in Alameda Co., California). He married:

Helen Rodolph (born 7 May 1897 in California, died 27 November 1998). She was the daughter of:

George W. Rodolph (born November 1865 in California, died after 1929) and Carrie D. (born November 1866 in California, died after 1929). He was the son of:

Samuel F. Rodolph (born about 1817 in Switzerland, died after 4 June 1880). He married Salina between 1850-1855, probably in California. She was born in Bavaria about 1831, died after 4 June 1880. He was a physician all his life. In the 1850 U.S. census he is listed residing in the vicinity of Placerville, Eldorado Co., California, and at the time of the 1860 census he resided in Cache Creek, Yolo Co., California. By the time of the 1870 census, he had settled down in Oakland, California; in 1880 he resided there at 966 Clay St.

As a physician during the California Gold Rush of 1849, Samuel F. Rodolph had an unusually casual position in an otherwise rough-and-tumble existence during one of the colorful episodes of American history. That he remained in practice in the mining communities for at least ten years, during which time he married there, is additionally unusual.

[915] The International Year Book and Statesman's Who's Who, 1970 (Burke's Peerage Ltd., London), p. 580; [obituary notice], Mainstream Magazine (University of Manchester Alumni Association), no. 26 (Apr 1999).

Placerville was only an informal name at the time of the 1850 census—and note that the census register in which S. F. Rodolph is listed specifies that the residents were in the "vicinity of" Placerville, adding to the dispersed nature of the population. Actually, the town was more readily—if still informally—known as Hangtown, having gotten that name from a number of "citizen's court" decisions relating to the thefts of gold from miners and merchants. On 6 July 1856, Placerville was nearly destroyed by fire, but whether Rodolph was still a resident of the town at the time (or perhaps driven away as a result) is unknown.[916] In 1857, Placerville was made the county seat.

Generation No. 7

212. Jennifer[7] Mather (William Loris[6], Loris Emerson[5], Emma Jane[4] Watson, Thomas[3], Thomas[2], Thomas[1]) was born June 1940 in Providence, Rhode Island. She married Simon Murray 1966. He was born 1940 in Leicester, England.

Children of Jennifer Mather and Simon Murray are:
+ 275 i. Justin[8] Murray.
276 ii. Suzanna Murray. Born 17 December.
277 iii. Christy Murray.

NOTES

212. Jennifer (Mather) Murray (1940–)

She attended the Wheeler School in Providence, Rhode Island. Later she graduated from the London Central School of Art with a degree in textile design. After marriage, the Murrays moved to Thailand, where Simon was with the Jardine Matheson Group, and where Jennifer started a company designing and wholesaling Thai silks and cottons. After three years they left for Hong Kong; Jennifer sold the Thai company and started a new, larger company there.

Learning to fly a helicopter in 1996, Jennifer Murray later became the first woman to pilot a single-piston engine helicopter around the world, in 1997. This expedition garnered her an entry in the Guinness Book of World Records, for the "Fastest Globe Trip By a Female Helicopter Pilot", flying 35,698 miles in 97 days (including 80 refueling stops and layover time to visit the Monaco Grand Prix and ceremonies for handing Hong Kong back to the People's Republic of China). In the same helicopter in 2000 she was the first woman to fly solo a helicopter around the world (see her book, NOW Solo[918]). The helicopter is now displayed in the Smithsonian Institution's Udvar-Hazy Center, the National Air and Space Museum annex at Dulles International Airport.

In 2003, she attempted to fly a Bell 407 helicopter with copilot Colin Bodill around the world via the poles; but that expedition ended 19 December 2003 when the aircraft crashed on the Ronne Ice Shelf in Antarctica

Jennifer Mather Murray (center) made two successful helicopter circumnavigations of the world in a Robinson R44 Astro (bottom). In 2003 she and copilot Colin Bodill attempted to circumnavigate the world via the poles in a Bell 407. They landed at the South Pole (top) on 17 December 2003, the centennial of the Wright Brothers' first flights at Kitty Hawk, North Carolina. Shortly later the expedition ended in a crash; but the pilots repeated the effort successfully during 2006–2007. (See text.)

after having reached the South Pole. The landing at the South Pole occurred on 17 December, exactly 100 years after the Wright Brothers' first flights at Kitty Hawk, North Carolina. Earlier in the expedition, they had landed in Antarctica and met up with her husband, Simon, who was embarked on his own expedition, to travel to the pole on foot without help of motor power (see Simon Murray, below). The helicopter was retrieved and sold for salvage. (See Jennifer Murray's book, Broken Journey.[919])

In December 2006 she and copilot Colin Bodill began another attempt to fly around the world via the poles; this time they succeeded. Departing from (and returning to) Fort Worth, Texas, they reached the South Pole on 6 January 2007 and the North Pole on 20 April. In the process they passed through 34 countries.[920] The polar flights were, by design, confined to the Americas. While that may not constitute a *circum*navigation of the world, the accomplishment is so fraught with danger, so far beyond the experiences of most women and men, and completely oblivious to the cardinal directions, that the attempt and the achievement are hardly diminished.

She mentions in her book a niece, Hannah Mather; but who the parents are has not been determined.

Simon Murray (1940–)
(husband of Jennifer Mather)

Simon Murray, C.B.E., spent five years in the Legion Parachute regiment of the French Foreign Legion (1960-1965), during the Algerian War, about which he wrote a book, Legionnaire[921]; the book also was produced as a film by Martin Huberty, Simon, An English Legionnaire (U.K., 2003). After leaving the Foreign Legion, he joined the firm of Jardine Matheson in Hong Kong and became its Managing Director of its engineering businesses. He established his own company in 1980, Davenham Investments, then became Managing Director of Hutchison Whampoa. After serving as Executive Chairman of the Asia Pacific branch of Deutsche Bank, he founded the investment firm of Simon Murray and Associates and served as its Chairman.[922]

As an adventurer, Simon Murray undertook the Tetley South Pole Mission during the Antarctic summer of 2003–2004, during which he and veteran polar explorer Pen Hadow trekked to the South Pole without either motorized vehicles or outside support or resupply. They completed their 680-mile journey, reaching the pole after 58 days, on 28 January 2004; Murray was the oldest man to have reached the pole.[923] During the expedition on 14 December 2003, Simon's wife, Jennifer, landed her helicopter with co-pilot Colin Bodhill and met the polar ice-trekkers at 81º27′ South latitude, 77º02′ longitude, 91 miles from the men's starting point at Hercules Inlet. She was enroute to the South Pole, too, in the first attempt to circumnavigate the world via the poles (see more with Jennifer Murray, above).

Children of Jennifer (Mather) and Simon Murray

Suzanna Murray [No. 276] ("Suze") and Christy Murray [No. 277] ("Chris") were educated at Brown University.

at Fort Belvoir, Virginia; born 18 December 1920 in Princeton, New Jersey; died 07 February 1996 in Norway, Maine.

NOTES

215. Earle Covington Smith (1885–1965)

Earle Covington Smith was apparently named for the Earle and Covington families of the Eastern Shore of Maryland. Earle's father, John Edward Smith, had been sent to live in the home of John H. Covington after having been orphaned by the death of his father, Capt. John Smith. The only Earle relations in the family are distant ones, so the significance of this name is less well understood.

Little is known now of Earle Smith's upbringing. However, his brother, Edward, singled out one event involving brothers Earle and Gilbert that he included in the "Smith Genealogy"; Earle was 14 years old at the time of the story: [924]

> It was at the 4th of July, 1899, when the battle of 43rd Street[925] took place. Gilbert and Earle and some other boys, our neighbors, had built brick forts in the back yard; the yard was deep, extending to the next street, and the house was semi-detached, giving it a good width; one fort toward the front and the other toward the rear, on each fort was mounted a small toy cannon. After the cannon were loaded with powder and BB shot, the boys would stand at a safe position as the cannon were fired. They did not realize that one cannon had not fired, or had delayed fire. When it did fire, the shot hit Earle in the arm. Father Welling[926], an Episcopal minister next door, a really pleasant person and fine neighbor, jumped the fence and hustled Earle off to the Presbyterian Hospital[927], where he was treated and the shot removed. It had gone through the arm and had lodged just under the skin on the far side. It was a hot day and the excitement didn't help. When Earle got home he stretched out on a lounge in the second floor and Gilbert fanned him in the effort to make him comfortable, until Gilbert went to Darby for his art work at the Studio[928] and I took over the fanning. When Papa was on his way home someone down at the street corner told him Earle had been shot. It was a great shock as our brother Ralph had died just the year before. Earle's recovery was rapid.

After his family moved to Philadelphia in 1895, Earle Smith completed his public-school education at Central High School for Boys.[929] He first attended the school at its second site, on the southeast corner of [929] Central High School was founded in 1838 and was then only the second public high school in the nation. Its first building (no longer standing), at the corner of Market and Juniper Streets, is the subject of the earliest known daguerreotype photograph taken in America, made by Joseph Saxton about 25 Sep 1839. The first president of Central High School was Alexander Dallas Bache, who is noted elsewhere in the collateral genealogical sketches. Today, Central High School occupies its fourth building, at Ogontz and Olney Avenues; its building at Green St. became the Benjamin Franklin High School. In 1975 the school became co-educational. Broad and Green Streets. Soon thereafter he attended at the school's third site, when in 1900 a huge, new building was opened across the street, on the southwest corner of Broad and Green Streets, occupying a city block. Neither school still stands. The newer school on Broad St. was not fully completed, however, until 1902, and President Theodore Roosevelt was invited to dedicate the building on 23 November.[930] In the midst of a blizzard of publicity, newspapers covered the events of the day. Roosevelt arrived at the Broad Street Station across from City Hall and was escorted "amid lusty cheers" up North Broad Street to the new Central High School. The Philadelphia Inquirer reported:[931]

> Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, together with several members of his Cabinet, spent yesterday in Philadelphia and were the guests of honor at two notable functions. The first, the formal dedication of the new Boys' Central High School, attracted a large gathering of distinguished educators and prominent alumni of the institution from all over the United States. In accordance with a custom inaugurated during Washington's administration, the historic City Troop escorted the party to the High School. Here President Roosevelt, in an address in the assembly room, spoke in words of warmest praise concerning the institution. Later he chatted informally to fifteen hundred enthusiastic students. By a felicitous reference to the High School's football victory of the day before he won his way straight to the hearts of his delighted auditors. Amid volleys of the school yell, given with the precision of a discharge of musketry, and the waving of crimson and gold banners, the colors of the school, President Roosevelt left the building.

In all probability, Earle Smith was present for the President's dedication speech at Central High School, although the event does not survive as a part of family oral tradition. Roosevelt spoke to the students from a fire escape festooned with American flags and bunting: [932]

> Boys, it is perfectly easy to see from my reception that you feel happy over the football game yesterday.
> I have but a word to say to you, and I shall sum it up with a bit of advice with which I think those concerned in the development of your team will agree. You are here to study, and while you are at it, study hard. When you have got the chance to play outside, play hard. Do not forget this, that in the long run the man who shirks his work will shirk his play. I remember a professor in Yale speaking to me a member of the Yale eleven some years ago and saying, "That fellow is going to fail. He stands too low in his studies. He is slack there, and he will be slack when it comes down to hard work on the gridiron." He did fail.
> You are preparing yourselves for the best work in life. During your school days and in after life, I earnestly believe in each of you having as good a time as possible but making it come second to doing the best kind of work possible. And in your studies and in your sports here in school and afterwards in life in doing your work in the great world, it is a safe plan to follow this rule—a rule that I once heard preached on the football field—"Don't flinch, don't foul, and hit the line hard."

[930] This was not the first presidential visit to Central High School. On 24 Jun 1847, President James Polk, accompanied by Vice-President George M. Dallas and Attorney General Nathan Clifford, addressed the students. (Dallas is also noted in the Appendix of selected collateral genealogies.)

Earle Covington Smith was born at home in Wilmington, Delaware, on 19 February 1885. The house, at 1701 Mount Salem Lane (seen here, above, in 2004), served as the parsonage for the Mount Salem Methodist Episcopal Church, where Earle's father was minister at the time.

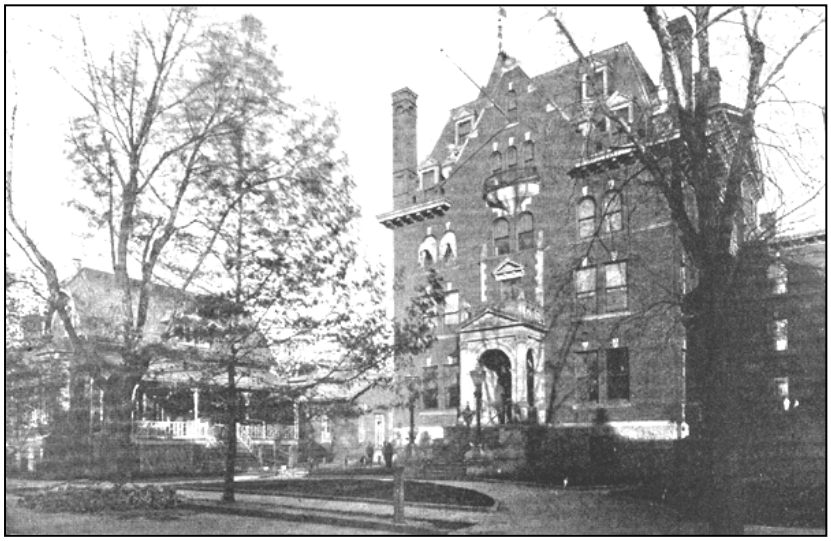
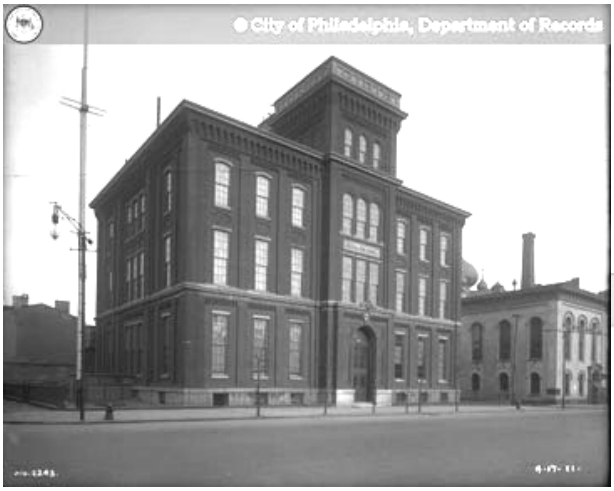
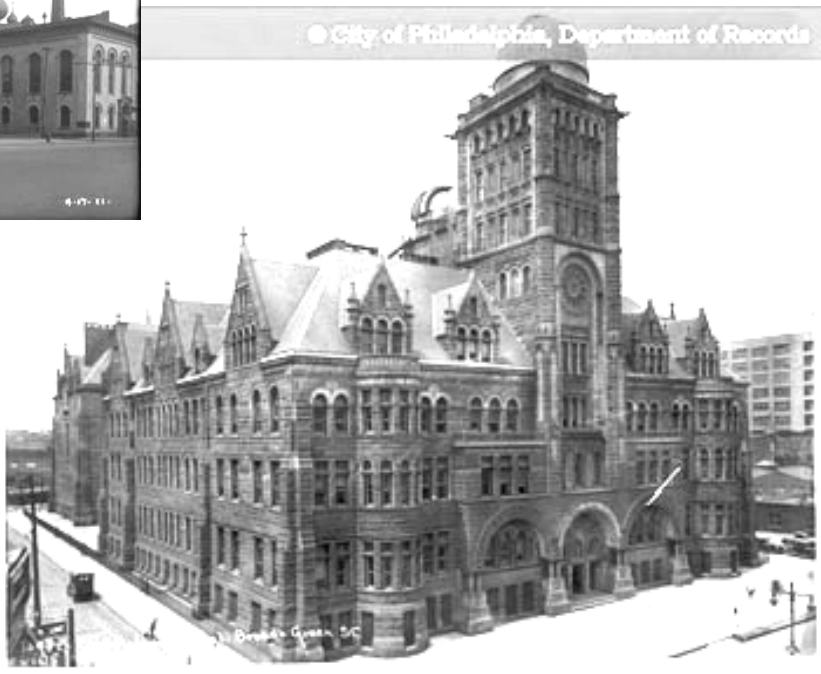
Earle's brother, Edward, years later wrote of the "Battle of 43rd Street", on 4 July 1899, when Earle was accidentally hit by BB shot from a toy cannon. The house was at 614 N. 43rd St. in Philadelphia (left, in 2004). Earle was rushed to nearby Presbyterian Hospital (below, in 1900) and quickly recovered at home (see text).





Earle received his public education in Philadelphia's Central High School For Boys. The school's second and third edifices were on opposing corners at Broad and Green Sts. The imposing third building (right) was opened in 1900 and dedicated by President Theodore Roosevelt on 23 November 1902, before an enthusiastic throng of students. Both buildings have since been razed.



Earle Smith studied engineering at Lehigh College (now university) in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, graduating in the Class of 1910. (Below) The school's Packard Chapel; on the left is a view taken by Earle while he was a student, and on the right is a replicated view from the same position, as seen in 2005. No doubt Earle may have approved of the construction equipment cluttering the scene.

Earle Smith went on to college, graduating in 1910 from Lehigh University[933], in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, earning a B.S. degree in mining engineering. While at Lehigh, during his senior year he resided in Section A of Taylor Hall (today Taylor College).[934] Also see Additions & Corrections

After graduating from Lehigh, Earle Smith first worked as a mining engineer for the Lucky Tiger Mining Company at a chromite mine at El Tigre, Sonora, Mexico.[935]

In July 1912 he married Elisabeth F. Drummond of Philadelphia. Their marriage was officiated by Rev. Charles E. Dunn. His marriage license application gave his address as Jacksonville, Florida, and hers at 1218 Hilton St., Philadelphia.[936]

In August 1914, when his 11-month-old son, Ralph, died, Earle Smith and his wife, Elisabeth, resided in Indiana Harbor, Indiana. (Indiana Harbor is a part of East Chicago, Indiana. It is not far from Michigan City, Indiana, where lived Earle's sister, Roberta Smith Mack. Earle's brother, Gilbert, a minister, presided over Ralph's funeral; Gilbert lived in nearby Glenview, Illinois, a suburb of Chicago.)

[933] For a contemporary history of Lehigh University see Catherine Drinker Bowen, A History of Lehigh University (Lehigh Alumni Bulletin, [Bethlehem, Pennsylvania], 1924). This is a casually written history–"just a long yarn about Lehigh University, its roots and shoots and main stem"–by the daughter of Henry Sturgis Drinker (Class of 1871, later President of the University, 1905-1922) and wife of Prof. Ezra Bowen (Class of 1913); as such it is the usual laudatory text amplified by the "insider's" pleased perspective.

[935] El Tigre, Sonora, about 100 km northeast of Hermosillo, is a ghost town today, although the mine is still in operation. Earle C. Smith took some photographs of the mine operation and the town; these are a part of my Spamer Family Historical Photos series (Group 66). Originally, the town of El Tigre was a part of the municipality of Nacozari, but on 7 Jun 1967 the Sonora government declared El Tigre to be officially "disappeared" or abandoned. In 1917, the El Tigre miners were a part of sensational labor strike that spread throughout the Southwest on both the U.S. and Mexico. The mine has long been known in the geological literature, including for example, R. T. Mishler, "Settling Slimes at the Tigre Mill" (Engineering and Mining Journal, vol. 94 (1912), pp. 643-646), and an article on "Electric Power Installation at El Tigre, Sonora, Mexico", Transactions of the American Institute of Mining, Metallurgical, and Petroleum Engineers, vol. 45 (1913); these being contemporary with the time when Earle Smith worked there. Included among Earle Smith's photos at El Tigre is one of "Blanco's men", Mexican revolutionaries under Gen. Lucio Blanco. Interestingly, this photo predates the time of agrarian reforms of then-Colonel Blanco, which began in 1913, climaxing in 1915 with the mobilization of U.S. Army troops in Brownsville, Texas, in 1916. Geologically, the El Tigre mine is part of the Puerto Nuevo Ultramafic Complex, in the Sierra Madre Occidental Mineral Belt. In 2001 the mine was owned by Morgain Minerals, Inc., but in 2003 was acquired by Lateegra Resources Corp. The economic-grade chromite ore is in the lower sequence of layered chromite-bearing intrusives there, assaying at 45.47%-57.78% Cr^{203}. The mining area is embraced by a 10 km-square property; the "El Tigre" claim proper occupies 84 ha. at the southern end of the mineral zone, which still yields economic quantities of metals, including gold and silver in addition to chromite. The Lateegra development emphasizes the precious metals. When his daughter, Elisabeth, was born, Earle Smith gave his residence as 5312 Malcom St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. This is a short distance from South St. Bernard Street, where the house at no. 820 figures prominently in the Smith and Spamer families alike.

In his recollections of wartime service, written in 1919 after his return from France, Earle Smith indicated that by the time he worked for Koppers in Ohio [1916-1917] he had had "considerable experience in plants manufacturing shell", but where this experience was gained is not mentioned. His own summary of engineering experience only notes that he worked in industrial construction engineering (see following).

[937] It is not clear exactly what jobs Earle Smith worked on at this time; his résumé indicates only that he was employed by the Salt Lake Basin Office of the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation. The 1930 U.S. census indicated that he was a dam inspector. (The present-day Rockport Reservoir, near to Coalville, was not built until 1957.)

Engineering Career

Sometime during 1937-1946, Earle Smith prepared a typewritten résumé of his engineering career. Until this document came to light in 2007 in the effects of his daughter, Elisabeth Dewing, the family did not have a precise understanding of the scope of his work or his responsibilities; only vague anecdotes were mentioned. At the time that Earle Smith compiled this document, typed on watermarked Government-issue paper, he was employed with the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation on the Central Valley Project in California, where principally he worked on Shasta Dam. The résumé lists his jobs, employers, and salaries for the period from 1910, when he graduated from Lehigh University, to 1937. Following this table, below, is some additional information that extends his career information up to the time of his retirement in 1948.

1930 Aug 11–1934 Nov 30	U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, Boulder Canyon Project [Hoover Dam‡]. Assistant Engineer; railroad location and construction at Boulder City; in charge of parties on pioneer tunnels[942], excavation and lining of spillway tunnels, spillways and intake towers. $2600, Grade 11 Professional.

[940] Apparently, Earle Smith listed the Washington, D.C., headquarters of his employer, while he worked on jobs in the American West.

[941] The Welch Act of 1928 instructed all field offices of the U.S. Civil Service to conduct job surveys of classified workers in the civil service system, so as to adjust salaries and to bring the entire service into one system of job classification and salary structures. Prior to this time, job classifications had been required only of those workers in Washington, D.C. The program halted in July 1930 when the Brookhart Act was passed, which provided for system-wide pay increases to approximate the results that had been expected of the Welch Act.

[942] The "pioneer tunnels" were the first 12 × 12-foot bores through about a mile of rock, running about parallel to the Colorado River. The pioneer tunnels then were expanded in stages to create 56-foot diameter bores in which three-foot thick concrete linings were placed. These 50-foot diameter tubes served as the river-diversion tunnels, two (Above) Earle Smith's first job after graduating from Lehigh University was as a mine surveyor in the rough and tumble mining community of Wallstreet, Colorado. He worked there from August 1910 to June 1911, and received the respectable salary of $125 per month. Earle is standing in the rear, at left (and inset).

(Below) Earle's second job, from June to November 1911, was at the dusty, remote El Tigre chromite mine run by the Lucky Tiger Mining Co. in Sonora, Mexico. During these five months his salary jumped to $200 per month, an earnings rate he would not again realize for more than a decade.

* Earle Smith's typewritten memoir of his experiences in France during World War I, written in 1919, is quoted in its entirety farther below. It notes that he went to the job in Youngstown, Ohio, in April, or shortly before the birth of his daughter, Elisabeth. In either case, he seems to have been away when she was born; her birth certificate lists her birthplace at a residential address different from her father's given address in Philadelphia.

† Between July–December 1925, Earle Smith went to his homestead in Colorado. He married his second wife, Dorothy, in October.

‡ For more about Smith's work with the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, particularly at Hoover Dam, see below under "Post-war Activities", subsection "U.S. Bureau of Reclamation".

Military Service

In January or February 1917, Earle Smith requested a commission in the Ordnance Officers Reserve Corps, U.S. Army. After awaiting lost paperwork, in May he received his commission as a 1st Lieutenant, and was called to active service on 12 June 1917. His military service is as follows: [944] on either side of the river, while the dam was under construction. Three of the four diversion tunnels were begun as pioneer tunnels; construction of the fourth tunnel was accelerated by first excavating the entire top section of the 56-foot tunnel rather than the 12-foot bore. After the diversion tunnels were closed against the river, to begin impounding the lake behind the dam, the diversion tunnels were sealed where the spillway tunnels intersect them.

Quite a lot has been written about the building of Hoover Dam, including many contemporary items that were issued before and during construction. See for example bibliographical listings in Part 12 ("Lower Colorado River–Projects") of the Bibliography of the Grand Canyon and Lower Colorado River, website http://www.grandcanyonbiblio.org (first posted online in Jan 2000, hosted by the Grand Canyon Association) or its previous two print editions by Earle E. Spamer (Grand Canyon Natural History Association Monograph nos. 2 and 8, 1981 and 1990 with 1993 supplement).

[943] A transcript for classes taken at Pennsylvania State College by Elisabeth Smith, Earle Smith's daughter, during the summer session of 1937, lists her father as an emergency contact person with the address c/o U.S. Reclamation Bureau, Redding, California.

[944] Compiled from records written by Earle C. Smith, which include his original "Officer's Record Book", a handwritten "War Service Record" that was concluded at Aberdeen Proving Ground ("Still in the Service–April 20. 1919"), and an undated handwritten "Military Record" that ends with his discharge.

1918 Oct 5–1919 Jan 21*	Engineering Division, Ordnance Department, Headquarters, Service of Supply, Tours, France [949]
1919 Feb 21	Arrived at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, aboard S.S. Northland from Brest, France (by way of Liverpool, England), in compliance with travel order #3578, [950] and reported to Camp Dix [later Fort Dix],

[945] The S.S. Hamburg was flagged under the Hamburg Amerika Line. At the outbreak of hostilities between Germany and America, it was seized by the U.S. and renamed the S.S. Powhatan (ID no. 3013). The Powhatan was one of the original troop transport ships, and in this service she counted the second greatest number of turnaround trips between America and Europe (51, being bested only by one trip by the S.S. Henderson). She went through several changes of owners, flying British and Belgian flags. She was requisitioned for British Government service in June 1915 and renamed the S.S. Northland. After additional changes in registration, in March 1917 she was taken over by the Shipping Controller in the Liner Requisition Scheme, during which service Earle Smith sailed aboard her when he returned from the war. She was refitted later that year and eventually renamed the S.S. Zeeland again, and, after another change of owner, renamed again as the S.S. Minnesota. She was sold in Oct 1929 and in Just one letter written by Earle Smith from overseas is now known, written to his mother on 13 October 1918. It was written on stationery of Hôtel Lotti, 7–9 rue de Castiglione, Paris, and sent via Officers Mail:

> Dear Mother—
>
> Am passing thru here again, safe enough for now, and will move on again tomorrow. Had a drive around today in an open coach so I could see the town. We are all wondering how negotiations will turnout. Too bad the Boche won't fight a little longer so he can get the licking he has coming to him.
> Have had a most interesting trip during the past week and hope my work will continue to be so. I was sitting up in a R.R. coach all last night but slept pretty well at that. Now I have a nice comfortable bed waiting for me and I am going to it mighty soon. Hope to find some letters from home when I get back to Headquarters.
> Hope you are all well and happy—you ought to be from the way things are going. Lots of kisses all around and some extra ones for Betsy.
> Heaps of love
> Earle

At his request, Earle Smith was discharged from the Army at Fort D. A. Russell,[952] Wyoming, so that he could pursue personal affairs there.[953] These affairs kept him in the area, which soon involved claiming a homestead site in Colorado, on land received from the U.S. Land Office; and he married for the second time (as noted further below). Apparently there was some family misinformation that he had left the [951] At Aberdeen Proving Ground after the war, Earle Smith was "winding up proving materials and ending contracts." (Earle C. Smith to J. Lathrop Mack, 30 Jan 1949).

[952] Fort D. A. Russell, Cheyenne, Wyoming, is today a National Historic Landmark within the Francis E. Warren Air Force Base. The fort was named for Brig. Gen. David Alan Russell, killed on 19 Sep 1864 at the Battle of Opequon Creek, Virginia. In 1906 it was enlarged to accommodate an entire brigade. It was a strategically positioned post when it was established, approximately midway between the Canadian and Mexican borders and halfway along the transcontinental railroad; and it played roles during the campaigns against American Indian tribes in that part of the country. In 1930 it was renamed Fort Francis E. Warren, commemorating a U.S. Senator from Cheyenne, Wyoming.

service at the rank of Major and had gone West to "rest up"; but Smith corrected these misconceptions in a letter to J. Lathrop Mack.[954]

Earle Smith was awarded several insignia and medals as the result of his wartime service: one Gold Chevron; Victory Medal (bronze) with Battle Clasp, Aisne-Marne Defensive Sector[955]; and L'Ordre de Léopold, Chevalier [Order of Leopold I, rank Knight], which was awarded by the Belgian Government with a diploma from Albert, King of the Belgians, 27 February 1920.[956] No ceremonies were involved with these decorations. The Victory Medal was mailed to Earle Smith from the U.S. Army's General Supply Depot, Philadelphia. The Order of Leopold was likewise mailed, from Washington, D.C.

Regarding the Order of Leopold, a few words of explanation are probably in order. It is the premier order of chivalry in Belgium, distributed in numerous designs, ribbons, and emblems, to military and civilians alike, to Belgians and non-Belgians. This medal was awarded to officers of the American Army by King Albert on behalf of Belgium, in recognition of valorous service to Belgium during the Great War. The Order of Leopold is awarded for any reason of valor, at the behest of the Belgian monarch.[957]

[954] Earle C. Smith to J. Lathrop Mack (30 Jan 1949).

[955] The [World War I] Victory Medal, introduced as a Congressional Bill but never enacted into law, was implemented individually by the U.S. Army and U.S. Navy. It was created to recognize qualifying service during the period 6 Apr 1917-1 Apr 1920. With the Army medal, battle clasps (bronze bars 1/8 inch high and 1½ inches wide with a small five-pointed star at each end, affixed to the medal ribbon) were awarded for specific battles or campaigns in which the awarded individual was engaged in combat. Earle Smith was awarded the battle clasp for the Aisne-Marne Defensive Sector, 18 Jul-6 Aug 1918. The Aisne-Marne campaign ended the German army's threat to Paris, during which American successes gave Gen. John Pershing the political and administrative strength needed to establish an independent American army in France, the American First Army, which was organized under Gen. Pershing on 10 Aug 1918. (>> "Allied Victory Medals from the Great War", Internet website http://www.diggerhistory.info/pages-medals/victory-medal.htm, accessed 21 Feb 2006; "World War I Victory Medal", Internet website http://foxall.com/csm-common-wwv.htm, accessed 21 Feb 2006; "Named Campaigns–World War I", U.S. Army Center of Military History website http://www.army.mil/cmh-pg/reference/wicmp.htm, accessed 21 Feb 2006.)

[956] Numerous Internet websites illustrate the many forms and designs of the Order of Leopold, as surely also do publications about military and heraldic decorations.

[957] A case in point comes from a surprising place: the Grand Canyon of Arizona. A short item that I wrote for the Grand Canyon Historical Society describes the event (Earle Spamer, "'Did I ever tell you about the time the King of Belgium gave me a medal?' (as reminded by Earle Spamer)", The Ol' Pioneer, vol. 15, no. 2 (Apr/Jun 2004), p. 9:

> "In 1919, King Albert and Queen Elizabeth of Belgium toured America. Their train stopped at Grand Canyon, where they paid an unlikely royal visit. In an update of their travels printed in the New York Times for October 20, 1919, is this passing note:
> > "'At the Grand Canyon, L. H. Cockrum, a brakeman, suffered severe injuries to one leg, while coupling cars. He was visited by the King and Queen in the baggage car, and, the King decorated him with the Order of Leopold II.'
> "What is especially a head-scratcher is, why indeed would the King of Belgium be traveling about America with a bag of medals, much less to pin one to a railroad brakeman?
> "Actually, the Order of Leopold II was handed out by the bushelful by Belgian monarchs, a royal tip-of-the-crown, so to speak, to acknowledge valorous conduct in the service of Belgium. Since 'Albert, King of the Belgians' was Belgium, out came the medal for poor Mr. Cockrum. And surely, out came the medal for years afterward, if for no more common an audience than wide-eyed grandkids."

With the entry of the United States into World War I in 1917, Earle Smith joined the Army and was commissioned as a 1st Lieutenant.

(Left) 1st Lt. Earle Smith, 1917 or 1918. The location of this studio photo is not known, or even whether it was taken in the U.S. or in France.

Smith was at first Chief Inspector of Ordnance at the Bartlett-Hayward Co. in Baltimore, Maryland. Soon after he was appointed Proof Officer of artillery ammunition at Sandy Hook and Aberdeen Proving Grounds. Today, the historic remnants of the gun test stands at Sandy Hook (below), at the northern extremity of the New Jersey coast, are part of the Sandy Hook National Recreation Area. Transferred to Chemical Warfare Service; Gas Officer, 4th Division, 7th Infantry Brigade."

THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

To all who shall see these presents, greeting:

Know Ye, that reposing special trust and confidence in the patriotism, valor, fidelity and abilities of Earle C. Smith I do appoint him Captain in the Ordnance Department in the National Army, in the service of the United States:

to rank as such from the twenty-eighth day of June nineteen hundred and eighteen. He is therefore carefully and diligently to discharge the duty of the office to which he is appointed by doing and performing all manner of things thereunto belonging.

And I do strictly charge and require all Officers and Soldiers under his command to be obedient to his orders as an officer of his grade and position. And he is to observe and follow such orders and directions, from time to time, as he shall receive from me, or the future President of the United States of America, or the General or other Superior Officers set over him, according to the rules and discipline of War.

This Commission to continue in force during the pleasure of the President of the United States for the time being, and for the period of the existing emergency under the provisions of an Act of Congress approved May eighteen, nineteen hundred and seventeen.

Given under my hand at the City of Washington, this twenty-eighth day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eighteen, and in the one hundred and forty-second year of the Independence of the United States.

By the President:

The Adjutant General's Office Recorded: JUL 12 1918

H. P. McCain The Adjutant General.

The Assistant Secretary of War.

Principles of Combat
1- Only offensive produces decisive results
2- Security is necessary at all times.
3- Reconnaissance should be continuous.
4- Mutual support between units increases the chances of success.
5- Surprise is an essential element of success.
6- Combat is conducted by continuous fire & movement.
7- An advantage gained should never be relinquished
8- Endurance & tenacity of purpose are essential to success
9- Simple & direct methods have best chance of success
10- Unity of command must be maintained.
11- Maintenance of direction of attack is necessary
12- Liaison with adjacent units must be continuous
13- Commanders must be kept informed as to the situation

While serving with the Army in France during World War I, Earle Smith carried a notebook, which served as a "crib sheet" for his instruction of non-commissioned officers. This sheet (left) refers to the "Principles of Combat".

The notebook also includes numerous pages on chemical munitions, including the identification of German gas munitions in the field.

This notebook, and his memoir (see p. II-466A and text) that he compiled upon his return from France, were given to the Library of Congress's Veterans History Project of the American Folklife Center. The entire notebook and the memoir may be examined online at the Veterans History Project website.

Albert, Roi des Belges.

A tous présents et à venir, Salut.

Voulant donner un témoignage de Notre haute bienveillance à Mr. Smith, Earle, C., Ordnance Corps 7th. Inf. Brig de l'armée américaine ;

Sur la proposition de Notre Ministre de la Guerre,

Nous avons arrêté et arrêtons :

Article 1er.- Mr. Smith, E., préqualifié est nommé Chevalier de l'Ordre de Léopold.
Il portera la décoration militaire.

Article 2.- Il prendra rang dans l'Ordre, en cette qualité, à dater de ce jour.

Article 3.- Notre Ministre des Affaires étrangères, ayant l'administration de l'Ordre, est chargé de l'exécution du présent arrêté.

Donné à Laeken, le 27 février 1920.

(s.) Albert.

Par le Roi :
Le Ministre de la Guerre,
(s.) Janson.

Pour copie conforme :
Le Secrétaire Général du Département des Affaires étrangères.

For his service in the war, Capt. Earle Smith was decorated with L'Ordre de Léopold, rank of Chevalier (top left), conferred by King Albert of Belgium. Sometime after Earle received the medal in the mail, with its accompanying diploma (top right), he was "decorated" by an appreciative family (see photo below, right, where he wears the medal). Those who appear with him in this photo are not identified, although the young girl at front right may be his daugher, Elisabeth, who would then have been about age three.

Earl H. Squier

Capt. Earle Smith received the Victory Medal with battle clasps (top right) when he was discharged from the Army. By arrangement, he was first transferred from Aberdeen Proving Ground to Fort D. A. Russell in Cheyenne, Wyoming, so that he could enter into personal affairs in the West after leaving the Army. His discharge papers are shown here.

The Order of Leopold medals were distributed to their American recipients after the war. Each medal was accompanied by a diploma from King Albert; these were sent by Registered U.S. Mail from the Adjutant General's Office, War Department, Washington, D.C. The diploma, dated 27 February 1920 (the date of the Royal Decree) is form printed calligraphically in French and completed in a calligraphic clerical hand with the recipient's name, date, and incidentals. It was signed on behalf of the King by a representative of the Belgian Ministry of War and by the Secretary General of the Belgian Department of Foreign Affairs, and embossed with the blind stamp of the Belgian Ministry of Foreign Affairs. The diploma was accompanied by a form letter (in French) from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Brussels, dated 12 October 1921 (18 months after the Royal Decree); it is signed on behalf of the Ministry by the Director General, "A De Ridder". Both the diploma and the cover letter were also accompanied by personalized, typed English translations of the documents. The package that was sent to Earle Smith was mailed from Washington 13 December 1921. He acknowledged its receipt on 24 December 1921.

When Earle Smith's daughter, Elisabeth Dewing, gave me some of his military papers and records around 1998, both the Order of Leopold and the Victory Medal were still in the mailers in which they had been sent to him. Serendipitously, the envelope containing the Order of Leopold provides us with some additional, albeit sketchy, information about Earle Smith's career after the war, as is noted shortly below.

Upon his return from France at the conclusion of World War I, Earle Smith typed a brief memoir about his experiences overseas. His made the memoir much more voluminous through his use of numerous unmailed postcards as illustrations, which he had acquired while overseas. Earle Smith also had a handwritten field notebook, which were his instructional notes on gas-munitions identification, use, and safety. In 2003, Earle Spamer donated the memoir and the notebook to the Veterans History Project of the American Folklife Center at the Library of Congress. In 2007, these documents still were posted nearly in their entirety on the Veterans History Project website. A description of these documents will be found farther below.

Smith remained attached to the Army as a Reserve Officer at least until January 1925, as indicated by a memorandum found in his wartime gas munitions notebook; this was addressed to him as the Hotel York, Denver, Colorado.[958]

Post-war Activities

The Philadelphia city directories for 1919-1926 list Earle Smith residing at 820 South St. Bernard Street, his father's home. In the 1919/1920 directory, he is listed as "Smith Earle C USA", indicating his service in the U.S. Army. In the 1921-1926 directories he is listed as "Earl" C Smith, occupation civil engineer.

In the 1920 U.S. census Earle Smith and his daughter, Elisabeth, are listed as residing at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia. His occupation as given as mining engineer.

When Earle Smith received his decoration, the Order of Leopold, from the King of Belgium via clerks in Washington, D.C., the package was mailed to him in December 1921 at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia. His copy of the receipt—another copy was returned to the Adjutant General's Office to be sent in turn to the Belgian Ministry of Foreign Affairs—was signed at this address while he was home presumably for the Christmas holiday. The mailing envelope has his Philadelphia address crossed out, and a forwarding address inserted (the hand is not that of Earle Smith): "Salina, Utah, Box 11, Care L. B. Furman, Con. Engineer, D.R.G.R.R."[959] Why Smith did not carry the medal with him is not known. Photographs in the family collection[960] show him wearing the decoration on his captain's uniform, posing casually with people (family?) who have so far not been identified; the location is likewise not recognized and notably the people seem to be dressed for warmer weather.

Homestead — After his service in the Army, Earle Smith filed with the U.S. Land Office for a homesteaded in Colorado.[961] Family recollections had had Earle Smith going West to "rest up" after the war, but he clarified:

> I didn't go West to rest up—I could not find a job back East and several of us in the Service got the homestead bug in our heads during the bull sessions—I followed it up.[962]

He was given a Government allowance for the land in 1920, which was patented in 1926. Papers received from the effects of Elisabeth Smith Dewing in March 2007 included original documents that relate to the homestead, which locates the property. These documents are:

1) "Notice of Allowance" from U.S. Department of the Interior, U.S. Land Office, Glenwood Springs, Colorado, 10 December 1920, mailed to Earle Smith at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia. The form indicates:

   > Your Homestead Appl[ication]., Serial No. 017365, Receipt No. 2289535, for Lots 1, 2, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16[,] Sec. 13, T. 11 North, R 90 W; Lots 7, 8, 9, Section 18 Township 11 North, Range 89 West, 6th Principal Meridian, containing 618.83 acres, has been this day allowed, subject to your further compliance with law and regulations applicable thereto.

2) Postcard from U.S. Department of the Interior, U.S. Land Office, Glenwood Springs, Colorado, 15 February 1926, mailed to "Mr Earle C. Smith, Dixon, Wyoming". The card indicates:

[959] An L. B. Furman appears listed in various court docket records that are posted on Internet websites, which in the context of railroad affairs appears to be the Furman noted here; but otherwise nothing more has been established regarding this man.

[960] Spamer Family Historical Photos, nos. 3370-3372. Presumably the photos were taken sometime during 1922. One photo shows him without the decoration; in the other two he wears it. He may have been "ceremoniously" decorated at the time of these photos.

[961] Under the Stock-Raising Homestead Act of 1916 (39 Stat. 862, 43 U.S.C. 291), any person qualified to acquire land under general homestead laws (Act of 20 May 1862, 43 U.S.C. 161), could make "a stock-raising homestead entry" on "unappropriated public lands . . . designated by the Secretary of the Interior as 'stock-raising lands'." A person was required to reside on the land for three years and "to make permanent improvements upon the land . . . tending to increase the value of the [land] for stock-raising purposes of the value of not less than $1.25 per acre." It does not seem that Earle Smith ever raised stock on the property, but he did make "permanent improvements" by the construction of a cabin. He resided there, continuously it seems, during July-December 1925, but when else he may have spent time on the homestead is unknown. Under the provisions of the Act, he did not own the mineral rights to his property. (>>Synopsis of the homesteading conditions taken from the preamble of U.S. Supreme Court case, Watt v. Western Nuclear, Inc., 462 U.S. 36 (1983).)

[962] Earle C. Smith to J. Lathrop Mack (30 Jan 1949).

Upon returning from Europe at the conclusion of World War I, Earle Smith and fellow officers got the "homestead bug", and Earle followed up on it. The U.S. Government had instituted a program of public-lands homesteading under the Stock-Raising Homestead Act of 1916. Earle applied for a homestead and in 1920 received nearly 619 acres — about a square mile—in northern Colorado, six miles south of the Colorado–Wyoming boundary and about 28 miles north-northeast of Craig, Colorado. The property was positioned immediately southeast of Bakers Peak, at Little Emerson Peak.

In 1926, Smith had completed his obligations for residing on and utilizing the land, and he then received the government patent (right). (The signature of Calvin Coolidge is a secretarial hand and not actually the signature of the President.)

Glenwood Springs 017365 4—1007-R.

The United States of America,

To all to whom these presents shall come, Greeting:

WHEREAS, a Certificate of the Register of the Land Office at Glenwood Springs, Colorado, has been deposited in the General Land Office, whereby it appears that, pursuant to the Act of Congress of May 20, 1862, "To Secure Homesteads to Actual Settlers on the Public Domain," and the acts supplemental thereto, the claim of Earle C. Smith has been established and duly consummated, in conformity to law, for the Lots seven, eight and nine of Section eighteen in Township eleven north of Range eighty-nine west and the Lots one, two, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen and sixteen of Section thirteen in Township eleven north of Range ninety west of the Sixth Principal Meridian, Colorado, containing six hundred eighteen acres and eighty-three hundredths of an acre, according to the Official Plat of the Survey of the said Land, returned to the GENERAL LAND OFFICE by the Surveyor-General:

NOW KNOW YE, That there is, therefore, granted by the UNITED STATES unto the said claimant the tract of Land above described; TO HAVE AND TO HOLD the said tract of Land, with the appurtenances thereof, unto the said claimant and to the heirs and assigns of the said claimant forever; subject to any vested and accrued water rights for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other purposes, and rights to ditches and reservoirs used in connection with such water rights, as may be recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws, and decisions of courts; and there is reserved from the lands hereby granted, a right of way thereon for ditches or canals constructed by the authority of the United States. Excepting and reserving, however, to the United States all the coal and other minerals in the lands so entered and patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same pursuant to the provisions and limitations of the Act of December 29, 1916 (39 Stat., 862).

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States of America, have caused these letters to be made Patent, and the seal of the General Land Office to be hereunto affixed.

GIVEN under my hand, at the City of Washington, the EIGHTH day of FEBRUARY in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and TWENTY-SIX and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and FIFTIETH

(SEAL.)

By the President: Calvin Coolidge

By Dale B. Pugh, Secretary.

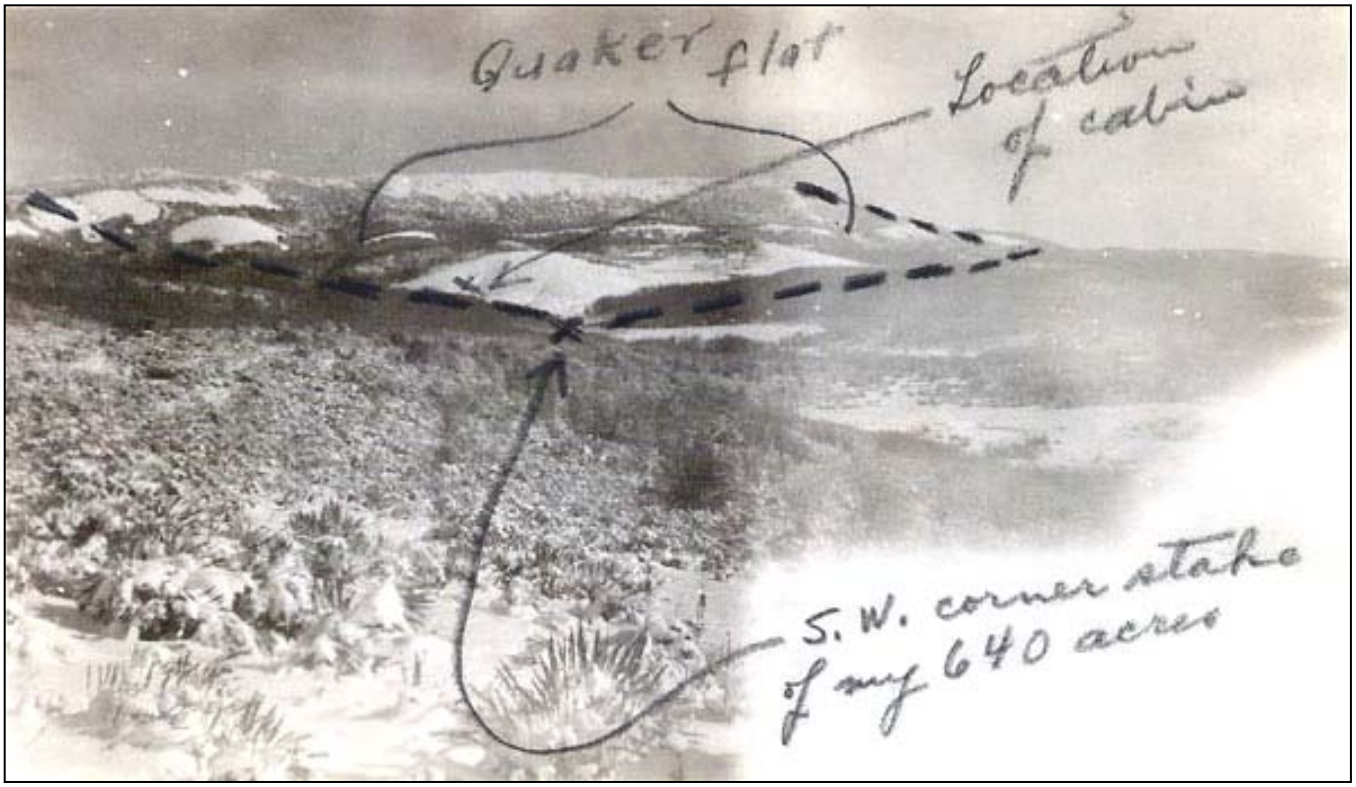
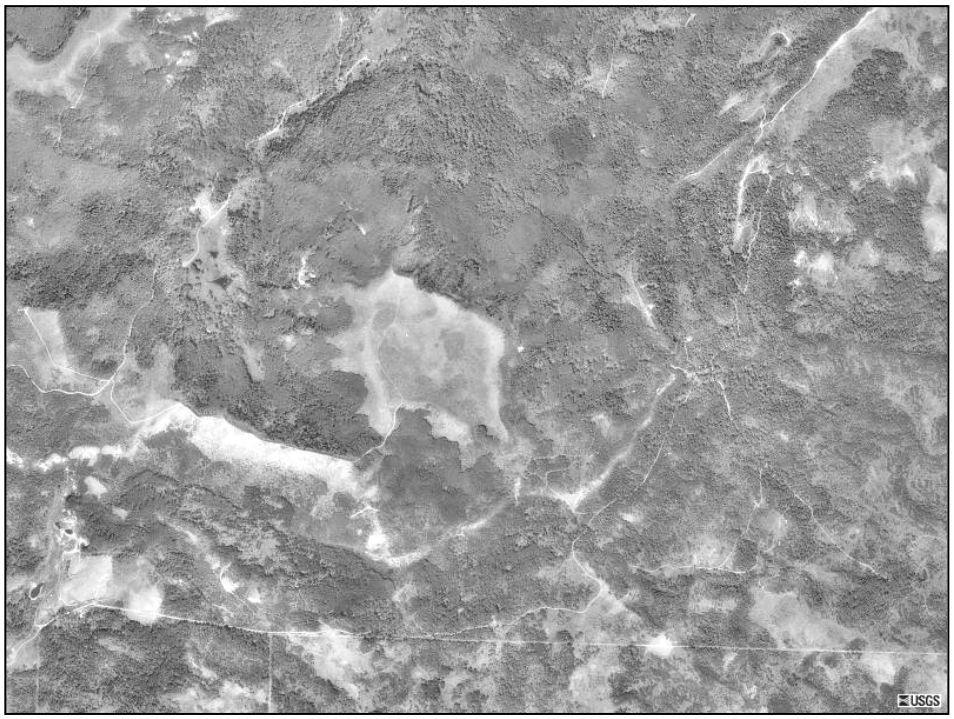
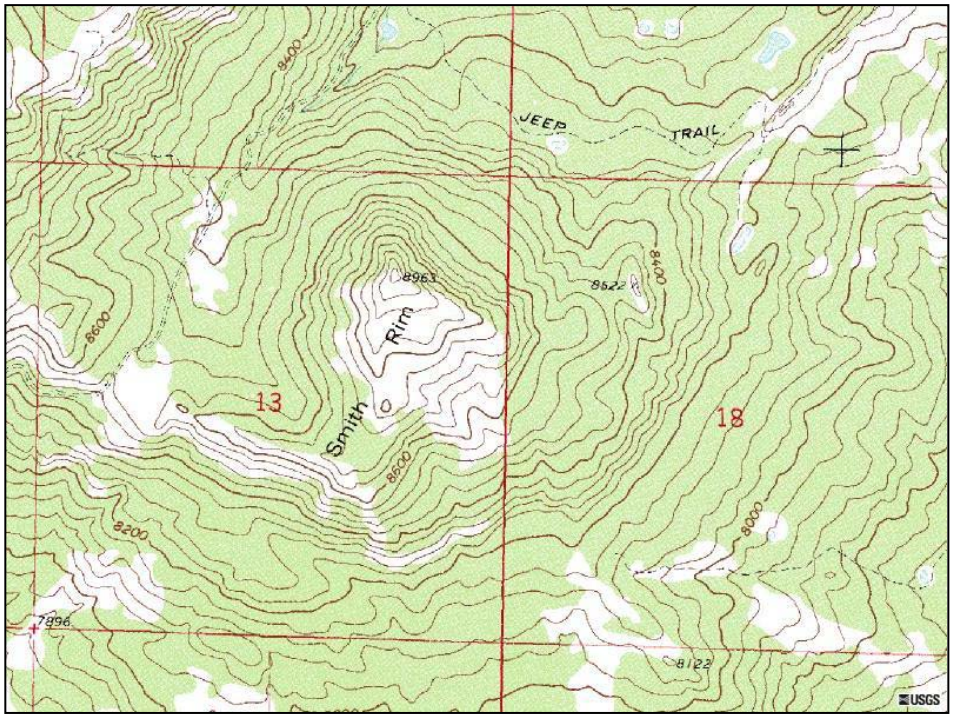
Recorder of the General Land Office.

RECORD OF PATENTS: Patent Number 974103



(Spamer 3385)





On the current Bakers Peak 1:24,000-scale U.S. Geological Survey topographic quadrangle, the area of Earle Smith's homestead straddles Section nos. 13 and 18, but situated mostly in Sec. 13 (compare to the aerial photograph, above, showing the same area). Note that the area is today named "Smith Rim". It seems likely that it was named for Earle Smith, but this has not been corroborated.

(Spamer2322)

Smith built a cabin on his homestead site, near the southwestern corner of the property, fashioned of aspen trees cut from a nearby location. A spring issuing from a sandstone cliff at the aspen grove provided a water supply. He apparently abandoned his cabin soon after the homestead was patented in 1926, and around 1950 he sold the property.

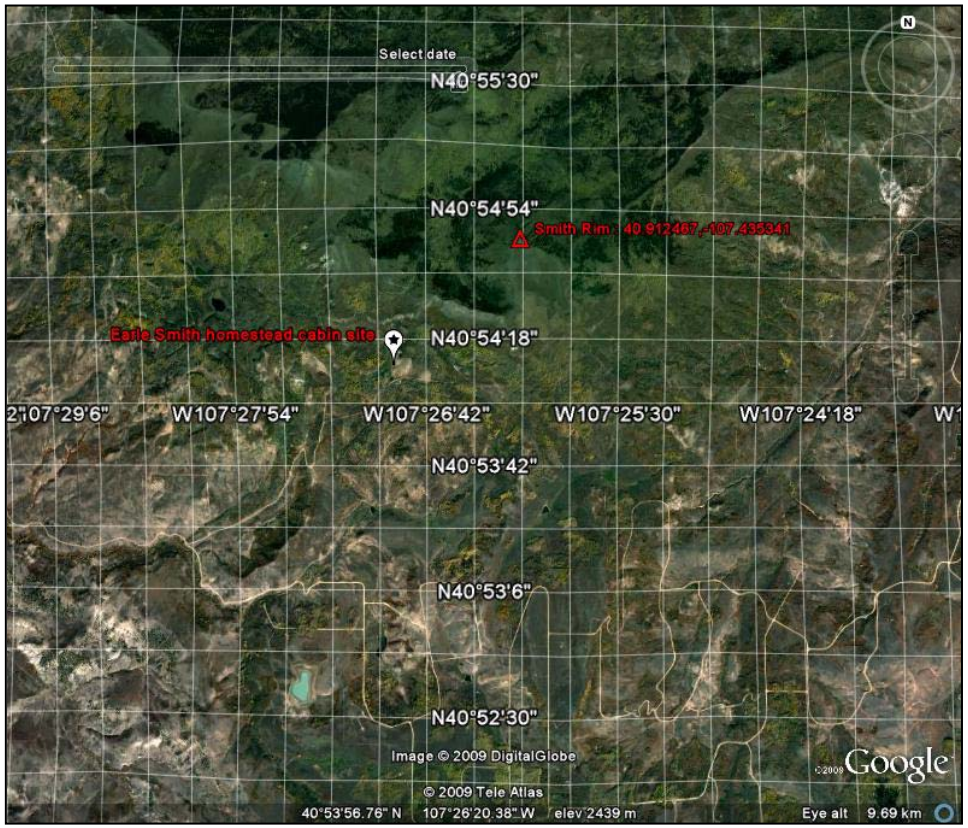
Earle C. Smith's homestead cabin overgrown and in ruins, ca. 1947. Earle Smith annotated this photo, "E.C.S.'s cabin—just a wreck—roof caved in".

Area map based on a collage of aerial photographs, showing the general location of Earle Smith's homestead in Colorado northwest of Denver, approximately 28 miles north-northeast of Craig, Colorado, approximately 140 miles northwest of Denver. The line of latitude on which the legend, "Earle Smith homestead cabin site", is written is the Colorado–Wyoming boundary.



Aerial photograph collages showing the relationship of the geographic feature, Smith Rim (upper marker), to the site of Earle Smith's homestead cabin site (lower marker). The two markers on these maps are approximately one mile apart. (See also the view on page II-456G, bottom.) Note the modern encroachment of roadways at the south of these views.

Aerial view of the site where once stood Earle Smith's homestead cabin (compare to illustration on page II-456G). Precisely where the cabin stood is not known, but Earle Smith's annotated photograph (see page II-456I, bottom) points to the base of the more prominent of two gullies incised in the hill, which would place the cabin by the small stand of vegetation left of center in the photo. The spring that Earle Smith mentioned is presumably located in one of the stands of vegetation. The ponds in this view are more recently built catchments, not from Earle Smith's time. North is to the lower-left.

Modern artificial reconstruction (top) of Earle Smith's ca. 1925 photograph (bottom) depicting most of his homestead. The camera position is about one mile distant.

A GoogleEarth aerial view of the area was reoriented to view the landscape from close to ground level, from the southwest, the same perspective as that in Earle Smith's photo. Using the computer, the landscape was then "flown over" until the same perspective was identified. The image was resized to approximate the same field of view seen in Earle Smith's photo. The quadrangle of the homestead covered approximately one square mile (the northern boundary is beyond the ridgeline).

The horizontal streaks in the top view are digital artifacts only. Furthermore, the topographic relief shown in the computer-generated oblique view, including the skyline, is a digital reinterpretation of the vertical aerial photo; it is not a precise photographic view.

Earle Smith's view was taken after a light snowfall (note foreground). Areas of exposed bedrock show snow more readily than vegetated areas. Although the appearance of the ridgeline may seem to be a distant mountain range, the total vertical relief of the landscape in this view is a few hundred feet.

> Patent for your homestead Entry No. 017365, is in this Office, and will be delivered to you upon surrender of the Register's Duplicate Certificate.

After building a cabin, he occupied the site for about six months during the summer and fall of 1925, probably as a condition of "improving" the site to establish his claim to it. During this time, he married his second wife, Dorothy, and, given her affection for outdoor activities, it is likely that they both lived at the homestead after their marriage.[963] On 8 February 1926 he was awarded the 618.83 acres in patent no. 974103 from the Glenwood Springs, Colorado, branch of the U.S. Land Office.[964]

The homestead was located about six miles south of the Colorado–Wyoming boundary and about 28 miles north-northeast of Craig, Colorado. The property was positioned immediately southeast of Bakers Peak, at Little Emerson Peak, occupying the equivalent of nearly one full Section in the Township and Range system of land apportionment; its acreage equaled approximately one square mile. On the current Bakers Peak 1:24,000-scale U.S. Geological Survey topographic quadrangle, the area is named "Smith Rim"; it seems likely that it was named for Earle Smith, but this has not been corroborated. A photograph[965] taken by Earle Smith and marked by him shows the boundaries of part of his property, as viewed from a distance to the southwest. A ridge forming the near skyline of the photo is indicated to be the divide between Willow Creek and Slater Creek.

Smith built a cabin on the site, near the southwestern corner of the property, fashioned of aspen trees cut from a nearby location. A spring issuing from a sandstone cliff was at the aspen grove. He apparently abandoned his cabin soon after the homestead was patented. He revisited it in the company of his daughter, Elisabeth, some ten or twenty years later, by which time the cabin roof had fallen in. Around 1950 he sold the property, but before doing so he ascertained that he was not releasing undiscovered mineral rights; specifically, uranium, which was an increasingly hot commodity at the time. Assay reports of three geological samples of phosphate rock, sent to Smith by the Henry E. Wood Assaying Company, Denver, in January 1950 seem to indicate the approximate time when he sold the property. The assay reports informed him of the percent content of phosphorus pentoxide (P_2O_5) contained in the samples. The compound has industrial uses, but in the context of Smith's interest it is a characteristic assayable indicator of the quality of uranium and vanadium ores. Smith had also purchased a Geiger counter[966] to survey the property. Obviously, he found nothing of significance. But why he did this is curious, because the homestead law specifically excluded mineral rights from the rights of the land owner; the patent form even specifies that all "coal and other minerals" in the land were reserved to the United States.

[963] Helen McCarraher (verbal communication ca. 2006) related that Earle Smith's daughter, Elisabeth (then known as Betty), had hoped that her newlywed father and stepmother would call for her, and that they would thereafter live together. That did not happen. Helen believed that it would have been unsuitable for the young Elisabeth, who was nine years of age, to live under such rude, rustic conditions as a remote mountain cabin with winter nearly arrived. How this in fact did disappoint Betty Smith is not known now, but one might imagine either that her independent temperament was already in play, or that this was an event that helped develop that temperament, which as we see in her biographical sketch herein served her admirably throughout her life.

[966] The Geiger counter is still in my possession, although it is no longer a functioning instrument.

Second Marriage — During the early 1920s in Colorado, Earle Smith met his second wife, Dorothy Greenlee of Denver, Colorado, whom he married 14 October 1925 during the period when he was improving his homestead, and there they spent their first months together. Unlike Elisabeth Drummond, his late first wife, we know much more about Dorothy Greenlee from a photo album Earle Smith left behind as well as through census and other research records relating to her family (see the notes about her, below). Many members of the Greenlee family, including Dorothy, were attracted to the outdoors and to camping and mountain hiking, thus she probably thought her first, rustic months of marriage to Earle as an appropriate adventure.[967]

In the 1930 census Earle and Dorothy Smith are listed as residing in a rental property on First West St., Coalville, Summit Co., Utah. He is listed there as "Earl E. Covington"; his occupation is "dam inspector". (One can imagine how this mistake was made. Perhaps the census taker was being told how Earle's name was spelled, such as, with emphasis: "Earle—E A R L E—Covington", and somehow overlooking "Smith".) Also see Additions & Corrections

U.S. Bureau of Reclamation — When the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation began the Boulder Canyon Project that built Hoover Dam (originally called Boulder Dam),[968] Earle Smith obtained a position with the Bureau. The construction of the dam and its appurtenant works was awarded to the Six Companies corporate consortium.[969] Earle Smith, as a government employee, was one of the men in charge of on-site direction and assuring that the work was done to specification. As a monumental government-funded project it was additionally distinguished for having been completed under budget and ahead of schedule. On the Boulder Canyon Project, Earle Smith was a Field Engineer. His name—"E.C. Smith"—is molded into the bronze commemorative plaque on the Arizona elevator tower atop the dam, which lists the principals who were in charge of various aspects of dam construction.[970]

According to family recollections and as confirmed by Earle Smith's daughter, Elisabeth[971], he had expressed pride in having convinced the principal engineers on the Boulder Canyon Project that the upstream cofferdam did not have to be entirely cased in concrete; that by judicious packing of fill the [968] Hoover Dam is in the Colorado River astride the Arizona-Nevada boundary near Boulder City, Nevada (the town first created for the construction workers). It is a concrete arch-type dam, built 1931-1936. The impoundment behind the dam is Lake Mead. Total storage capacity in the lake, at fill elevation of 1221.4 ft above mean sea level, is 28,537,000 acre-feet (water surface at maximum capacity is 1234.2 ft). The service spillway capacity, when used, is limited to 260,000 cubic feet per second. The structural height of the dam is 726.4 ft, hydraulic height (the part of total dam height useful for power-production) 576 ft; at its base it is 660 ft wide; it is 1,244 ft long across the 45-ft-wide crest; total volume of concrete in the dam is 4,400,000 cu. yd. The foundation of the dam is "hard and durable volcanic rock consisting of conglomerate and welded ash-flow tuff intruded by latites." I included this photo in small, eight-page booklet issued to commemorate the printing of two bibliographies about the Colorado River, of which only 200 of these booklets were printed: Earle Spamer, The Colorado River By the Book: A Seldom Seen Confession, Fretwater Press [Flagstaff, Arizona], 2003.

Before and after World War I, Earle Smith worked on various survey jobs in the West (see text). He captured photographs of a few of these jobs, and the rustic conditions under which they worked; some of them shown here, but unfortunately most do not have location information. (Top left) Smith working outside of a camp tent; note the tall stadia rods by the tent, and the surveyor's plane table to the left of the tent. (Top right) Smith (right) and two unidentified men outside a row of tents in neat, military alignment. (Center) Survey crew and camp cook visited by a woman with a dog; Earle Smith is the tallest man in center, rear. (Bottom, left and right) Between September 1921 and June 1922, Smith worked for the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad. He took these photos of rail cars that served as "Our Happy Home", as he annotated the photograph at left. At right is a photograph of the feast on Thanksgiving Day (24 Nov 1921); he wrote, "All ready! Lets go!"

When Earle Smith worked in Denver, Colorado, he met Dorothea ("Dorothy") Greenlee in Denver, the daughter of William Greenlee, a well-off quarry owner. They married on 14 October 1925, and for a short while they resided at Earle's Colorado homestead, until he returned to work in Denver in January.

cofferdam would hold against the flow of the Colorado River. Only the upstream face of the cofferdam—that part actually against the flow of the river—was in fact protected by concrete.

Earle Smith otherwise spoke little of his professional activities, at least with family members. His daughter, Elisabeth, did accompany him on a trip through the West in the late 1940s, when she was beginning her career in the U.S. Army. Photographs of them were taken in the vicinity of Hoover Dam (but no pictures are known to have been taken at the dam itself) and other sites of interest to Earle Smith in the West. There was at least at this time some family interest in his work, but no recollections or stories survive now.

Unfortunately, the records of the Six Companies corporation that built Hoover Dam also do not survive; records of construction activities and personnel are lost, so we cannot examine closely the activities in which Earle Smith was involved. Presumably, some of the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation's records may reveal some information, at least with respect to its role of oversight on the building of the dam and its appurtenant works; but a search for these records has not been made. We do have Earle Smith's own typewritten list of engineering experiences, which summarizes his responsibilities (as reproduced above), and his official transfer papers from the Boulder Canyon Project to the Central Valley Project. The only other contemporary documents that record his activities at Hoover Dam are a few newspaper notices, which are cited as summary notes compiled by Mary Belle Lontz in Boulder Dam Builders: [972]

1. Under "Boulder City Veterams" [sic], Lontz noted:

> Legion[973] men at Boulder City, from Las Vegas Review Journal. From the articles in the paper it is hard to determine which men in Boulder City were veterans who worked on the dam, so from the many articles in the paper I am using all the names—some of whom may not have worked on the dam, while most did.

In the 12 May 1932 issue of the Las Vegas Review Journal "Earl Smith" is listed with reference to the American Legion in Boulder City.[974]

Spellings are reproduced as they appear in Lontz's typescript, which may or may not faithfully reproduce the spellings as they appeared in her source materials. Most of her typescript is in summary form, not verbatim transcriptions from her sources. Numerous available references relate to the history of Hoover Dam; probably the most comprehensive modern history is by Joseph E. Stevens, Hoover Dam: An American Adventure (University of Oklahoma Press, Norman and London, 1988) and a compendium of oral histories by Andrew J. Dunar and Dennis McBride, Building Hoover Dam: An Oral History of the Great Depression (Twayne Publishers, New York, 1993). Aside from contemporary articles in various popular magazines and engineering journals, the only review about the spillways is a small booklet by Leslie C. Smith [no relation], Hoover Dam Spillway, with spillway photographs by Andrew Cattoir (no imprint, 1983). Other than the newspaper records cited here, no other publications have been found that mention Earle Smith. For a comprehensive bibliography that includes hundreds of articles and books about Hoover Dam, see in Earle E. Spamer, Bibliography of the Grand Canyon and the Lower Colorado River (Grand Canyon Association, website http://www.grandcanyonbiblio.org, first posted Jan 2000 and continuously updated; greatly expanded upon earlier print editions, 1981 and 1993). And for a more personal reflection by Earle Spamer, see The Colorado River By the Book: A Seldom Seen Confession (Fretwater Press, [Flagstaff, Arizona], 2004).

In the 13 January 1933 issue "Earl Smith" is again listed with reference to the American Legion.[975]

2. Also in Lontz's notes on veterans' records published in the Las Vegas Review Journal a note from the 6 April 1933 issue:

> Earl Smith, capt in chemical warfare overseas, works on spillway . . . .[976]

Smith first arrived on the Boulder Canyon Project on 11 August 1930, when he supervised surveying for several projects; specifically, the railroad that would supply materials to the construction site, construction sites in the new town of Boulder City, and the diversion tunnels at the dam site. As a Bureau of Reclamation employee, he represented the Government's interest in the project; he was not an employee of the Six Companies consortium that had won the contract for the project.

With regard to Earle Smith's work at the dam site, according to his résumé, he was in charge of the pilot bores that would align the mile-long diversion tunnels through which the Colorado River would be re-routed while the dam was being built. The so-called "pioneer tunnels" each would be expanded in stages to become tubes 56 feet in diameter, which then were lined with three feet of concrete. Eventually, constructing the dam's spillway tunnels—for which Earle Smith also was charged—would intercept two of the existing diversion tunnels, using part of their lengths to carry overflows from the lake impounded behind the dam to the river downstream of the dam. Once the rock barrier was in place to divert the river into the diversion tunnels, work began on the upstream and downstream cofferdams that would protect the construction site from Colorado River floods. The first load of "muck" for the rock barrier was dumped into the Colorado River on 13 November 1932. Smith later worked on the concrete spillways, the water intake towers, and the approach highway on the Arizona side of the construction site. Whatever else he might have done on the Boulder Canyon Project is not known now.

In all probability, Earle Smith resided in the bachelor engineers' quarters in Boulder City, which were reasonably comfortable accommodations compared to the crowded barrack dormitories where lived thousands of dam workers. Although many workers brought their wives and families to live in hasty government housing under often sweltering summer conditions in Boulder City, Earle Smith did not bring his wife, Dorothy; she probably returned to her native Denver while Earle was at Hoover Dam, although we have no record of that now. His daughter, Elisabeth, remained in Philadelphia, where she was in the care of her maiden aunt, Mabel Smith, as she had been since soon after her birth.

At the conclusion of construction on Hoover Dam, Earle Smith received an order in March 1936 by which he was reassigned to the Central Valley Project in California. The order read in part:

> . . . change in headquarters from Associate Engineer, Grade 12, Boulder Canyon Project, Boulder City, Nevada, (Public Works allotted funds), at a salary of $2900 per annum, to same at Central Valley Project, Kennett Dam, Redding, California . . ." [977]

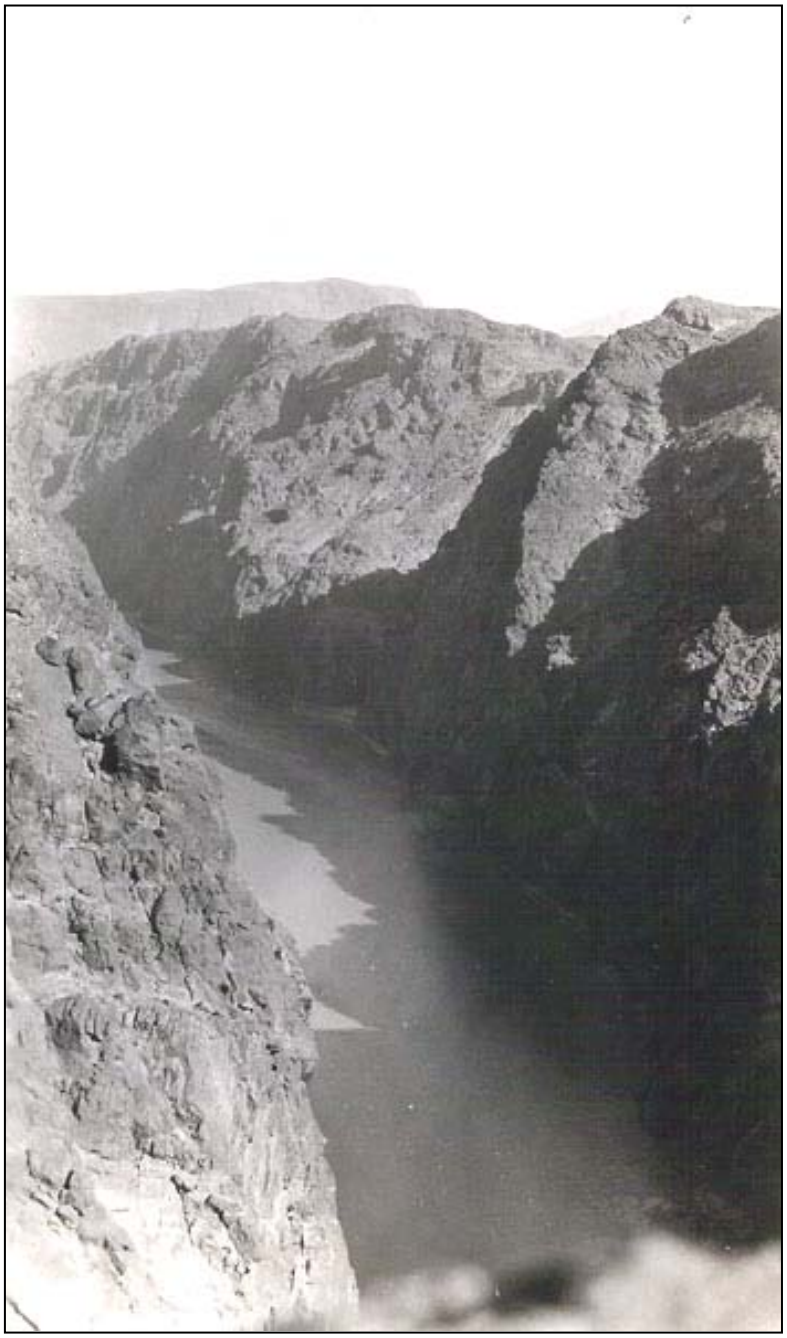
[977] Order No. 3886, 6 February 1936, received 8 March 1936 from Acting Chief, Division of Appointments, Office of the Secretary, U.S. Department of the Interior. The original document is with the Earle C. Smith papers and artifacts at Boulder City Museum and Historical Association, Boulder City, Nevada (accession no. 003.031, MS 122).

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, Earle and Dorothy Smith were residing in a rental property on First West St. in Coalville, Utah, when he worked as a "dam inspector". In 1928, Earle had landed his first professional-grade job with the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation. He would remain with the Bureau for the remainder of his career, and soon he would be working in his most responsible positions.



(Spamer 3384)

For years, the government had been working toward a grand plan for water-control and apportionment in the rivers of the West. The Colorado River finally was slated for a single, massive dam to be built in Black Canyon, astride the Arizona–Nevada boundary in a remote and climatologically unforgiving location.

Earle Smith was assigned to the Boulder Canyon Project (officially so named for its originally proposed location farther up-stream). Before the dam could be built, the site had to be prepared and a town constructed in the desert to house the thousands of men who would be working on the job. And a railroad had to be built from the nearest line, in the small, dusty, then little-known town of Las Vegas.

Smith photographed the dam site in 1930 (left). The dam, which would be known controversially for years as both Boulder Dam and Hoover Dam, is today officially named Hoover Dam.

As a Bureau employee, he was a government representative to assure that the work conducted by the Six Companies consortium was built to specifications. He first was responsible for surveying the railroad route to the town that would be named Boulder City, and for site placements within in the town. But this was only the precursor to the monumental job that lay immediately ahead—preparing the dam site itself. It was an engineering job on a scale the likes of which had never been seen before. First, the Colorado River had to be diverted.

High-altitude view straight down on the Hoover Dam vicinity; Arizona is on the upper side of the lake and river as seen in this view, Nevada on the larger portion of the photograph, below. The dam stands out prominently at upper left, with the four intake towers seen as small dots in the lake immediately upstream (to the left). The two spillways are rectangular markings on either side of the lake just upstream from the dam. The Arizona highway can be seen leaving the area to the upper right. The highway on the lower side of the photo leads to Boulder City (out of view). Today, a bridge is under construction just downstream from the dam, which will alleviate the heavy traffic flow that now crosses the dam.

When Earle Smith was a Field Engineer on the Boulder Canyon Project, between 11 August 1930 and 26 February 1936, according to his own résumé he had oversight of surveying the railroad route from the main line near Las Vegas, Nevada, to Boulder City, the townsite built originally to house the thousands of dam workers; site placement surveys in Boulder City; surveying the four pioneer tunnels that would divert the Colorado River around the dam site during construction; construction of the four intake towers and the two spillways; and surveying the Arizona highway that would connect the dam site with Kingman, Arizona. An oral recollection in the family also indicated that Earle Smith had some responsibility with the design of the upstream cofferdam, which would block the Colorado River and re-route the flow through the four diversion tunnels.

The four pioneer tunnels were 12-x-12 foot guide tunnels, each nearly a mile long, that wound though the canyon walls to lay the way for four 50-foot diameter, concrete-lined diversion tunnels that would allow the Colorado River to flow around the dam site during construction. The outlets of two diversion tunnels are still used as outflow portals for the spillways; the other two diversion tunnel outlets are used for the powerhouse by-pass tubes. These can be used in combination at any time that Lake Mead has filled to capacity, or needs to be drawn down for any reason. The upstream ends of the four diversion tunnels were blocked off and sealed prior to the filling of Lake Mead; they now are submerged about 700 feet below the lake.

The intake towers of Hoover Dam draw water from Lake Mead. The force of gravity allows the water to plunge at an angle through large-scale piping to the power houses on the downstream side of the dam. Water passes through the turbines, generating electrical energy that is distributed throughout the Southwest, or it may be diverted as necessary through the national power grid. (U.S. Bureau of Reclamation photos and University of Nevada at Las Vegas)

Steel gates rise (above right, seen reclined here) when the level of Lake Mead reaches them, so as to contain power-producing water as long as possible within the lake. If the lake spills over the gates, or if they are lowered, water cascades into the spillway, descending into the tunnel (left) that descends at a steep angle to one of the original diversion tunnels, which then empty into the Colorado River below the dam.

When the dam was visited in October 2007, the Southwest was in the midst of a years-long drought. The water level in Lake Mead was down 111 feet, leaving the spillways entirely exposed (as noticed in background in upper right photo).

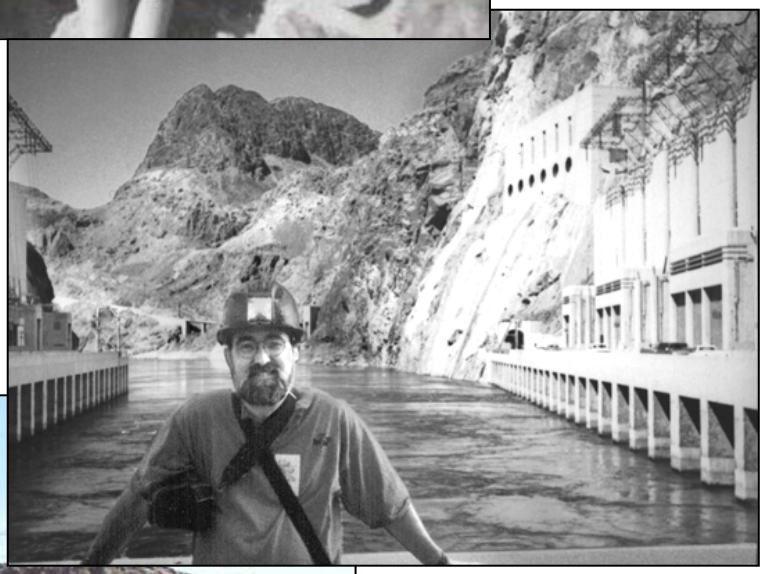
Earle Smith returned to Hoover Dam circa 1947 in the company of his sister, Mabel (left) and daughter, Elisabeth, who then was a 1st Sergeant in the U.S. Army.



Earle Spamer on the powerhouse deck at Hoover Dam when he and Jane Anderson visited in 1998.

"Kennett Dam" was later renamed Shasta Dam. Unfortunately, we have no further information about Earle Smith's work on the Central Valley Project other than a commemorative photograph taken 22 December 1944, where he is shown with construction administrators posing with the last bucket of concrete poured at Shasta Dam.[978]

When Earle Smith worked on Shasta Dam, he and his wife, Dorothy, resided in Redding, Shasta Co., California. California voter registration rolls list them in Redding No. 1 Precinct (1938) and in the Toyon Precinct (1940, 1944). Both Earle and Dorothea were registered in the Democratic party at these times.

Family photographs taken in March 1945 show Earle and Dorothy Smith, and Earle's visiting daughter, Elisabeth, at the Smith home in Carlsbad, New Mexico, and at the site of the Alamagordo Dam on the Pecos River northwest of Fort Sumner, New Mexico.[979] Today the dam is known as Sumner Dam. It was built as an earthfill dam during 1936-1937, and in 1954-1956 it was enlarged and improved by raising its height 16 feet, increasing its spillway capacity, and constructing an emergency spillway. Earle Smith apparently worked on plans for the reconstruction of the dam at Bureau of Reclamation offices in Carlsbad as well as at the dam site. Further substantiating this supposition is a temporary address written in his daughter's address book: c/o Lewis F. Mead, Fort Sumner, New Mexico. These family photos just mentioned also show Earle Smith and his wife, Dorothy, standing outside a Carlsbad home with the street number "1020", which presumably was their home (the street name is not known). In November 1946, Dorothy died, and at the end of May 1948, Earle retired.

What duties Smith had performed between the completion of Shasta Dam and his retirement in 1948 has not been determined with certainty. However, family photographs taken in March 1945 show Earle and Dorothy Smith, and Earle's visiting daughter, Elisabeth, at the Smith home in Carlsbad, New Mexico, and near the Alamogordo Dam on the Pecos River northwest of Ft. Sumner, New Mexico.[980] Today the dam is known as Sumner Dam.[981] It was built 1936-1937

Shasta Dam was built 1938-1945 in the Sacramento River, 12 mi. northwest of Redding, California, as one of three principal components of the Central Valley Project. The impoundment behind the dam is Shasta Lake, covering 46 sq. mi.; volume 4,266,000 acre-ft. The service spillway capacity at water elevation of 1065 ft is 186,000 cubic feet per second (water surface at maximum capacity is 1067 ft). The structural height of the dam is 602 ft, hydraulic height (the part of total dam height useful for power-production) 522.5 ft; at its base it is 543 ft wide; it is 3,460 ft long across the 30-ft-wide crest; total volume of concrete in the dam is 6,270,000 cu. yd. The foundation of the dam is "hard, tough, durable greenstone; usually hard and sound beneath streambed. In abutments, decay of the geologically ancient formation penetrates deeply along many joints and occasional small crush zones." [981] The Pecos River is part of the drainage basin of the Colorado River of Texas, which drains to the Gulf of Mexico. Information on present-day Sumner Dam and Lake is as follows (U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, http://www.usbr. gov/dataweb/html/carlsbad.html, accessed 7 May 2007):

"Sumner Dam and Lake Sumner are on the Pecos River about 250 river miles north of Carlsbad and about 16 miles northwest of Fort Sumner, New Mexico. The dam is a zoned earthfill structure 164 feet high with a volume of 2,250,000 cubic yards.

and in 1954-1956 was enlarged and improved. It is likely that Earle Smith, before retiring from the Bureau of Reclamation, worked at Bureau offices in Carlsbad when plans for the reconstruction of the dam were being prepared.

The address of book of Earle Smith's daughter, Elisabeth Smith, preserves a different sequence of addresses. Earle's address in Fort Sumner, New Mexico, is crossed out and Redding, California, is written in its place. Thereafter she recorded retirement addresses for her father (see below).

Around 1998, artifacts and documents relating to the engineering career of Earle Smith were given to me by his daughter, Elisabeth Smith Dewing. Many of these items I donated in 2003 to the Boulder City Museum and Historical Association, Boulder City, Nevada, where they comprise the Earle Covington Smith Collection (No. 003.031, and MS 122); see farther below for an itemization.

Retirement — Earle Smith retired from the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation on 31 May 1948. His daughter's address book supersedes her father's Redding, California, address with Box 478, Sanger, California and, written in the same pen, Box 36, Kittredge, Colorado. The Kittredge address is also more fully elaborated: "Earle C. Smith (Eve 020J3) (Bear Creek Cts. Box 36) Kittredge, Colo." In 1949, Earle Smith noted in correspondence from his home in Oceanside, California, that "I still have some of my mail addressed to 611 K Street, Sanger. I have some things stored there with a friend (Lewis F. Mead). He forwards my mail from there." [982]

In 1949 at least, and probably through most of the 1950s, Smith resided in Oceanside, San Diego Co., California. By February 1960, he resided at 182 Central Ave., Apt. 3, Pacific Grove, Monterey Co., California. In 1964 his address was 1118 Del Monte Blvd., Pacific Grove. Shortly later he moved east to live with his daughter, and after she married in 1965 he moved to live with his sister, Elouise, who lived in the household of her daughter and son-in-law, Helen and Wilbur Mummert, 24 Halycon Drive, Garfield Park, New Castle, New Castle Co., Delaware.

Earle Smith's death was noticed briefly in the Lehigh Alumni Bulletin, which reported that "Until the time of his death he maintained an active interest in Lehigh, and was present at a number of our class reunions."[983] His remains were cremated; the ashes were buried in the Smith–Spamer family lot, no. 715, River Section, West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Bala Cynwyd, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

After more than five years on the Boulder Canyon Project, Earle Smith was transferred by the Bureau of Reclamation to the Central Valley Project in California, to work on Kennett Dam, which later was redesignated Shasta Dam.

UNITED STATES
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY
WASHINGTON

MAR 8 - 1936

February 6, 1936.

Mr. Earle C. Smith
Bureau of Reclamation

Sir:

Your change in headquarters from Associate Engineer, Grade 12, Boulder Canyon Project, Boulder City, Nevada, (Public Works allotted funds),at a salary of $2900 per annum, to same at Central Valley Project, Kennett Dam, Redding, California, has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Reclamation, effective on the day following the last day of service on the project from which transferred. Payable from funds allotted under Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935.

The Secretary has also approved payment of travel expenses in accordance with existing orders and regulations and the use of your own conveyance, if you so desire. Not for the convenience of the employee.

Under this appointment you are subject to the provisions of the Retirement Act and the deductions prescribed therein will accordingly be made from your salary.

Respectfully,

Guy H. Numbers

Acting Chief, Division of Appointments.

Through the Commissioner of Reclamation

Order No. 3886.

Shasta Dam (left) was built 1938-1945 in the Sacramento River, 12 mi. northwest of Redding, California; one of three principal components of the Central Valley Project of the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation. The impoundment behind the dam is Shasta Lake.

As with his work on Hoover Dam, Earle Smith was a representative of the Bureau of Reclamation, working as a Field Engineer to assure that the dam was built to specifications. His experience in surveying and concrete construction again placed him in a responsible position.

Frank Crowe was the general manager in charge of the construction project on Shasta Dam, having made for himself a substantial reputation in the same position at Hoover Dam a decade earlier.

Earle Smith stands 2nd to the left of the sign (in dark banded hat). This was a ceremonial photo of U.S. Bureau of Reclamation representatives, standing on the dam crest. (More photos, with different signs, were taken of other dam workers and administrators.) The "Totem" is in background.

(Spamer 2434)

(Spamer 3296)

After the Shasta Dam project, Earle Smith went to the Bureau of Reclamation Office in Carlsbad, New Mexico (left, outside the office with his visiting daughter, Elisabeth). There he apparently worked on plans to upgrade the existing Alamagordo Dam on the Pecos River northwest of Fort Sumner, New Mexico. (Today the dam is called Sumner Dam.) In November 1946, Earle's wife, Dorothy, died (right, center, seen in Carlsbad with Elisabeth).

(Spamer 3299)

On 31 May 1948, Earle Smith retired from the Bureau of Reclamation and his engineering career. He moved between several places in Califonia and Colorado, finally settling in Oceanside, California (below, left), but occasionally traveled with family members including his daughter, Elisabeth, and visited places of interest in his career. (Below, right) Earle Smith visiting Shasta Dam in 1948.

Additional Records of Earle Covington Smith:
Field Notebook and Memoir from World War I

In 2002, I prepared a descriptive inventory of Earle C. Smith's notebook and wartime record that had been given to me around 1998 by his daughter, Elisabeth Smith Dewing. These in turn I donated in April 2003 to the Veterans History Project of the American Folklife Center, Library of Congress. Nearly the entire collection has been digitized and may be viewed on the American Folklife Center website.[984] However, some of the arrangement of the original memoir has been modified, and a few items were not digitized; the description below accounts for the order in which the memoir was preserved when it was delivered to me around 1998.

The Veterans History Project donation contained:

1) Handwritten notebook of chemical warfare munitions, tactics, and safety; used in the field in France, 1918-1919. (The notebook is described below.)

2) Typewritten memoir of experiences in France, accompanied by contemporary postcards, pamphlets, and civilian and military maps; prepared in 1919 at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Maryland. (The contents of the memoir are described below. The typewritten text by E. C. Smith is transcribed in full, farther below.)

Field Notebook

Leather 3-ring notebook, 7-1/4 x 4-1/2 inches.

Pocket inside front cover gilt stamped, "EARLE COVINGTON SMITH". Address handwritten on inside front cover: "820 St. Bernard St. South, Phila. Pa. or, [crossed out] A14 Taylor Hall, S. Bethlehem, Pa." This indicates that the notebook loose-leaf cover had originally been with Smith when he was an engineering student at Lehigh University, in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania. The Philadelphia address was a Smith family residence.

Contents of notebook contain loose materials in pocket inside front cover; loose-leaf rings hold 26 dividers (A to Z) and 126 leaves, some of them blank.

Pocket inside front cover contains 23 loose leaves. Also in the inside pocket is a carbon copy of a 20 January 1925 memorandum to Capt. Earle C. Smith, CW-ORC, Hotel York, Denver, Colo., from Maj. G. M. Halloran, chemical Warfare Officer, Headquarters Eighth Corps Area, Fort Sam Houston, Texas, regarding "Training of Reserve Officers, B. A. Group".

Notebook contents relate to chemical-warfare tactics and procedures, all in the hand of E. C. Smith. Material includes information on both American and German munitions. Apparently this was Smith's reference book compiled for field and training use during his service in Europe during World War I.

Memoir

Earle Smith's typewritten account contains seventeen leaves that recall in summary his record of experiences in France during 1918-1919. These are supplemented and interleaved by maps, pamphlets, and a large number of commercial postcards mounted on leaves that illustrate scenes in the parts of Europe through which Smith had traveled during the war. Most of the postcards had been corner-mounted by Smith using water-adhesive cloth circles (usually used as "reinforcements" for punch holes in loose-leaf papers). The integrity of these mounts remained good in 2003, and no attempt was made to remove the postcards from their backings. Commercial and military maps also are interleaved throughout the sequence of leaves.

The document as a whole contains a total of 159 leaves and separate items. Two binders were used; these were re-used U.S. Army issue cloth-covered loose-leaf binders; stenciled on the cover of each was "Proof Officers Hand-Book 156 Mobile Artillery Ammunition", which has nothing to do with Earle Smith's record. Prior to sending the diary to the Library of Congress, I rehoused all leaves and items in pH-neutral folders and archival sleeves as appropriate, retaining their original order. The sheets also were interleaved with pH-neutral sheets because of the acidity of the original papers and the use of adhesives to affix postcards to leaves.

The original order of leaves, and the inventory of other items included in the binders, is as follows. The "typescript pages" interleaved in the memoir refer to Earle Smith's typewritten account of his experiences in France (17 leaves total). On the website presentation of the Smith Collection on the Veterans History Project website, the Library of Congress removed some of the leaves and other items from their original order; for example, official documents are grouped together, as are maps. Some items were omitted from the digitized collection.

The following list records the original order of leaves and items as I found them when the collection was received from Elisabeth Smith Dewing. Items marked with asterisks () are items that are omitted from the American Folklife Center's digitized collection as viewed on their website.

The following is the complete text of Earle Smith's typewritten account that reviews his military career, particularly his experiences in France during the Great War (World War I). It was written specifically as a historical memento for his daughter, Elisabeth, who was then three years of age. The original typescript is undated, but the final paragraph identifies that it was written in 1919 while Smith was stationed at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Maryland, shortly after his return from France.

Although the account was accompanied by printed maps (see the inventory, above), none of them were written on or otherwise annotated. Spellings and punctuation, including capitalization, are those of the original; handwritten corrections, by Smith, are incorporated; and "sic" is used by me only to indicate usage that could be construed to be a typographical error on my part, as transcriber. French place names are written as they appear in the typescript; many lack the diacritical marks that should be with them. Page breaks in the original typescript are indicated by a vertical line followed by the page number as a subscript numeral, |$_1$ thus.

[Corrections by the writer.]

For once I am going to anticipate my daughters questions - I am going to put down in these notes the things that I think will interest her and altho I know that they will bring forth another string of "whys" I will at least have a lead on her at the start.

In April 1916 I went to Youngstown, Ohio as an engineer on construction work for the H. Koppers Co. and I was still there when the U.S. was forced to go to war. I had felt sure that it was coming and having had considerable experience in plants manufacturing shell I decided to request a commission in the Ordnance Officers Reserve Corps. The request was made in January or February 1917, and I got what I asked for, a first lieutenantcy in May.

I was called into active service June 12th 1917 and ordered to Washington. I resigned my position altho Jack Walsh who was Chief Field Engineer for the company prophesized that it would all be over in six months and that I would be back after my job.

I had purchased my equipment in Pittsburg and went directly to report to the Chief of Ordnance. Actually I never saw him for some months but one of his assistants gave me the "once over" and I was off to Baltimore the same day and reported to Capt. Claud Thummel as an assistant.

Lt. Rich soon took Capt. Thummels place as Inspector of Ordnance at the Bartlett Hayward Co's plant.

Four weeks after entering the service I was myself the Inspector and the war was on for sure. I played the game as best I could and when the President of that concern and I got together there were some warm sessions.

My orders came from Washington and I did as they said, with the result that, as I had predicted, there would be a new I. of O at the Bartlett- Hayward Co.

[Spamers] It was lots of fun while it lasted. I enjoyed seeing the Spamers and other friends who lived in Baltimore. Woodruff and Chris Evenson were my assistants at Bartlett Hayward and were good friends.

My next orders took me in the right direction, for I went to the Army Proving Ground at Sandy Hook, N.J. This was toward the latter part of July 1917.

Col. Ruggles was Commanding Officer, Major Phillips was Administrative Officer, there were two other colonels, one or two captains and several lieutenants on the post. I was, I believe, the third Reserve Officer to be stationed

Upon his return from the war in Europe, Earle Smith was reassigned to Aberdeen Proving Ground, Maryland. There he typed up a brief memoir of his experience as a momento for his daughter, Elisabeth, who then was three years of age. (The first page is illustrated at left.) He illustrated the memoir profusely with postcards and maps he had obtained in France (an example page is seen below).

In 2003, Earle Spamer gave the memoir to the American Folklife Center's Veterans History Project, in the Library of Congress. It may be examined online at the Veterans History Project website (see p. II-454C and text).

[985] As noted, the original typescript (as well as the voluminous ephemeral remainder of the memoir) was donated to the Veterans History Project at the Library of Congress in 2003 (Earle Smith Collection, AFC/2001/001/12817. Nearly the entire collection has been digitized and may be viewed at http://l see correction below b/loc.natlib/afc2001001.12817 (last accessed 19 Dec 2007). The 1919 date of the diary is obtained from the last page of the typescript, where Smith mentions that he is returned from France and stationed at Aberdeen Proving Ground "waiting for the first of August". [986] The Bartlett-Hayward Division began in 1837 Baltimore, Maryland, as Hayward & Friend, stovemakers; the company's name changed several times as it expanded into plumbing, architectural iron, locomotives, and steam boilers. During World War I the regular production at Bartlett-Hayward ceased and the company produced shrapnel shells, for which the company received a Certificate of Merit from the U.S. Government "For excellence in production of time and detonating fuses and complete rounds of shrapnel". In 1936, Bartlett-Hayward became a division of the Koppers Co. (later the Pittsburgh-based Koppers Industries), which coincidentally was the same company for which Earle Smith worked in Ohio in 1916). The Koppers Co. site in Baltimore covers eight acres in Southwest Baltimore, not far from the Inner Harbor, lying between McHenry, Scott, Poppleton, and Clifford Sts. In 2002, the site was under consideration for redevelopment and was the subject of impact studies and planning statements. (>> Ferdinand C. Latrobe, Iron Men and Their Dogs, I. R. It was lots of fun while it lasted. I enjoyed seeing the Spamers and other friends who lived in Baltimore.[987] Woodruff and Chris Evenson were my assistants at Bartlett Hayward and were good friends.

My next orders took me in the right direction, for I went to the Army Proving Ground at Sandy Hook, N.J.[988] This was toward the latter part of July 1917.

Col. Ruggles was Commanding Officer, Major Phillips was Administrative Officer, there were two other colonels, one or two captains and several lieutenants on the post. I was, I believe, the third Reserve Officer to be stationed |2 there.

The work was extremely interesting, for I saw everything new that pertained to field and heavy artillery; the old seacoast mounts, the new anti-aircraft mounts; the French 75 m/m and 155 m/m Guns and Howitzer.

I finally became Proof Officer, testing ammunition made by the various manufacturers.

Many other officers began to arrive and I soon found myself running a school for men who were to become non-commissioned officers.

As usual I became much better informed when instructing others.

Due to the limited quarters on the post I lived at the Pannaci Hotel at Seabright.[989] This was enjoyable but rather expensive so I was glad when some of the regular officers left and I got a room at the Brick House (Officers quarters on the post).

[988] Sandy Hook is the northern extremity of the New Jersey coast, a peninsula extending some seven miles that separates the Atlantic Ocean from Sandy Hook Bay, part of Raritan Bay at the mouth of the Raritan River. It oversees the entrance to New York harbor, the outlet of the Hudson River. Sandy Hook is, today, with the exception of the U.S. Coast Guard base at the extremity of the peninsula, a part of the Gateway National Recreation Area under the National Park Service. The shipping channel into New York harbor passes close by Sandy Hook, before turning northward into the harbor; shipping does not pass through the middle of the harbor entrance. The Sandy Hook lighthouse, still operational, has been present since 1764; it was defended by British loyalists during the American Revolution. Sandy Hook was first militarily fortified in 1813, during the War of 1812. The Sandy Hook Proving Ground was first established in 1874; it is now mostly ruins and sites on the Atlantic shore east of the former main administration area Fort Hancock (built 1892, declared surplus by the U.S. Army in 1974). The ruins of gun platforms and test stands are all that remain of the proving ground; the batteries and other structures that still stand are part of the coastal and harbor defenses. The proving ground was used 1874-1919, and it was first used to deploy materiél to overseas depots during the Spanish-American War, in 1898. At Sandy Hook, munitions were proved by firing them downrange several miles, southward along the Atlantic shore. The proof battery where Earle Smith had worked was built in 1900. As described in a "Sandy Hook Proving Ground" informational brochure (National Park Service, ca. 2006): "The eastern end of the new Proof Battery was designed for test firing machine guns, field and siege guns, and howitzers. The largest guns, 14-inch caliber, were test fired at the west end of the battery. In the middle were mounted a variety of 1-inch and up to 12-inch caliber guns. A gantry crane on railroad tracks behind the battery mounted and removed the guns and carriages. Behind the crane tracks were traverses: a line of six 12-foot thick concrete walls with arched niches for overhead protection. When a gun was fired on the Proof Battery, the gun crew stood behind these walls in the niches in case the gun blew up during testing. From atop a 50-foot observation tower behind the traverses, ordnance personnel could easily observe artillery hits on targets down range and out to sea." In 1919, operations were transferred from Sandy Hook to the larger, and more rural, Aberdeen Proving Ground on Chesapeake Bay, in Maryland. (>> National Park Service informational brochures; Randall Gabrielan, Images of America: Sandy Hook, Arcadia Publishing, Charleston, South Carolina, 1999.)

[989] The Pannaci Hotel was a family-operated hotel in the coastal town of Seabright, New Jersey. It had been in operation for some time, as it is noticed at least in 1889 in Wolverton's Atlas of Monmouth County, New Jersey, by Chester Wolverton and Forsey Breou (Chester Wolverton, New York, 1889).

We would work up until Saturday noon and then take the steamer "Ordnance" to New York.[990] Then I would proceed to Philadelphia and come back on a sleeper Sunday night and catch the boat at 7:15 on Monday morning.

The personnel increased rapidly and soon the preparations were started for a Proving Ground for the mobile artillery in Maryland.

A site on the Chesapeake Bay near Aberdeen was selected and the construction work was started in October I think.[991]

We received instructions to prepare for the move between Christmas and New Years Day. It was a cold winter and with a good wind blowing and the thermometer at 10 deg. below we loaded the guns on flat cars; there were several train loads.

I went home for New Years day and then to Aberdeen on the second of January.[992]

The material arrived in good shape, work started unloading the guns and ammunition in weather just as cold as it had been at Sandy Hook. The fact that the ground was frozen helped some, for when the thaw came later on, the only things that moved were mules, and |3 men; tractors and trucks were of no use.

I was in charge of all the guns and materials, most of it are absolete [sic] now, the guns of French and British design have pushed the antiquated guns of the U.S. into the "bone yard".

We had a jolly, hard working lot of officers and men and many difficulties were over come.

You would be cussing mad at some officer who got in your way during the days work but you would smoke and play cards with him in the evening.

Lord, Goodaire, Freeman, P.O.E. Johnson, Fred Fish, Fullam and I lived in hunting lodge which had belonged to E.C. Converse a New York Millionaire.[993]

[990] The U.S. Army's Quartermaster General Department operated a steamer in the environs of New York harbor, which carried freight and passengers between the several forts of the harbor, including Fort Hancock at Sandy Hook, New Jersey. One writer referred to this steamer as "an overgrown and comfortable tug boat" (Austin C. Lescarboura, "Experiences in Wireless Telephoning", Electrician and Mechanic, Apr 1912, p. 277). This steamer, the Ordnance, or others of the same name, plied the New York waters since at least the early 1890s.

[991] Aberdeen Proving Ground was established when the Sandy Hook Proving Ground was determined to be not large enough to conduct expanded munitions testing so close to busy New York harbor and its populous suburbs. Aberdeen, comprised of farmland and swamps, was selected for its location near industrial and manufacturing centers yet (then) sufficiently rural in terms of population density. The location, fronting along 20 miles of Chesapeake Bay, was established by Col. Colden L. Ruggles, Commanding Officer at Sandy Hook. Farmers were paid about $200 per acre for their land; displaced were about "3,000 persons and 12,000 horses, mules, sheep, cows, and swine", and some family cemeteries. The post was established 20 Oct 1917 and officially opened 14 Dec 1917. On 28 Mar 1918, the Ordnance Department reorganized the proving ground, establishing four departments in the munitions testing process: Proof, Service, Administration, and Military. [Earle Smith worked within the Proof department.] After the war, Aberdeen Proving Ground was used for munitions research and development. (>> U.S. Army, "Aberdeen Proving Ground", website http://www.apg.army.mil/apghome/sites/about/history.asp, accessed 18 Jan 2006.)

[992] "On 2 January 1918, during a blinding snowstorm, Mrs. Edward V. Stockham fired the first gun at the Aberdeen Proving Ground, and despite the snow, within 2 hours, the regular work of ammunition acceptance testing was underway." Mrs. Stockham was the wife of Maj. Edward V. Stockham; the major was influential in the selection of Aberdeen as the site of the new proving ground. (>> U.S. Army, "Aberdeen Proving Ground", website http://www.apg.army.mil/apghome/sites/about/history.asp, accessed 18 Jan 2006.)

He left some big chairs, tables and a fine fireplace, for us to enjoy.

About February, Goodaire, Winslow and I received notice from Col. Ruggles that we had been recommended for foreign service.

I was delighted, I wanted something a little closer up to the war, and had requested a transfer into the Tank Corps.

Three months passed and no orders came, someone in Washington having lost the papers. But at last in April they did arrive and we left for New York.

After a four days wait we sailed on the S.S. Powatan, formerly the Hamburg, one of the Kaisers favorite boats. We anchored off Ambrose Light on the last day of April and sailed May 1st. We were jointe [joined] by about four other transports and a cruiser and were on our way to France. There was no excitement except the boat drills and target practise [sic] of the gun crews. We had four five inch guns and several one pounders.

After we were out some eight days we had to sleep in our clothes with life belts handy and had to get out on deck before daybreak, every officer was a lookout for submarines.

We never saw any, but rumors were plentiful and we waited eagerly for the destroyers which joined us when about three days out of port.

One day several of them dashed off and dropped $|_4$ some depth bombs, they at least thought they had seen a sub.

When these charges exploded there was a jar felt and it sounded as if someone had dropped a heavy steel plate down in the hold. We entered the mouth of the Gironde River on the afternoon of May 13th.

The next morning we docked at Pauillac, a small town with a dock, narrow gauge railroad and a small blast furnace. Here we saw the first of the many German prisoners we were to see in France.

They were well fed evidently and seemed quite contented. Their french guards did not make them work as hard as we thought they ought to. However, I afterwards noticed that the French dont work as hard as we do either.

The trip from Pauillac to Bordeaux was made on a small river steamer, that is, the unattached or casual officers were transported in this fashion while the troops on board took their first ride in the cars marked 8 chevaux–40 hommes.

The river was very pretty and the people who lived on its bank came out of their houses to wave to us.

Bordeaux is an attractive city but we did not have a great deal of time to spend there, we were sent to a camp about two miles out of the city and in a few days were ordered to proceed to Blois.

While at Bordeaux I heard my first real cook-coo and a bird that I think was a nightingale.

Blois was a central depot for casual officers and men and I am glad to say we only were held there two days waiting for our orders.

[993] E. C. Converse was a founder of United States Steel, in addition to numerous other leadership positions in banking and industry. I have not found any information that relates to his hunting lodge near Aberdeen, Maryland.

I was still a lieut. and both Goodaire and Winslow were captains, they were allowed to live in a hotel in the town while I had to live in the barracks, get up at reveille and stand formations. The most interesting thing to me in Blois was the chateau. It was the largest one I saw and has an immense historical interest. The stories of Catherine de Medici, had long since convinced me that all women were not good and here I was |5 in the very rooms where she used to mix up her poisons, say her prayers and murder car[d]inals and other individuals. Augers, Tours and Blois are in what is known as the Chateaux country and after the armistice I was able to visit a few of the many. There are, in my collection of pictures[994] many that I did not visit.

From Blois we three went to Tours, Headquarters of the Service of Supplies.[995] There were at this time probably 1000 officers stationed at Tours; the supply trains from the various ports came thru here and all along these railroads our engineers had built great storage yards; Americans were everywhere.

We had been ordered to France for Ordnance work in connection with a proving ground for Gas Warfare material.

At that time there was no such animal altho there was a camp near Chaumont (Haute Marne) which had a reservation for this service.

In this mans army, when they did'nt [sic] know what to do with you they sent you to school.

All three of us were assigned to Major Prentice, Ordnance, he gave some eight of us talks on gas, we had volumes to read and we learned how auful [awful] was this new German way of fighting.

After a week of this Goodaire and I were sent to the Gas Experimental Field near Chaumont. This was afterward named Hanlon Field, in honor of an officer of that name, who was the first of those in the gas service to give his life.

The so called American special ran from Tours to Chaumont by way of Bourge, Nevers, Dijou, Is-sur-Tille, Langre, and it was over this railroad that most of our supplies moved up to the front. Chaumont was General Headquarters of the U.S. Army and Hanlon Field was about 3 miles out, on the road to Biesles.

The first regiment of Gas and Flame troops were in training at Choignes and la Ville aux Bois. Capt. Mac Namee (Austrailian) [sic], Capt. Watkins and Lt. Roberts (British) were stationed there as instructors.

Since the Gas Defence School was not started Goodaire, Rhode, Slade, Menefee, Sayer, Tucker and I had special lectures given us by the British and American Officers, watched the practice shows, where four inch Stokes Mortars and Livens Projectors were used and made occasional trips to |6 Chaumont for dinner at the Hotel La France. Altho it was early June we found it pretty cold at Chaumont which is about 1000 feet above sea level.

[994] Presumably referring to the postcards that he included with his diary.

[995] Tours, France, is 146 miles southwest of Paris. The Tours American Monument there commemorates the Services of Supply of the American Expeditionary Forces during World War I. The monument is just east of the southern end of Pont Wilson that crosses the Loire River. (>> American Battle Monuments Commission website, http://www.abmc.gov/memorials/memorials/tr.php, accessed 18 Jan 2006.)

To complete our education Lt. Col[.] Atkinson gave Goodaire, Tucker, Slade and myself, permission to go up near Fliry to see the installation of projectors in preparation for a gas attack.

This was the first U.S. Show and was done to comply with a request from the French who thought the Germans were preparing for an attack in that sector.

We left by auto and passed thru Neufchateau and Toul. In the evening we proceeded to Flirey, which is near Seicheprey, without lights and it was "some" ride.

At this point the ground is very rough and the French front line consisted of a series of outposts which were held during the day and abandoned during the night. Patrols from German and French troops were active in no-mans land after dark. While the projectors were being installed the French held the outposts at night as well as during the day and the projectors were set between the two lines.

The Livens projector is a steel drawn tube, open at one end and hemispherical at the other, they are about 3 feet long and 8″ in diameter. They are set in groups of twenty in small trenches. The propelling charge is equipped with an electrical fuze which is connected by wires which come out thru the muzzle. The charges are connected up in series and the lot is exploded by a blasting machine or magneto. The bombs weigh 60 lbs. filled and carry 30 lbs. of liquid gas.

The maximum range is about 1500 yards, so it is clear that it is necessary to set them near the enemies [sic] first line if it is desirable to have the bombs fall near the reserve trenches.

The night we were up, the wind was blowing toward our own lines so altho 700 to 800 projectors were already in place it was impossible to have the "show" as the English call it.

There was some rifle fire near us and to both sides the artillery was quite active. Now and then a flare would go up form the German lines and we would seek the shadows—you felt very conspicuous at such times.

|7 We returned before day break, the projectors were carefully camouflaged so that the airplanes with their photographers would not notice the work which was going on at night.

It was about a week from the time we were there that the weather became favorable and the "show" was pulled off. By this time about 1400 projectors were fired, the show was a great success and altho the Germans came back strong with artillery fire, only a few of our men were wounded. The wind carried the gas cloud back behind the German lines and the casualties must have been very heavy.

The Gas Defence School had been started and after a weeks instruction Rhode and I were assigned to the 2nd and 4th Divisions respectively.

I asked to go with the offensive gas troops but was refused, having had no actual military training. I had no difficulty however, in getting transferred from Ordnance to Chemical Warfare Service and was put in the Defence Division. Goodaire returned to Tours, Tucker remained with the 1st G. & F. Regiment as did Menefee.

I had to report at le Bourges, near Paris in order to locate the Fourth Division.

I went by train from Chaumont to Paris arrived at the Gare de l'Est and secured a room at the Hotel Francais, directly opposite. I had supper or dinner as you may call it and took a walk around the dark streets, no lights were to be seen and it was very dismal.

I got my two trunks, bedding roll and equipment together, spent a half day looking around Paris and the next morning I left for la Ferte. The passenger trains ran no farther than this point.

I had no trouble in finding Headquarters, Capt. Perry the Gas Officer with the Division and soon had a comfortable billet at #7 Avenue, Chateau Thierry.

The name of the street was unfortunate, for when a man was sent to get my baggage he read the address as #7 dugout, Chateau Thierry and with my trunks and bedding roll he started for the front

|8 Fortunately an M.P. stopped him before he reached the German lines and he came back for further information and I recovered my baggage, the most of which I afterward kept at the gas supply dump.

It was now about the 18th of June, the Germans had been stopped at Chateau Thierry by the Second Division and the tide was about to turn in our favor. At nights there was a continuous stream of trucks, both U.S. and French, going thru la Ferte, back and forth. On clear nights the Boche would fly over our heads, going to bomb Paris and the anti-aircraft machine guns would make an awful racket.

The rumble of gun fire was very heavy and I would lie awake wondering just what was going on.

The Germans had passed beyond la Ferte in their first drive and had been driven back again by the French and British. The town was not much damaged but the bridges across the Marne had been destroyed and British gun fire had wrecked some of the buildings along the river bank.

Barges with a combination of laundry and bath house were anchored along the banks so it was possible to keep clean in all ways.

The French people were very friendly and made you feel very much at home.

The rail-head for supplies was at Lizy sur Ourcq and here we had our supplies of gas masks, for men and beasts, chloride of lime to overcome mustard gas, blankets for dug-outs etc. The various regiments were scattered over the country at May en-Multien, Rosoy, Acy and were busy preparing a system of defense in case another retreat became necessary.

We were kept busy distributing our supplies and examining the equipment furnished by the British; when the 4th first landed. It was at first intended to have them with the British. Many masks were found faulty, having been repaired by the British and issued to our men.

Since our troops were so widely scattered I was ordered to join the 7th infantry, Brigade, Gen'l. Benjamin Poore, Commanding. I found headquarters at Rosoy and was told to make my headquarters at Vincy, with the 1st Battalion of the 47th Infantry.

|9 I was centrally located and by using a horse I was able to see the various outfits and supervise their training and see that the proper equipment was obtained.

It was, I think, on the 14th of July that I went out to the pit to practise [sic] with my automatic pistol[996] when I heard the whine of a shell high up in the air. I knew it must be [996] In France, Earle Smith purchased a Colt 45 Automatic, serial no. 175256, from Edwin Goodaire (handwritten note under "C" in his service notebook [the loose-leaf notebook given by Earle Spamer to Veterans History Project, from a long range gun and that evening the chaplain brought back from Meaux a fragment of one of the shell.[997] It was about a 15″ shell and since the Germans always bombarded with their long range guns before a new offensive was started, it was felt that a new offensive was due.

The German offensive developed east of Reims on July 15th, but the French had been warned and without a doubt one of the greatest battles of the war had started. An artillery officer of the 3rd division told me that the Germans attacked eleven times in one day and that our artillery broke the attacks six times before our own infantry was involved.

We received orders to move one night and I moved out with the 1st B'n. 47th and went to Brigade Headquarters.

Then the 39th was sent to one French Armies [sic] and the 47th was held in reserve, there was nothing to do at Brigade Headquarters so I started after the 39th. They took over the French trenches near Troesnes N.E. of la Ferte Milon one night and when the Allied counter-offensive started, they went over the top.

I caught up to them at Noroy—they had hit the line hard and had done fine work and mopped up the woods to the north of the road.

Many machine guns and pieces of light artillery, 77 m/m guns and 150 m/m Howitzers, Minnenwerfers etc. were captured.

The Germans had made preparations to remain indefinitely, their dugouts were substantial and in several places certain germans had posted notices, claiming rich lands as farms.

We searched the fields and woods to determine the amount of captured material but evidently missed some for a german machine gun crew came out of their |10 hole after we had passed and opened up on our men. They were taken care of. I had found Capt. Reynolds, the Gas Officer with the 39th regiment and we went over the battleground together, the fighting was still going on at Villers le Petet and at Chony. The sights were disagreeable and the odors unbearable. The 39th was relieved and we withdrew to Silly la Poterie, or rather to the chateau, which was very large and had many big stables.

This section had been heavily shelled with gas several days before, but fortunately the woods was [sic] fairly open, a good wind had been blowing and altho we could detect a slight odor of gas, it was decided to occupy the buildings instead of letting the men stay out in the open.

It had started to rain and was disagreeable.

We had only a few gas casualties, due to men getting into shellholes, roaming in thick woods where gas had been and from gas shell bursting so close that the men did not have time to adjust their masks.

I rejoined Brigade Headquarters at La Ferte Milon. This town was badly shot up. We next moved to Bourneville and shortly afterward moved to Grisolles which is directly north of Chateau Thierry.

Library of Congress]). The gun is in my possession, received from Earle Smith's daughter, Elisabeth S. Dewing, ca. 1998.

[997] Throughout the text, Earle Smith consistently refers to "shell" for all kinds of artillery explosives. This presumably is a contemporary military usage of the term, when otherwise the plural would be indicated.

Dammard was completely shot to pieces and all along the road were signs of heavy fighting.

French batteries were all around Grissolles and we received German Shell at frequent intervals. They had the cross roads near the church spotted and several Frenchmen lost their lives there, while horses that had been killed a few days previous were ripe and disagreeable.

My horse had a good sense of smell and I had a hard time getting him to pass anything that was dead if we approached from leeward.

We remained at Grisolle for several days, the 4th Division being in reserve. The Soissons road was heavily shelled; the men were at la Croix, the Bois du Chatelet and le Charme.

We next moved over to the Boise de la Tounelle. Fortunately the weather was fine and we did not mind sleeping in pup-tents and taking our meals under the trees. Our men were bombed on the road and at night the Boche would fly low and bomb the woods. It was decidedly unpleasant |11 when you could hear them coming and knew that one might hit you in the pit of the stomach. I had seen the Germans bomb the men in the front line when we were east of Noroy and that did'nt [sic] help.

The 42nd was to the east of us and we moved over to relieve them, passing thru the Foret de Fere, where the Germans had huge quantities of ammunition, including many gas shell of various calibers.

We went through Sergy and stopped for lunch. Some of the buildings had received direct hits with gas shell and were dangerous. The Germans had been there themselves that morning and there had been hard fighting before they withdrew. We proceeded to Seringes and established Brigade Headquarters.

Here the shell had dug up many graves, the buildings were badly wrecked and in many were dead Germans and Doughboys.

Our next move took us thru Mareuil to Mottin Farm. The shell passed over our heads. The farm was in a hollow and struck along the road which was generally crowded with trucks.

The German artillery was now placed north of the Vesle River and we were likely to be shelled at any time, so it was necessary to be on the lookout for gas. While there I had the interesting experience of seeing an observation balloon (French) set on fire by a german aviator.

I was returning from Division Headquarters on my nag, I never was able to guess his name, and as I came near the balloon I heard the machine guns start firing, I glanced up and from behind a cloud, the plane dove for the balloon and the observers jumped from the basket with their parachutes.

The German was firing incendiary bullets from his machine gun and it looked as if there was a dotted line from plane to balloon.

The balloon came down in flames and the German flew away home.

I pulled my horse under a tree to escape his fire should he decide to shoot up the road. Capt. McNamee |12 was there and I took him up to Headquarters to see General Poore. After the armistice I saw him at Tours, ready to return to Australia.

We only remained at Mottin Farm a day or so and moved to Chartreuve Farm, south of Chery-Chartreuve.

Our men had taken St. Thibant and several attempts were made to cross the Vesle River but without much success. The losses were heavy.

I had to make a trip back beyond Chateau Thierry to get gas masks to replace those destroyed by getting wet. The gas dump was then moved up in part to Mareuil. A Dodge car with gas masks was the first U.S. car to enter St. Thibant and the Germans were just across the river. I was sorry General Poore did not allow me to take the car in personally. The masks reached the men in time to prevent many casualties.

The farm here was the headquarters, not only of the 7th Brigade, but also of the 8th and of two Artillery Brigades. Seventy-five guns were on all sides of us and when the Boche started his counter battery work the shell seemed to hit on all sides of our farm.

On several occassions [sic] they sent over sneezing gas and mustard gas. The fact that there were many duds, I know, prevented our casualties from being greater. The farm adjoined the park of a very pretty chateau; at least it had been pretty.

A mine had been planted so that the entire building was wrecked and only portions of rooms were left. The books from the library were scattered over the floor and what furniture that was left, was of little values [sic].

What was evidently a family tomb was also blown up as were several water wells on the place. There was a large grove of trees and a small lake. It was a bad place if a heavy gas bombardment was centered on it; we only got a small amount, but the 77th division which afterwards relieved us got a plenty.

Most French residences have well constructed wine cellars which make excellent dug-outs. I had several at Chartreuve Farm fitted with blankets at the doors and when the shell fell too close we would get the men, around Headquarters, undercover. At night I was generally around, since I was "official nose" so to speak, and it was interesting to see a Boche overhead drop a flare when he |13 spotted one of our batteries and then wait for the enemy to try and locate the guns with their fire.

As I said before the 77th relieved us and about the middle of August we were headed back to a rest area where replacements would be received to make up for the men we had lost.

We came back thru Feren-Tardenois and made Headquarters at le Four a Verre Farm on the west of the Foret de Fere.

The men were given a couple of days to rest and we proceeded thru Chateau Thierry crossed the Marne River at Nogent and entrained on one of the railroads for Rimancourt.

Here as billeting officer for the Brigade I secured quarters for the General in the Chateau.

I spent a very pleasant time here, getting samples of various German gases so the men could take a slight sniff and know them in the future.

There were so many bad odors around that I had to watch the gas sentries from sounding unnecessary alarms.

Gongs, rattles and klaxon horns were used to give the alarm and at times I have known a sentry to hear an auto horn on the road and immediately take it up. Since it was bad enough as it actually was, it was necessary to prevent unnecessary alarms and consequent loss of sleep to the men.

Rimacourt is N.E. of Chaumont and just as we were to move north to Bar le Due I was relieved from duty with the 7th Brigade and ordered to le Valdahon as a gas officer for the training station for artillery.

I was sorry to leave General Poore, Major Faulkner, Jack Mallory, Sidlo the Vet., Watters, Law and George de la Casse, our interpreter.

This was really the last of the war for me. From Chaumont, where I saw Goodaire while I was waiting for my train, I went to Dijon.

It was perhaps ten o'clock at night when I arrived and as the hotels there were generally overcrowded due to many Americans I was wondering what I would do for a bed |14 when a girl and her mother asked if a room was wanted. I was with another officer and we agreed to accept the room if they would give us some supper. The hotels and restaurants were allowed to serve meals only at certain hours.

So we got a room and a supper of eggs, coffee, bread, jam and tomato and onion salad. Not bad at that, but the apartment was on about the fifth floor of a tenement building and I spotted a bed bug on the wall the next morning. The town must have been full of them because I afterward saw one crawling on a stone column at the station. The girl was taking an English course in connection with her studies at a business school.

From Dijon I went to Besancon and from there to les Valdahon.

This country is beautiful and Besancon was very attractive. It is I believe the wildest town I saw in France with the possible exception of Marseilles and Nice. At le Valdehon is a French Artillery Camp and at the time I was there the 6th and 56th Artillery Brigades were there in training.

My duties were to talk gas and see that the men were properly equipped. I had an auto ride to Pontarlier (near the Swiss border) had a wonderful meal and saw some more wonderful scenery along the Valley of the Loue River.

I was here one month before I was ordered back to Tours to work in the Ordnance Department.

From Tours I took a trip to Bourges, where we had a detachment working with the French at their Proving Ground; to le Crensote where the big Schneider Gun works are located; to St. Chamond near St. Etienne via [L]yon and back to Tours via Paris.

At St. Chamond is a large steel plant where guns and carriages are made.

I received the best of treatment at the plants visited and I was sorry that I could not spend more than a day or so at each place.

There was to be a proving ground near the large Ordnance Shops at Mehun for testing relined guns and reassembled carriages after being shipped from the U.S.

|15 I had it all on paper when the armistice was signed.[998]

A few days before Thanksgiving I went to Bourge to get some baggage I had sent there and while there I caught the Flu.

I spent one week in the hospital there, went to Tours and spent another two weeks in #27 hospital there and finally was granted ten days leave to go to Nice and recuperate.

At #27 there was a part of a Jefferson Hospital Unit and Dr. Marcey of Camden took pretty good care of us.[999] [998] "I was there [in Tours] on Nov. 11, 1918 and we all had a big celebration." (Earle C. Smith to J. Lathrop Mack, 30 Jan 1949).

I did not seem very sick but could not get actually well, so I was given ten days sick leave and told to go to Nice, the only place in France where the sun shines in the winter months.

The quickest way to get anywhere in France is via. Paris. So there I went and since it was impossible to reserve even a seat without about 48 hours notice I started on my way for a 24 hour ride with a suitcase for a seat, placed in a corridor of the coach.

There are very few sleeping cars on french trains and the passengers rent pillows and blankets and make the best of life.

I had "enough" by the time we reached Marseille having had nothing to do but just sit from 8 P.M. until noon the next day so I stopped off at Marseille got a room at a Red Cross Hotel and put in the afternoon taking a nap.

The next day I took an auto ride around the city which is attractive in some sections. You see people of every nationality on the streets, many of them rather repulsive in their appearance.

On the third day I went on to Nice and put up at the Negresco Hotel which proved a little too elaborate and costly. After two days I moved to a more modest pension where I secured a second floor room facing the Sea. Here I had a room and board which was very good, for 16 francs a day.

It was the day before Christmas when I reached Nice and a dull time for me, since I had no acquaintances and was feeling rotten into the bargain.

|16 It was in Nice that the Y.M.C.A. showed to an advantage. The big pier was fixed for entertaining the enlisted men and rooms were rented in the city for an officers club. You could buy anything you wanted at a reasonable rate and there were several fine trips by auto that you could take.

The trip to Monte Carlo, Menton, and the Italian border was the best. The gambling halls could be visited when playing was not going on and the Museum of the Prince of Monoca [Monaco] was very interesting. He is an authority on deep sea life and has a wonderful collection of fish and animals if they can be called so.

On the return trip we took the high road which winds along the sides of the hills which rise up from the shores of the sea. We visited La Turbie where there are some old Roman ruins and so back to Nice.

Another interesting trip was from Nice to Cannes and La Grasse (summer house of former Queen Victoria of England) the center of a noted section for perfumes. I[t] was New Years Day when I made this trip so the factories were not operating, but we were shown around and the methods were explained to us. I gave the guide a package of cigarettes which pleased him very much, tobacco being very scarce in France during the war.

I left Nice one afternoon at four o'clock and took the narrow gauge railroad that runs north into the Maritime Alps. At Annot we stopped for the night and continued the next morning for Digne.

From there I went to Lyon via Grenoble. The country to the south of Grenoble was fine and the snow capped Alps were wonderful as the sun shone on them just before it set.

---

[999] Jefferson Hospital, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Across the Delaware River from Philadelphia is Camden, New Jersey.

I rested in Lyon one night and then continued to tours via Paris. I was short of cash so I could not tarry in Paris over night.

I still had a bad cough when I reached Tours so I took things easy and managed to get sent to Angers without going first to Mehun, where all officers in the Ordnance Department were sent before going home via Angers. At Angers there were about 1000 casual officers and we were treated like a lot of children; we had to stand two formations a day and take setting up exercises and hikes, with close order drill.

|17 You had to pay for ten days meals in advance, the mess was poor and cost 8 francs per day and was not worth half as much. Many officers wanted to eat at the cafes in the town, so the C.O. closed the camp and it was a case of eat at the Mess or starve.

Some preferred starving and one officer told me he had been under the influence of sardines for five days. Sardines, crackers, jelly sandwiches and cocoa could be purchased from the Y at certain hours.

Afterward the camp was opened and I had a chance to look around the city which is very old and of much historical interest.

I was at Angers for about two weeks and finally went to Brest.

After one week here I sailed on the British ship Northland for the U.S. on February 8th.

On the 21st we docked at Philadelphia and received a real welcome from our own people and we were a happy lot until we found that we had to go to Camp Dix[1000] without a chance to see our relatives and friends in the city.

I was away from Dix and home the next day. I had called up home from the pier and mother and Betty[1001] talked to me a little. There were too many waiting for the phone so I could not hold the wire very long.

I reported to Washington and was ordered to Aberdeen, and here I am now waiting for the first of August when I am to be discharged.

The citizen soldier not the regulars, fought the war for the U.S. and the doughboy was the greatest factor, more power to him.

Earle Covington Smith Documents and Artifacts Relating to His Engineering Career

In 2002, I prepared a descriptive inventory of Earle C. Smith's documents and artifacts that related to his professional career, which had been given to me by his daughter, Elisabeth Smith Dewing. In December 2002, after contacting the Boulder City Museum and Historical Association, Boulder City, Nevada, I donated these items to the museum, where they comprise the Earle Covington Smith Collection (accession no. 003.031). Although many of the items do not have direct bearing upon Earle Smith's work at Hoover Dam, the Boulder City Museum and Historical Association wished to have them as representative working pieces from the career of one of the Hoover Dam engineers. This is especially poignant given that the entire records of the Six Companies corporation that built the dam are now lost, and materials and artifacts with association to the project, even superficially, are of historical value.

The following is an itemization of the artifacts that came to me; most of them were given to the Boulder City Museum and Historical Association. Each item includes all information that I could ascertain relating to its age and condition. A few items have dates that are after the time when Earle Smith worked on Hoover Dam (e.g., nos. 11, 15); others he might have had on the Hoover Dam project (e.g., nos. 2, 13, 17). Earle Smith did not keep much; but apparently these items were significant enough to him to keep them even after he retired.

Professional Tools and Supplies

1 8-piece drafting kit with lined case (Excelsior, Keuffel & Esser Co.).

2 Aluminum D. W. Brunton's surveyor's compass (manufactured by Wm. Ainsworth and Sons, Denver); with leather belt case. [Older model in very good, working condition. This is a handsome piece. I have a geology background, and Brunton compasses are the tools of our trade as well. I do not know the date of this model, but it is obviously an old one. A "Brunton" is such an important piece of surveying equipment, and since this is obviously an older model, Earle Smith could very well have bought it while he was an engineering student at Lehigh University in Bethlehem, PA, or during his early employment before World War I.[1002]]

3 Small box with miscellaneous small plumb-line weights and cotter pins.

4 Steel measuring tape [100 yd?] with wooden handle and leather thong (Keuffel & Esser Co., New York). [Very good condition; no rust.[1003]]

5 Metal cylinder, "Eureka Tape Repairer" (Lufkin Rule Co., Saginaw, Mich.), with tape-repairing slugs inside. [For use with steel measuring tape.]

6 Wooden screw-top cylinder, "Eureka Tape Splices", with splices inside. [For use with steel measuring tape.]

7 Wooden slide rule (Keuffel & Esser Co., New York). Stamped on reverse "U.S.B.R." [U.S. Bureau of Reclamation]; case marked "Personal Property E. C. Smith". In original cardboard shipping box.

8 Two wooden "triangular" drafting rulers (marked "U.S. St'd" and "F. P. Co.").

9 Ivory[?] draftsman's ruler with fractional scales marked in units of 1/8, 1/4, 3/8, 1/2, 3/4, 1, and 1½ inches (W. McMillan and Son, Chicago). In leather slipcase.

10 Folding 2-foot aluminum ruler with ivory[?] inlay (Stanley Rule and Level Co., New Britain, Conn.).

11 Paperboard calculating slide rule, "Hydraulics of Pipe Culverts. By F. T. Mavis, Head, Department of Civil Engineering, Carnegie Institute of Technology, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania", "Copyright 1946 by M. W. Loving, Consulting Engineer . . . Chicago 1, Illinois", "Mfd. Perry Frag Corp., Maywood, Ill." With advertisement on reverse, "Jourdan Concrete Pipe Company, Fresno, California".

12 U.S. Department of the Interior, Bureau of Reclamation, Field Notebook. No. 7-538. Government Printing Office. [Unused.]

[1002] I had great difficulty deciding to give up the Brunton compass, but for purely selfish reasons. As a geologist myself (by education, anyway), I have some great affection for the uses of a Brunton compass, and I have a couple of them from my times as a student in the field. Earle Smith's Brunton was particularly handsome, because of its age; I considered it the premiere piece of the collection, one that he probably did have while he worked on the project. That, together with its role as a very personal link to my Uncle Earle and his career, gave me pause to keep it. However, the far greater use is seen in its use as an artifact of one of the men who worked on Hoover Dam. [–E.E.S.]

Elisabeth Fulton (Drummond) Smith (1888–1916)
(wife of Earle Covington Smith)

The 1900 census lists Elisabeth Drummond's birth date as April 1887. In the 1910 census her occupation is listed as a public school teacher. She had been in poor health for some time, and died two months after the birth of her daughter, Elisabeth, who afterward was left to the care of her maiden aunt, Mary Mabel Smith. On Earle Smith's typewritten list of engineering experience (see above) he noted in handwritten emendations his marriage date and the following note: "Elisabeth died after birth of daughter April 22, 1916" [sic; the birth date is actually 25 April, confirmed by the birth certificate]. A memorandum book of Earle C. Smith, including vital statistics of various family members, lists his wife's death as on 28 June 1916; this is the only family record of her exact date of death.

During a visit with Elisabeth (Smith) Dewing in September 2006, shortly before she died, she mentioned that she had a Drummond family history, in the form of a book. Searching for it with her in her study, we did not find it. After her death, a request was made of her stepchildren to keep watch for that family history as they sorted through Elisabeth's effects, but nothing was found other than a few records that relate to other members of the family. This is distressing because we know almost nothing of the Drummonds. Of parenthetical note is that the attending physician at the birth of her daughter, Elisabeth, was Winslow Drummond of 1824 N. 13th St., Philadelphia; presumably he was a relation. Also see Additions & Corrections

Elisabeth Drummond Smith is buried in Sec. H, Lot 57, Mount Vernon Cemetery, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. This is the Drummond family lot. Correspondence in 1964 between a lawyer in Philadelphia[1004], Elisabeth C. Smith, and Earle Smith (found in the effects of Elisabeth Smith Dewing),

On 5 July 1912, Earle Smith married Elisabeth Fulton Drummond of Philadelphia, whose pictures may be those shown here. They were found together in his effects as kept by his daughter, Elisabeth Dewing, and conveyed to Earle Spamer after Dewing's death in 2007. The blurry photo at left seems to be one of Elisabeth Drummond's wedding photos; and if it is, the man may be her father, Robert Drummond.

(Spamer 3373)

At the time of their marriage, Earle was employed with the City of Jacksonville, Florida, surveying water and sewer mains. Two photos (right and below) show the Smiths in Jacksonville sometime in 1912–1913.

(Spamer 3375)

In April 1916, Robert Drummond died 12 days after the birth of Elisabeth and Earle's second child, Elisabeth. A son, Ralph, died two years earlier. Then wife Elisabeth died just two months after her father, leaving her husband, Earle, with only baby Elisabeth.

Earle and Elisabeth Drummond Smith had two children. Their first-born, Ralph Morgan Smith, lived just eleven months.

Ralph is probably the child being held by his parents in the two photos above; the location is not known.

At left, in a studio portrait, is Ralph (left) and his cousin, Jean Seville Smith (right), daughter of Earle's brother and sister-in-law, Gilbert and Nora. The photo is probably in Illinois or Indiana.

Dorothea (Greenlee) Smith (1898–1946)
(wife of Earle Covington Smith)
"Dorothy"

A supplementary birth certificate was filed 17 December 1941 by her mother, Eva B. Greenlee, in which the daughter's given name is spelled "Dorothy". However, annotations on original Greenlee family photographs consistently give her name as "Dorothea"; further, the following documents all spell her name "Dorothea": Certificate of Marriage with Earle Smith, California voter registration rolls, Earle Smith's 1942 draft registration card, and a receipt from Fairmount Cemetery for her burial costs.

The marriage of Dorothea Greenlee and Earle Smith was officiated by Rev. Frank Gunn Brainerd in the Boulevard Congregational Church, West 26th and Federal Sts., Denver, Colorado; witnessed by her brother and sister, Ralph William Greenlee and Mary Craig Greenlee. There were no children from the marriage. A memorandum book from Earle Smith gives her date of death as 11 November 1946.

She is buried in Fairmount Cemetery, Denver, Colorado (S.E.¼, Lot 145, Block 96); a bronze marker is in place. Earle Smith purchased this lot on 14 November 1946; the deed with the Fairmount Cemetery Association is dated 22 November 1946, which is rubber-stamped, "This is a Non-Monument Section" (that is, only markers flush with ground level are permitted).

For information on the Greenlee family, see the Greenlee Family collateral genealogy (farther below).

349. Ralph Morgan Smith (1913–1914)

The "Smith Genealogy" records Ralph Morgan Smith's birth date as 31 July 1913. Notes by Earle Smith's brother, Rev. Gilbert Haven Smith, state (spellings and date thus):

> I conducted and arranged funeral service of Ralph Morgan Smith first infant of my brother Earl C. Smith and his wife Elizabeth Drummond Smith, then living at Indiana Harbor, Ind. This was in the fall of 1915.

Ralph Morgan Smith was buried 17 August 1914 in Sec. H, Lot 57, Mount Vernon Cemetery, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

(addressing him as "Uncle Earle"). He signed his name, and was addressed as, "Willis", and wrote in 1964 of his grown family of five then spread around the world, one of them a missionary in Africa. No such family member has been identified, and it has been suggested that the title, "uncle", may have been one of affection rather than relation.

350. Elisabeth Covington (Smith) Dewing (1916–2007)
"Betty", "Bess"

Elisabeth C. Smith was born at 1709 Green St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The significance of this address is not known at this time; her father's (and thus presumably her mother's) address at the time was 5312 Malcom St., which is a short distance from the South St. Bernard Street address of her grandparents. Her birth certificate was a delayed birth record, filed 18 May 1916, which apparently later (in 1942) created problems in documenting her birth, the record eventually received from the state capital, Harrisburg.

She was baptized on 28 May 1917 (more than a year following her birth) at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia, the home of her grandfather, Rev. John Edward Smith. The baptism was officiated by her grandfather and by Rev. Charles W. Harvey (of the Church of the New Jerusalem at 22nd and Chestnut Sts.); witnesses were daughters of Rev. Smith, Lora R. Spamer and M. Mabel Smith. Elisabeth Smith received her first communion and was confirmed in the faith of the New Church, 16 April 1933, at the First New Jerusalem Church, 22nd and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia; officiated by Rev. Charles W. Harvey. On 24 April 1933 she was elected to membership in the First New-Jerusalem Society of Philadelphia.

Elisabeth Smith was raised principally by her maiden aunt, Mabel Smith, at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia (the home of Elisabeth's grandparents, Rev. John Edward and Ella Smith, where Mabel continued to live after the deaths of John and Ella). That Elisabeth's father was not often present during her formative years was difficult for her to accept, a feeling of disappointment that remained with her during her entire life. Their relationship never held the father–daughter care that one might normally have expected. Nonetheless, her father was noted in Philadelphia city directories between 1919 and 1926 as a resident of his father's home at 820 South St. Bernard Street. Nor were they estranged, as family photographs show them together in various places and times; and he was present at her wedding to Dr. Stephen B. Dewing in 1965.

"Betty", as she was known until she married, remained in Philadelphia until she embarked on her own career in the 1940s, soon joining the U.S. Army. After her marriage to Stephen Dewing in 1965 she was known as "Bess". She met Dewing during a cruise in Greece, while she was stationed in France.

Education

Elisabeth Smith was educated first at the Henry C. Lea School in Southwest Philadelphia (an elementary school also attended by Carol Spamer and, briefly, Earle Spamer). During 1928-1934 she attended and graduated from the Friends Select School in Philadelphia.[1005]

During 1934-1938, she attended the University of Pennsylvania, College of Liberal Arts for Women, on a four-year "Mayor's Scholarship". She received notice of the award from the Mayor of Philadelphia, J. Hampton Moore, communicating the report of the Advisory Committee on Free Scholarships to the University of Pennsylvania.[1006] She majored in English literature, graduating in 1938 with a B.A. in Liberal Arts, with Major Honors in English.[1007] During the summer of 1937, she also took a course in sociology at the Pennsylvania State College (now Penn State University), which credits she transferred to the University of Pennsylvania. While at the University of Pennsylvania, she participated on the basketball team, and for a year was in the choral society. She was a member of the Beta Alpha Chapter of the XΩ (Chi Omega) fraternity, initiated 17 February 1935[1008], and was for one year its house manager.

After graduating from college, during the summer and fall of 1938 Elisabeth Smith earned money to attend business school by working as a waitress at the inn at Russell's Cabins[1009] in Kearsarge, New Hampshire, a resort in the White Mountains. During several months in 1939 she attended the Philadelphia School of Office Training, 2100 Chestnut St., where she completed work in shorthand, typing, secretarial office practice, and office machines (bookkeeping, Dictaphone, and mimeograph). She also completed an 18-week course in introductory advertising from the Philadelphia Club of Advertising Women.

Elisabeth Smith resided at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia, at least until August 1942. On 10 August 1942 she moved to 1015 S. 46th St., Philadelphia, a short distance from South St. Bernard Street, and on 29 February 1944 she moved from there to "Tafels" (i.e. a home of one of the Tafel family).[1010] During this time, Fall 1943–Spring 1944, she attended the Graduate School of the University of Pennsylvania, receiving credit for a course in psychology on Clinical Tests and Measurements. In August 1951, when she was a Warrant Officer in the U.S. Army in Japan, a newspaper record gave her address as 1408 S. 51st St., which was Mabel Smith's residence.

Military Service

During World War II Elisabeth Smith worked for a short while as a service representative in a business office of the Bell Telephone Company, but felt the need to find greater challenges. On 21 March 1944, she enlisted in the Women's Army Corps (WAC)[1011] in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.[1012] Through a letter [1006] Hon. J. Hampton Moore to Elisabeth Covington Smith (20 July 1934).

[1007] Her college transcript shows an eclectic group of required and elective courses, in biology, chemistry, sociology, psychology, and history in addition to English and French language and literature. She was predominantly an "A" and "B" student, although she received a grade of "D" in Qualitative Analysis (chemistry) and "Short Story" (English). She excelled in Drama courses. In her final year she took a punishing 17 courses, mostly in English and American literature, auditing one (Shakespeare) and receiving six A's, nine B's, and a C (in Recent European History, 1914-1934).

[1009] Russell's Cottages was an accumulation of structures originally run by the Russell family in the area of North Conway and Kearsarge, New Hampshire. The main structure was the Isaac Merrill House, 1½ miles north of North Conway, which was built in 1773; as an inn it began accepting guests in 1850. The inn was, coincidentally, offered for sale when research was made into Russell's Cottages for this genealogy. In April 2007 the asking price was $1,150,000; the inn at this time occupied one acre, contained 16 rooms including two suites and six rooms with fireplaces, and offered three sitting areas (one with a fireplace), two porches, and scenic views in the rear. Other than some historic postcards, little information has been found regarding Russell's Cottages. (>>Real estate website http://www.virtualcities.com/ons/nh/n/nhn77023.htm; accessed 2 Apr 2007.)

[1011] The Women's Army Corps (WAC) began with a 1941 bill submitted by Congresswoman Edith Nourse Rogers of Massachusetts, which would establish an Army women's corps separate and distinct from the existing Army Nurse Corps. Public sentiment favored it, and a Women's Army Auxiliary Corps (WAAC) was created in May 1941 to work with (not within) the Army. WAAC recruits were trained to perform numerous tasks that freed up the male Army for of 31 March 1944, she was called for duty on 4 April 1944.[1013] Her basic training took place at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia[1014], after which she was assigned to Air Corps Duty Stations as follows: Atlantic City, New Jersey[1015]; Bowman Field, Louisville, Kentucky[1016]; and Lackland Army Air Base (later Lackland Air Force Base), San Antonio, Texas[1017].

more directly war-related duties, as well as taking some of the jobs that were performed by civilians. The first WAAC units were in the Aircraft Warning Service on the east coast, previously stationed by volunteer civilians. Soon, numerous responsible positions were handed to WAAC recruits, stateside as well as overseas; for example, communications workers, mechanics, personnel processing, laboratory technicians, quartermaster clerks, photographers, mail clerks, map analysts, motor pool drivers, etc., etc. By 1943, public sentiment about employing women for military service reversed, and the number of women recruits dropped. Still, in March 1943, Congressional hearings took up the question of converting the WAACs into a true Women's Army Corps (WAC), foreseeing a greater need for overseas auxiliary workers on an impending European Front in the war. Until that time, WAAC recruits were given neither the international protections given to military men if captured or wounded, nor did they receive the same pay for equivalent work in the Army. The militarized WACs would receive the pay, privileges, and protections equal to that of Army men. On 3 Jul 1943, the WAC bill was signed into law. That month, the first battalion of WACs arrived in the European Theater of Operations, in London, assigned to the Eighth Air Force. A separate detachment of WACs served with the Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Force, handling highly classified material, and moving with the headquarters as it moved from England, to France, and eventually Germany. Elsewhere during the war, WACs served around the globe. More than 150,000 WACs served during the war; many were demobilized after the conclusion of hostilities. In 1946, the Army requested of Congress to establish the WACs permanently as part of the Regular Army, finally being passed into law on 12 Jun 1948, assimilating WACs into all but combat units of the Army. [1012] Elisabeth Smith on at least two occasions produced handwritten résumés of her career, which are referred to here, and to which additional data were added through personal interviews and correspondence. A few additional facts were found in an address book she kept during the late 1940s and 1950s. In addition, her personal copies of her U.S. Army Personnel Record also are referred to.

[1013] Form letter to "Dear Madam", from 1st Lt. Blanche B. Centenero, WAC, AUS, Adjutant: "This is your call to active duty to the Third WAC Training Center, Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. You will leave Philadelphia Tuesday, April 4, 1944. Report to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Station, 24th & Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia, Pa. at 1:00 PM, Tuesday, April 4, 1944 (in front of the Station Master's Office) where a member of the Recruiting Staff will meet you. Meals and transportation to the Training Center will be furnished by the government at the station. Be sure your baggage is tagged with your name and destination, Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. Enclosed you will find a list of clothing which you may take along to the Training Center."

[1014] Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, was established in Dec 1904 as a training center for Regular Army and National Guard troops. It occupied 810 acres adjacent to the Chickamauga National Military Park that had been established by Congress in 1895 to commemorate the soldiers of the Battle of Chickamauga, 29-20 Sep 1863, the bloodiest two-day battle of the Civil War. Early Fort Oglethorpe officers included John J. Pershing (briefly) and 1st Lt. Dwight David Eisenhower, who served for three months here in 1917 as an instructor in trench warfare. After the attack of Pearl Harbor, Fort Oglethorpe became an induction and training center for new Army recruits. Women's Auxiliary Army Corps recruits were sent here, and by Sep 1943 all men had been transferred from the post. By 1946, Fort Oglethorpe was declared surplus, and by 1949 it was the nucleus for the new city of Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. Today it is the gateway to Chicamauga-Chattanooga National Military Park. (>> Catoosa County, Georgia, Chamber of Commerce website, http://www.gatewaytogeorgia.com/catoosa/ ftogle.php, accessed 30 Mar 2006.)

[1015] The coastal resort town of Atlantic City, New Jersey, was nearly wholly occupied by the military during World War II, which included so-called "Camp Boardwalk". The Naval Air Station Atlantic City was commissioned in 1943, centered on an airfield that had been a Works Progress Administration (WPA) project; also there was the Army Air Forces Basic Training Center No. 7 and the 31st and 32nd Companies of the Women's Auxiliary Army Corps. (>> Unattributed thesis posted to website http://venus.atlantic.edu/amatol/thesis_chapter1. html, accessed 2006.) One photo in the effects of Elisabeth Smith Dewing (Spamer Family Historical Photos, no. 3599) depicts 1st Sgt. Becky Rider in Room 1001 of President Hotel, Atlantic City.

Evidence preserved in family photographs shows that while Elisabeth Smith served at Bowman Field she was promoted first to the rank of Corporal, then to Sergeant. A photograph from March 1945 (while visiting in New Mexico) shows her with Sergeant's stripes, and a photograph among those taken while she was stationed at Bowman Field is inscribed from a fellow WAC who acknowledged her rank as Sergeant. [1018] Also, at the 71st running of the Kentucky Derby, in Louisville, Kentucky, Sgt. Smith was present there on 9 June 1945.[1019] In Spring 1946, while at Lackland Army Air Base, she was quartered in Barracks 3877 (as noted in the annotation of a photograph).[1020] On 27 October 1945, while stationed at Lackland Army Air Base, she was promoted to First Sergeant.[1021] At this time she lived in off-base housing with her WAC friend, Iris Brooks, and her aunt, Mabel Smith; in summer 1947 they resided at 119 Lowell St., San Antonio.[1022]

During Smith's service at Lackland Army Air Base, the U.S. Air Force was created as a separate military service on 18 September 1947, supplanting the U.S. Army Air Corps. Seven months later, on 27 April 1948, she was one of nine women in the Army Air Corps appointed Temporary Warrant Officer[1023], and

[1016] Bowman Field was established in 1919 (officially, 1920) and is the longest continuously operating general aviation airfield in the U.S. Military uses of the airfield began in 1922 and by the 1930s it was a center for commercial civilian aviation. During WWII, the Army Air Force established combat-readiness training here, and in 1943 the Glider Pilot Combat Training facilities were opened. A bomber squadron moved afterward, when locally the facility became known as "Air Base City". Flight surgeons, medical technicians, and flight nurses also trained here. After the war it returned to civilian air operations. (>> Louisville Regional Airport Authority website, http://www.flylouisville.com/bfa/history.asp, accessed 30 Mar 2006.)

[1017] Lackland Air Force Base originated in 1942 as the San Antonio Aviation Cadet Center, which had been separated from the pre-existing Kelly Field (which in turn had been created from two separate Kelly Fields, the earlier one of which was acquired for the fledgling Air Service in 1917). The San Antonio facility had awkward nominal designations for several years, including its first post-war name as the Army Air Forces Military Training Center, the sole basic training center for the U.S. Army Air Force. In 1947 it was finally named Lackland Army Air Force Base. Today, Lackland Air Force Base is one of the most heavily populated air force bases, occupying nearly 9,000 acres. (>> Lackland Air Force Base public website, http://www.lackland.af.mil/info/origins.asp, accessed 30 Mar 2006.)

[1020] Spamer Family Historical Photos, no. 3637, in an album assembled by Smith encompassing the period 1944-1947.

[1021] The date is written in her address book from the period: "1st Sgt-27 Oct 45 par 21 So 104 Hq SAD, AFPDC San Antonio, Tex dtd 27 Oct 45". Numerous family photographs show her wearing First Sergeant's insignia (three chevrons with three stripes beneath, with a diamond in the center).

[1022] Spamer Family Historical Photos, nos. 3549-3550, show Brooks and Mabel Smith at their home at 119 Lowell St., San Antonio, Texas. The photos are in an album assembled by Elisabeth Smith, which covers the period 1944-1947; it is in my possession. Brooks was a close friend and companion of Elisabeth Smith; however, other information about her has not been determined, including what became of her after Smith left Lackland AFB.

[1023] For her appointment as Warrant Officer to be effected, 1st Sgt. Elisabeth Smith received an Honorable Discharge from the U.S. Army on 27 April 1948, then was reappointed as Warrant Officer (Junior Grade) on 28 April. (serial numbers) during her career, which she itemized: enlistment in WAC, Svc. No. A318761; appointment as WOJG, Army of the U.S., Svc. No. V318761, AU318761; appointed WOJG, Regular Army, Svc. No. V904323.

In an address book that Elisabeth Smith kept from the late 1940s into the 1950s, she listed her Warrant Officer "Lineal List" for the period 1948-1956,which records her promotions (transcribed exactly, with my interpretations to the right):

WO Lineal List #7136½

W1 (P) 1	Oct 49	Warrant Officer 1 (Permanent)
W2 (T)	14 Dec 51	Warrant Officer 2 (Temporary)
WOJG	27 Apr 48 (AUS)	Warrant Officer Junior Grade; Army of the United States*
WOJG (RA)	28 Apr 49	Warrant Officer Junior Grade; Regular Army

CWO (W2) perm		Chief Warrant Officer 2 (Permanent)
CWO (W3) temp	10 June 55	Chief Warrant Officer 2 (Temporary)
Asg OJCS	1 Feb 56	Assigned Office of the Joint Chiefs of Staff

*Army of the United States referred to that portion of the U.S. Army composed of drafted personnel (as opposed to the Regular Army, comprising enlisted personnel). In Elisabeth Smith's case, AUS probably reflected an assignment, since as a WAC she had enlisted.

When she retired in 1964, she had attained the rank of CWO 4. When she was promoted to that grade has not been determined.

Elisabeth Smith compiled a list of her duty stations up to July 1954 for purposes of payment documentation, as follows (transcribed as written):

She had sought payment for mustering-out pay relating to her discharge from the former U.S. Army Air Corps (see in this note, above), when she was reassigned to the U.S. Army. The claim was denied because "mustering out pay will be paid only upon discharge or relief from active duty", that "The acceptance of a warrant in the Regular Army while continuing on active duty in Army of the United States status does not constitute a discharge or relief from active duty within the meaning of regulations pertaining to mustering out pay." (J. J. Bluhm, for Lt. Col. Paul Hayne, Jr., Chief, Settlements Division, Finance Center, U.S. Army, Indianapolis, Indiana, 4 Apr 1955).

[1024] Lowry Air Force Base is in the outskirts of Denver, Colorado. After WWII, Lowry AFB trained technicians for all branches of the U.S. military. Later, during 1953-1955, the air base was the "Summer White House" of President Dwight D. Eisenhower. On 1 Oct 1994, Lowry AFB was closed in military cost consolidations. (>> "Lowry AFB", website http://www.globalsecurity.org/ military/facility/lowry.htm, accessed Mar 2006.)

Regular Warrant Officer[1025] and, because the new U.S. Air Force did not use the rank of Warrant Officer, she was appointed to the Regular Army on 28 April 1949. While at Lowry Air Force Base, Smith purchased a new, 1949 Ford automobile, which two weeks later she apparently drove to her next assignment in Virginia.[1026]

In August 1949, Smith was assigned for one year to the newly created WAC Training Center in Fort Lee, Virginia[1027], for instruction in personnel work. In August 1950 she was accepted as a student in the Graduate School of Business at Columbia University[1028], but then due to the Korean hostilities she was assigned to Japan in September 1950, departing from the U.S. on 14 September. In Japan she served at General Headquarters in Tokyo (Gen. MacArthur's headquarters), then at Headquarters Camp, Yokohama[1029]. While in Japan she continued her U.S. Army education by completing a course to be an instructor in management training, which was given in Akamizu, Kyushu, by the Far East Air Forces under the U.S. Air Force, and a supervisory management course at Camp Yokohama under the U.S. Army.

She returned to the U.S. on 5 October 1953, which seems to be during the only interruption in her military career; she apparently was hospitalized. Her pay record, which she collated for a later claim, notes that she was (officially) in the Station Hospital at Yokohama from 13 September–5 October 1953, during which period she was not paid. From 6 October–11 December 1953 she was in the Army hospital at Phoenixville, Pennsylvania, during which time she was "Paid for month of December 53 as casual by Fin Off, VFAH, Phoenixville, Pa, while on 30 DDALV". The nature of her hospitalization is not known.

After a six-month assignment at Fort Knox, Louisville, Kentucky[1030], she was assigned in 1954 to Fort George G. Meade, Maryland[1031]. Her next assignment[1032] was to the Pentagon, Washington, D.C., for [1025] The Warrant Officer ranks are used by the Army, Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard branches of the military. Unlike commissioned officers, which procedurally are appointed by presidential commission and confirmed by the U.S. Senate, lower-rank warrant officers (Warrant Officer 1) are appointed by the service secretary but receive a commission from the President upon promotion to Chief Warrant Officer 2. Warrant officers are specialists, working within specific fields, unlike commissioned officers who serve at large in any branch or field within their service.

[1026] Photographs received in her effects in 2007 show several views of this automobile, with an annotation, "New car 8 Aug 49 Lowry AFB"; other photos show her loading and driving the car, "Leaving Lowry Aug 1949".

[1027] In 1948, the Women's Army Corp Training Center at Fort Lee was established, just days after the formal establishment of the WACs as part of the Regular Army. The training center was commanded, staffed, and operated mostly by women. By coincidence, the first commanding officer of the WAC Training Center was Lt. Col. Elizabeth Smith, appointed 4 Aug 1948. During the period 1948-1950, the Fort Lee center was also the only source of WAC officers through the WAC Officer Candidate School. The WAC Training Center at Fort Lee ended its activities in 1954 when the training center was moved to a permanent site at Fort McClellan, Alabama, until the WACs were disbanded on 20 Oct 1978. When hostilities in Korea began five years later, Yokohama ports were key to the resupply of Allied operations in Korea. An American military presence remains today in Yokohama ports. (>> "Yokohama North Dock", website http://www.globalsecurity.org/military/facility/yokohama-north-dock.htm, accessed Mar 2006.)

[1030] Fort Knox of course is widely known as the site of the super-secure U.S. Bullion Repository and its Gold Vault. Fort Knox is also the center of mechanized armor forces of the U.S. Army. Today it is the home base of the U.S.

Elisabeth Smith despised the climate of San Antonio, Texas, and was overjoyed to be transferred to Lowry Air Force Base in Colorado. This U.S. Air Force Douglas DC-3 (top, tail no. 746748) was her route to escape in November 1948, seen here prior to departing Lackland Air Force Base. At this time, she resided at 240 Colonial Ave., Alexandria, Virginia[1034] and at 333 S. Glebe Rd., Arlington, Virginia[1035]. She was then assigned for three years to Fort Ord, California[1036], and then to Orleans, France[1037]. [1031] Fort George G. Meade is midway between Washington, D.C., and Baltimore, Maryland. It became an Army installation in 1917 when it was a training center for new recruits. During WWII the facility saw renewed activity, then resumed peacetime and build-up readiness activities thereafter. In 1947, the Second U.S. Army Headquarters transferred to Fort Mead from Baltimore. In 1966 it was consolidated with the First U.S. Army and Fort Meade became its headquarters. (>> Fort George G. Mead website, http://www.ftmeade.army.mil/history.html; "Fort George G. [1032] Before being transferred to the Pentagon, Elisabeth Smith was at Fort Lee, Virginia, and in Florida. These assignments do not appear in her personal records, including her own narrative of service. The Fort Lee station is corroborated by a letter of appreciation addressed to her there, Hq LOGEX-55 Support Group (Prov), 10 May 1955. This may have been a provisional station for a specific project, during the time she was officially stationed at Fort Meade. The record of her in Florida is more circumstantial; whether it was a duty post or some other reason is not determined. A photograph of her appeared in an unattributed newspaper from Panama City, Florida, in September 1955. The caption reads, "Mrs. Anders W. Johnson and her guest, Chief Warrant Officer Elizabeth C. Smith, have a spot of coffee together before guests arrive for a party in Miss Smith's honor Thursday." There are no other details. A photo found in the effects of Elisabeth Smith Dewing [Spamer Family Historical Photos, no. 3267] depicts the woman with her children, identified as "Dottie Johnson with Candy & Sandy, Panama City, Fla. Sep 1955".

In addition to having had been the home base for several distinguished infantry, artillery, and amphibious divisions of the Army, in the 1950s Fort Ord became the main Army Infantry Training Center. The base was closed in Sep 1994. (>> "Fort Ord/Presidio of Monterey (POM) Annex", website http://www.globalsecurity.org/military/facility/fort-ord.htm, accessed 30 Mar 2006.)

On 13 Aug 1961, the Soviet Union blocked lines of transportation and communication with West Berlin, which instigated the Berlin Air Lift that provided air flights of humanitarian aid to the isolated city through restricted air corridors. The historic, colonial manor that had dominated the area since the 18th century had been largely destroyed by fire in 1783 when it was further damaged by cannon fire by the British Navy enroute to Fort McHenry, in Baltimore, after having sacked and burned the national capital in 1814. Thereafter the property passed through several hands until the District of Columbia purchased the site for a prison in 1910. Local objections led to the transfer of the property to the War Department in at the rank of Chief Warrant Officer 4, the highest peacetime rank for warrant officers. During her service, Elisabeth Smith's duties were mostly related to administration and personnel; other assignments were in the fields of intelligence, operations and training, logistics, and assignments under the Inspector General.

Elisabeth Smith was awarded a Bronze Star for service with GHQ, FEC Japan[1039], and the Army Commendation Medal for service as First Sergeant at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas. Other decorations include service medals for American Theater, World War II Victory, National Defense, Korea, Army of Occupation, Japan, United Nations, and Department of Defense Service badge for duty with the Joint Chiefs.

Her service in the military was exemplary. Selections from her U.S. Army Personnel Records file that she had in her possession include the following comments from letters of appreciation and superior officers' appraisals of her performance. All of the memoranda are transcribed here because they provide information about the kinds of administrative work Smith performed.

> "CWO Smith has demonstrated outstanding ability and superior performance of duties. She is thoroughly qualified in all phases of personnel administration, classification & assignment and related subjects. This warrant officer has shown a remarkable ability to achieve accurate, prompt and effective results which has reflected great credit to herself and this headquarters. In the past year CWO Smith has served under three different rating officers, all of whom have rated her duties as being outstanding. It is believed that this recommendation for promotion is ell warranted and is in the best interests of the service. If promotion is made I would desire to have CWO Smith continue serving in this command." —Col. Paul A. Jaccard, Commanding, Hq Camp Yokohama

> "This section was assigned the difficult task of processing approximately 2,700 officer and enlisted personnel over a period of two weekends. To accomplish this mission it was necessary at times to work twenty-four hours or more of consecutive duty; an throughout these extended periods of duty it was required that extreme tactfulness, courtesy, and accuracy be maintained.

1912, and Camp Belvoir was established in 1915 by engineer troops from the Washington Barracks (now Fort McNair). It was re-established as Fort Humphreys in 1922, and renamed Fort Belvoir in 1935, where until 1989 was the headquarters of the U.S. Army Engineer School. Thereafter it has been a part of the Military District of Washington, providing essential administrative, logistical, and contingency support to the nation's capital. 3. [ca. 1956] A handwritten personal letter from Lee C. Miller, dated "6 January", placed in Smith's Personnel Records file between 1955 and 1957; written on letterhead from the California Hotel, Paris, probably at about the time when Smith was reassigned to the Joint Chiefs Office at the Pentagon. Miller writes:

"I enjoyed immensely knowing you and working with you and would be delighted to have the opportunity to repeat the experience. It amazed me how you were able to retain such a calm and imperturbable attitude in the face of the frustrations, harassments, and even abuse which was your lot. It was not small accomplishment for you to be even gay, pleasant and ladylike in all circumstances. No less was I impressed by the quiet and efficient way in which you did your work—and correctly solved your problems, I might add. In brief, I have a great deal of respect and admiration for you, and I wish you well in your new job."

4. In March 1957, letters were sent to Smith under a cover letter from Brig. Gen. R. D. Wentworth, USAF, Office of the Secretary, Joint Chiefs of Staff, Washington, D.C., 29 March 1957. They relate to her work with a NATO intelligence group meeting. General Wentworth's letter is as follows:

"I am pleased to forward Brigadier General Richard Collins' expression of appreciation in which he singles out your part in making this year's Ad Hoc Intelligence Group (NATO) Conference a success. It is particularly pleasing to me when the efforts of a member of the Joint Secretariat merit recognition of this nature."

28 March 1957—Brig. Gen. Richard Collins, USA, Deputy Director for Intelligence, The Joint Staff; addressed to Smith as Assistant Military Secretary, JIG/JIC, Washington, D.C.:

"I want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to you for your many long hours of hard work and excellent work during the recent Ad Hoc Intelligence Group (NATO) Conference.

"Your cheerfulness, tact, patience and outstanding initiative displayed at all times during the Conference were of the highest order. The efficient way in which all U.S. papers were handled and the manner in which all administrative details were completed contributed greatly to the over-all success of this year's assembly. You can look back on the recent deliberations with the British and French Delegations with the satisfaction of a task well done."

The above letter of appreciation was accompanied by a copy of a letter written to Brig. Gen. Collins:

"The voluntary assistance rendered the designated Conference Secretary (Commander M. B. Davis, USN) by CWO Elisabeth C. Smith, USA, was invaluable. Without her efficient cooperation, it would have been administratively impossible for the production processes to have kept abreast of conference progress." —Col. L. A. Walsh, Jr., Intelligence and Security Team, Standing Group, North Atlantic Military Committee, 28 March 1957

5. In 1958, WO Smith again participated in a NATO AD Hoc Intelligence Working Group, for which she again received letters of appreciation under a covering memorandum from Brig. Gen. Collins, 20 March 1958:

"It is with pleasure that I forward to you the attached memorandum of appreciation from Major Prado, Secretary to the Ad Hoc Intelligence Working Group, NATO. I would like to add my own words of appreciation to those of Major Prado for a job excellently done."

Memorandum to Brig Gen. Collins, from Maj. Miguel Prado, USA, Secretary, IWG, Standing Group, North Atlantic Military Committee, 19 March 1958:

"Your attention is respectfully called to the outstanding manner in which CWO Elisabeth C. Smith performed her duties during the Ad Hoc Intelligence Working Group conference held in Washington 3-18 March 1958.

"Miss Smith not only performed her duties as Administrative Assistant to the United States Delegation with great efficiency and initiative, but her cooperation and advice were of invaluable help to the Secretary, Ad Hoc Intelligence Working Group, and greatly contributed to the successful operation of the Secretariat."

6. 10 June 1959—Efficiency Report during Smith's station at Hq USATC INF (6003), Fort Ord, California; rated by Capt. Robert O. Taylor, Administrative Assistant, Personnel Office. The description of her duties was: "Asst to OIC, AG Off. Br. Performs Personnel Officer Duties in administering approx 700 AD officer records and approx 200 ADTRA officer records. Duties involve preparation of pay vouchers, control of efficiency reports, issuance of orders, personnel actions, maintenance of records and forms and preparation of correspondence." Her performance evaluation was as follows:

"CWO Smith is one of the finest Warrant Officers I have ever been associated with. She is intelligent and well qualified professionally. She is industrious, seeks responsibility and has the courage of her convictions. She is liked and respected by both subordinates and superiors. She is neat in appearance, has excellent bearing and is courteous. She is morally scrupulous. She participates in social activities and is an outstanding team worker. I know of no deficiency or weakness. She appears to be physically capable of performing duties required of grade & branch in time of war."

Her ranking of Performance of Present Duty was at the highest ranking level: "Outstanding performance of this duty found in very few officers." Her Overall Value to Service was ranked likewise at the highest ranking level: "An outstanding officer of rare value to the service."

7. 22 August 1961—Efficiency report during Smith's station at Hq USATC Inf & US Army Gar (6003-00), Fort Ord, California; rated by Maj. L. J. Chamberlain, Plans and Services Div., G1, and endorsed by Col. Arthur H. Black, ACofS, G1. Smith at the time was Asst. G1. Her performance evaluation was as follows:

"CWO Smith is a brilliant staff officer who has the ability to quickly and accurately analyze problems and competently produce effective results. Her clear, orderly thinking and outstanding abilities in planning, along with the ability to work steadily under pressure, make her an invaluable staff officer for the highest level of command. Possesses fine character with an exception degree of dignity and poise. She has the physical ability to perform in time of war the duties required by her grade and branch."

Elisabeth Smith's world travels with the Army also gave her the opportunity for recreational travel during her service. While she was stationed in Japan she went to India. And when she was stationed in France she traveled in Europe. It was during a cruise to Greece that met her future husband, Dr. Stephen Dewing.

Retirement

When Elisabeth Smith retired from the Army, she married Dr. Stephen B. Dewing, a radiologist who was taking up a new position in the College of Medicine in West Virginia University. They lived in Morgantown, West Virginia. At this time she became known as Bess Dewing.

(Spamer 3410)

(Spamer 2709)

Elisabeth Smith married Dr. Stephen B. Dewing on 18 March 1965 at Fort Belvoir, Virginia. He was a radiologist (seen here in his office, right, ca. 1957). The photo at upper right, after their wedding, shows the couple with, following behind, her father, Earle Smith, and Earle's niece, Helen Mummert (now McCarraher). The Dewings later removed to a home atop Baker Hill, east of South Waterford, Maine (below). They also had a cottage on nearby Mcwain Pond (below right).

(Spamer 3310)

(Spamer 1534)

Dr. Dewing stayed in this position only for a few years, becoming discontented with "other people's" regulations. The Dewings moved to a large mountaintop home on Baker Hill, between South Waterford and Norway, Maine, when he obtained a department head position in two local hospitals. Their Baker Hill home was originally built in the 1700s, and added to, with a connecting breezeway to a large barn. A small farm area was not planted, but was a haven to wildlife. The house had a large, traditional colonial kitchen, with a cook-in fireplace and adjacent ovens. Situated at the top of Baker Hill, the road from South Waterford (Mill Hill Rd. and Baker Hill Rd.) was paved only as far as their home; on the downward side leading to Sodom Rd. and eventually to Norway it was unimproved gravel. (Today, all of the road is paved.) Snowplows would clear the paved road to the Dewing home and use their driveway to turn around. Bess Dewing would invite the plow operators in for coffee and hot chocolate.

The Dewings also owned a small cottage on Mcwain Rd. on the east side of nearby Mcwain Pond, a lake about two miles long and a half mile wide. On a visit to the Dewings with Katharine S. Spamer, Earle Spamer and his sister, Carol, took a canoe out to the other side of the pond, where they could clearly hear Katharine Spamer speaking. Upon returning they mentioned this, which Katharine ("Finn" as she was known to them) did not believe until the topic of the conversation was repeated.

After the death of Bess's husband in 1996, she moved to 14 Paris St., Apt. 2, Norway, Maine. In latter part of 1998 she moved to a small house at 76 Oxford St., South Paris, Maine, where she remained until her death. (See the notes for Stephen Dewing for their residential locations while they were married.) She remained independent until her final, brief illness in January 2007.

Bess Dewing's cremated remains were accompanied by a military honor guard when she was placed next to her husband in Elm Vale Cemetery, South Waterford, Maine, on 13 January 2007. The flag was presented to her husband's family.

Stephen Bronson Dewing (1920–1996)
(husband of Elisabeth Covington Smith)
"Steve"

Stephen Bronson Dewing was educated at Princeton University (B.A., 1942) and the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University (M.D., 1945). He completed Radiology Board examinations in April 1963 and thereafter specialized in radiology.

His military service and employment is as follows:

1945-1948: Captain, U.S. Army Medical Corps
1948-1951: U.S. Army and New Jersey National Guard
1963-1965: Head, Department of Radiology, Hunterdon Medical Center, Flemington, New Jersey.
1965-1969: Associate Professor of Radiology, College of Medicine, West Virginia University
1969-1982: Head (concurrently) of radiology departments at Stephens Memorial Hospital, Norway, Maine, and Bridgton Hospital, Bridgton, Maine; retiring from these positions

Residences of Stephen Bronson Dewing:

1965-1969: Morgantown, West Virginia [an address book of Earle C. Smith lists the Dewings' mailing address as Rt. 6, Box 311, Morgantown]
1969-ca. 1995: Baker Hill, between South Waterford and Norway, Maine
1995-1996: 11 Market Square, South Paris, Maine

Collateral Genealogy
(13 descendants)

The genealogy of the Drummond family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of George Drummond

Generation No. 1

1. George[1] Drummond was born about 1813 in Scotland, and died before 1894. He married Sarah Lalor. She was born about 1828 in Vermont, and died 1913.

Children of George Drummond and Sarah Lalor are:

\+ 2 i. Robert[2] Drummond, born April 1850 in Pennsylvania; died 1916.
3 ii. George Drummond, born about 1855 in Pennsylvania.
4 iii. Edmund Drummond, born about 1857 in Pennsylvania.
5 iv. Sarah Drummond, born about May 1860 in Pennsylvania.
6 v. Winslow Drummond, born about 1865 in Pennsylvania.
7 vi. Gregory Drummond, born about 1866 in Pennsylvania.
8 vii. Gilbert Drummond, born about 1868 in Pennsylvania.

NOTES

1. George Drummond (senior) (ca. 1813–before 1894)

His immigration record has not been located. In the U.S. censuses his occupation is listed as baker.

Residences of George Drummond (from U.S. censuses):
1850: 3rd Ward, Kensington, Philadelphia Co., Pennsylvania (today part of Philadelphia city)
1860: 19th Ward, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
1870: 17th Ward, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

He was originally buried in Laurel Hill Cemetery, Philadelphia; in 1894 removed to Lot 57, Sec. H, Mount Vernon Cemetery, Philadelphia. In the same grave is buried a Mary Drummond, who also was removed from Laurel Hill Cemetery; her relationship is not known.

Sarah (Lalor) Drummond (ca. 1828–1913)
(wife of George Drummond (senior) [No. 1])

She is buried in Lot 57, Sec. H, Mount Vernon Cemetery, Philadelphia. Also buried in the lot is Hannah Lalor, interred 1927, aged 85 years; her relationship is not determined.

3. George Drummond (junior) (ca. 1855–)

The 1890 Philadelphia city directory lists a George Drummond, Jr., plumber, who may be this George Drummond. His business was at 1855 Germantown Ave.; his residence was at 3201 N. Broad St.

5. Sarah Drummond (ca. 1860–)

She does not appear in the 1870 U.S. census; she may have been deceased.

Generation No. 2

2. Robert[2] Drummond (George[1]) was born April 1850 in Pennsylvania, and died 23 April 1916 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He married Margaret C. She was born March 1854 in Ireland, and died 1919.

Children of Robert Drummond and Margaret are:

	9	i.	Helen D.[3] Drummond, born September1875 in Pennsylvania; died 1963.
	10	ii.	Sarah W. Drummond, born June 1878 in Pennsylvania.
	11	iii.	George Drummond, born about 1879 in Pennsylvania.
	12	iv.	Robert Samuel Drummond, born 30 September1884 in Pennsylvania. He married Elise about 1908; born about 1882 in Ohio.
+	13	v.	Elisabeth Fulton Drummond, born 11 April 1888 in Pennsylvania; died 28 June 1916.

NOTES

2. Robert Drummond (1850–1916) Also see Additions & Corrections

Residences of Robert Drummond (from U.S. censuses and Philadelphia city directories):
1880 census: 1528 Germantown Ave., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
1890 city directory, 1900 census: 2025 Germantown Ave.
1910 census: 1218 W. Hilton St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
At death: 1218 W. Hilton St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

In the 1910 census, Robert Drummond's household included George Hamilton, nephew, born August 1881 in Pennsylvania, a plumber's helper. Whose child he was is not known at this time.

He is buried in Lot 57, Sec. H, Mount Vernon Cemetery, Philadelphia.

Margaret C. Drummond (1854–1919)
(wife of Robert Drummond)
"Maggie"

She immigrated to the U.S. in 1868.

She is buried in Lot 57, Sec. H, Mount Vernon Cemetery, Philadelphia.

9. Helen D. Drummond (1875–1963)

She never married. She lived most of her adult life with a companion, Miss Margaret Tredick, who in 1964 resided at 1105 N. 63rd St., Philadelphia.

At the time of the 1930 U.S. census, she and Margaret Tredick resided at C1 [sic] Montgomery Ave., Bala, Lower Merion Twp., Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

At the time of the 1900 U.S. census she worked as a bookkeeper; in the 1930 census she had no occupation but Tredick worked as a secretary for a trust company.

10. Sarah W. Drummond (1878–)

She was known as "Sallie".

12. Robert Samuel Drummond (1884–)
and his wife Elise Drummond (ca. 1882–)

His 1917/1918 draft registration card as viewed on microfilm is largely unreadable, although his full name and birth date indicate that this is he.

Occupations of Robert Samuel Drummond (from U.S. censuses and other sources):
1917/1918 draft registration: Worked for W. F.(?) Wilson, [illegible] Metals Co., 2 Rector St.
1920 census: Mechanical engineer; manager of a radiator company
1930 census: Factory owner

Residences of Robert Samuel Drummond (from U.S. censuses and other sources):
1917/1918 draft registration: 2877 W. Grand Blvd., Detroit, Wayne Co., Michigan
1920 census: 751 Claymont(?) Ave., Detroit, Wayne Co., Michigan
1930 census: 1168 Boston Blvd., Detroit, Wayne Co., Michigan

Robert and Elise Drummond either had no children or did not have children registered in the censuses. They have not been located in the 1910 census.

The parents of Elise Drummond both were born in Germany.

Generation No. 3

13. Elisabeth Fulton[3] Drummond (Robert[2], George[1]) was born 11 April 1888 in Pennsylvania, and died 28 June 1916 at 1218 W. Hilton St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. She married Earle Covington Smith 05 July 1912, son of John Smith and Ella Seville. He was born 19 February 1885 in Mount Salem, Wilmington, New Castle Co., Delaware, and died 12 June 1965 in Wilmington, New Castle Co., Delaware.

See the main Smith genealogy for information about Elisabeth (Drummond) and Earle Smith and their descendants.

An address book of Elisabeth Covington Smith lists her mother's date of birth as 11 April 1887.

Fulton was a family name; otherwise nothing is known further at this time. J. Lathrop Mack wrote to Earle C. Smith in 1934 with regard to the Fulton connections: "I feel convinced that your daughter can complete her line through her mother Elisabeth Drummond back to the following which is taken from "The Smith Family" by Joseph S. Harris."[1040] He then roughly transcribed selections from the book, which trace a partial ancestry to "John Smith (Macdonald)" born about 1655 and lived in county Monaghan, Ireland; his daughter, Mary Smith, married William Fulton and they settled in or near Lancaster, Pennsylvania. He followed the descendency, taking note "The occurrence of the two Mary Smiths in different generations has made some confusion in the several published accounts of the Ancestry of Robert Fulton, the inventor." Many of the Fultons resided in Lancaster Co., and regretfully Lathrop Mack only roughly summarized the descendency, which apparently does not reach the generation required to connect with Elisabeth Fulton Drummond; hence this ancestry, as assumed by Lathrop Mack, must be held suspect for the time being.

End of Drummond Family collateral genealogy

[1040] Presumably he referred to this title: Joseph S. Harris, Record of the Smith Family Descended from John Smith, Born 1655 in County Monaghan, Ireland (Press of G. F. Lasher, Philadelphia, 1906). Thus far a copy of this book has not been examined. Philadelphia libraries do not at this time include it in their searchable catalogues.

Greenlee Family
Collateral Genealogy
(17 descendants)

The genealogy of the Greenlee family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

The family emigrated from Scotland, probably first to Canada in the mid-1800s. Once they settled in the area of Denver, Colorado, they were part of a thriving business in stone quarrying and supply to building contractors.

In the 1876 city directory for Denver, Arapahoe Co., Colorado, is listed "Greenlee & Co. (William E. Greenlee and George W. Drake), propr[ietor]s Denver Marble Works, 316 Larimer".

The 1892 Denver directory lists "Greenlee & Co (W E Greenlee and G W Drake), props Denver Marble Wks, 1224 Lawrence" and "Greenlee & Sons (R C, J R and W T), stone contractors and dealers, 1513 13th".

The 1910 Denver directory lists "Greenlee Stone & Building Co., J R Greenlee vice-pres, W T Greenlee sec and treas. quarrymen, dealers and contractors, 1414 9th" and "Greenlee William E. pres Denver Marble & Granite Co.", residing at 760 Marion St.

The 1913 Denver directory lists William E. Greenlee as president of the Denver Marble & Granite Co.; his residence is listed as 760 Marion St. Certainly William E. Greenlee is a relation to the Greenlees cited below, but his relationship to them is as yet undetermined.

The Greenlees operated the large Kenmuir Quarry in Red Rock Canyon, near Denver. Nearby there also is a Greenlee Canyon (or Wild Horse Canyon), which surely receives its name from the family, and probably for quarries there, too. The Kenmuir Quarry received its orders mostly from Denver, but from as far away as cities in Texas; and unlike the lower-technology quarries elsewhere in the area, Kenmuir was known for its use of expensive steam-powered machinery because the stone had to be cut rather than cleaved. By the end of 1889, only two quarrying operations remained in Red Rock Canyon, one of them the larger Greenlee-run quarry, employing 120 men and shipping 5 carloads of stone per day, amounting to more than 42,000 tons in 1890. The Manitou Sandstone[1041] quarried here has a distinctive red-orange color and uniformity of grain size, which placed it in demand, but due to its cost it was often used more for ornamental architecture rather than solid building materials. But probably due to declining demand the Greenlee quarry shut down sometime between 1909 and 1915. The sandstone from Red Rock Canyon has not weathered well, however, due to its relative softness. Still, hundreds of tons of the stone were also used in 1896 for the foundation of the chlorination mill at the Colorado-Philadelphia Reduction Co., near Red Rock Canyon, which facility was used to refine gold ore from Cripple Creek.[1042] In 1904, the stone was also used in the [1041] The Manitou Sandstone was a building trade name for the geological formation called the Lyons Sandstone, specifically the distinctive red-orange sandstone quarried from Red Rock Canyon, at the south end of the Garden of the Gods. Traditionally used for sidewalk flagstones and curbing, the Permian-age Lyons Sandstone was sometimes used for buildings, as was the case for many structures on the University of Colorado campus in Boulder, as well as various buildings in Denver. construction of the history Denver & Rio Grande railroad depot in Glenwood Springs, for which the Greenlee Stone & Building Co. was a subcontractor.[1043]

One historical note indicates that the Greenlee quarry operation was begun by "Robert C. Greenlee and two sons" in the 1880s. Apparently, ruins of the quarry operation were still present toward the end of the 20th century, including rooming houses, a power house, and remnants of a railroad spur. According to the item, the Greenlees "abandoned their works in the 1920s with the decline in use of the softer rock" and the property was bought 20 years later by "the Bocks".[1044]

The Denver Marble Company continues in operation today, principally providing cut and prepared stone for home and commercial decoration and functional uses. Unfortunately, the company webpage has no historical section.[1045]

Descendants of Robert Greenlee

Generation No. 1

1. Robert[1] Greenlee was born about 1830 in Scotland. He married Elizabeth. She was born about 1836 in Scotland.

Children of Robert Greenlee and Elizabeth are:

41. Henry Bronson[7] Dewing (Stephen[6], Andrew[5], Abijah[4], Hezekiah[3], Edmund[2], Andrew[1]) was born 02 March 1882 in Westminster, Connecticut, and died 05 September 1956 in Washington, D.C. He married Eunice Dewing 1910, daughter of Oliver Dewing and Elizabeth Ogden. She was born 03 June 1888 in Wilton, Connecticut, and died 06 February 1954 in Trenton, New Jersey.

Children of Henry Dewing and Eunice Dewing are:

51 i. Charles Edward[8] Dewing, born 17 December 1911 in Constantinople, Turkey; died 14 November 1994 in Falls Church, Virginia. He married Rosalie Nestor 19 December 1953; born 30 July 1921 in West Virginia; died 07 December 1981.

52 ii. Elizabeth Ogden Dewing, born 09 December 1912 in Constantinople, Turkey; died 21 February 1995 in Seattle, Washington. She married Secrest.

53 iii. Henry Lincoln Dewing, born 11 August 1914 in Constantinople, Turkey; died 1920 in Athens, Greece.

\+ 54 iv. Stephen Bronson Dewing, born 18 December 1920 in Princeton, New Jersey; died 07 February 1996 in Norway, Maine.

NOTES

41. Henry Bronson Dewing (1882–1956)

He married his half 1st cousin.

He was a professor of Classics. He received his B.A. from the University of California at Berkeley, 1903, M.A., 1905; Ph.D., Yale University, 1908; L.H.D., Bowdoin College, 1928. In 1953, he received an honorary LL.D. from the University of California at Berkeley.

When he graduated from the undergraduate program at Berkeley, he was the second most-distinguished student in the Military Department in his graduating class.[1046]

In 1919, Henry B. Dewing was awarded a medal by the Greek government for his service in the American Red Cross mission to Greece. He was among 33 officers and two nurses of the American Red Cross who were honored. He received the Greek medal, third class, with bronze palm.[1047]

[1049] Robert College was founded in Istanbul, Turkey, in 1863 by two American philanthropists to offer children an "American style" education under the Ottoman Empire. A decree from the Sultan in 1869 opened the way for the school to build its first building on its new site on a plot of land with an adjacent stone quarry overlooking the Bosphorus. In the 20th century the school added collegiate curricula, and in 1971 the higher education division was transferred to the government of Turkey and operates as Boğaziçi University. The two secondary schools merged and continue as Robert College today. (>>Robert College website, http://portal.robcol.k12.tr/tr/default.aspx; "History of Bogazici University", Bogazici University website, http://www.boun.edu.tr/about/history.html; both accessed 2 Oct 2006.)

[1050] On 27 May 1928, the Near East College Association in New York City announced that Henry B. Dewing, then professor of Greek at Bowdoin College, had been appointed the first president of Athens College, a new American school in Greece. (Associated Press; cited from the Dallas Morning News historical archive, 28 May 1927.) Athens College was established in the mid-1920s by Grecian and American philanthropists; in Greece was established The Hellenic American Educational Foundation, with a board of directors (The Trustees of Athens College in Greece) in New York. The "college", begun in 1925, provided primary- and secondary-school education for boys and girls in Greece. It began with a meager enrollment in a small, rented house on 18 Androu Street, with borrowed furniture; a single boarding student was housed in a nearby hotel. But by 12 Nov 1928, the first classes were held on the present campus of 35 acres in suburban Psychico, received from school benefactors. Dewing was succeeded by Homer Woodhull Davis, who served at the school's president 1932-1960. Athens College is still in existence today, educating several thousand students, plus a large adult education program (http://www.athenscollege.org/html/history.htm; school website [in Greek] http://www. haef.gr). Davis was also the author of The Story of Athens College: The First Thirty-five Years, 1925-1960 (Athens College Press, Athens, 1992).

[1051] This is probably Dewing's most critical work. Procopius was born at Caesarea, Palestine, late 5th Century. He was secretary and legal advisor to Belisarius, the army commander who fought the Persians, the Vandals, and the Ostrogoths. He returned to Constantinople after 540 and died after 558. Dewing's translation of Procopius has also been reprinted with edited titles, such as Procopius: The Anecdota or Secret History. It is a part of the Loeb Classical Library, translated by Dewing in collaboration with Glanville Downey; it presents Greek and English texts on opposing pages.

56 ii. Edith V. Dewing, born about June 1918 in California.

NOTES

42. James Andrew Dewing (1884–1966)

At the time of the 1920 census he was a farmer residing in District 6, Walnut Creek, Contra Costa Co., California. A that time, the James A. Dewing family resided at the same farm, or adjacent to, the George Barry family (which included James' sister, Grace Barry).

Amelia (Faria) Dewing (1894–1977)
(wife of James Andrew Dewing)

She immigrated to the U.S. 1 July 1905 in New Bedford, Massachusetts, aboard the S.S. Peninsular from Fayal, Azores.

45. Eunice[7] Dewing (Oliver Morse[6], Andrew[5], Abijah[4], Hezekiah[3], Edmund[2], Andrew[1]) was born 03 June 1888 in Wilton, Connecticut, and died 06 February 1954 in Trenton, New Jersey. She married Henry Bronson Dewing 1910, son of Stephen Dewing and Eva Lincoln. He was born 02 March 1882 in Westminster, Connecticut, and died 05 September 1956 in Washington, D.C.

Children are listed above under (41) Henry Bronson Dewing.

Generation No. 8

54. Stephen Bronson[8] Dewing (Henry Bronson[7], Stephen[6], Andrew[5], Abijah[4], Hezekiah[3], Edmund[2], Andrew[1]) was born 18 December 1920 in Princeton, New Jersey, and died 07 February 1996 in Norway, Maine. He married (1) Millicent Laubenheimer 14 March 1943, daughter of Ernest Laubenheimer and Myrtle Ford. She was born 12 July 1909 in Stoneham, Massachusetts, and died 18 November 1997 in Flemington, New Jersey. He married (2) Elisabeth Covington Smith 18 March 1965, daughter of Earle Smith and Elisabeth Drummond. She was born 25 April 1916 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and died 05 January 2007 in Stephens Memorial Hospital, Norway, Maine.

Child of Stephen Dewing and Millicent Laubenheimer is:
\+ 57 i. Andrew Ogden[9] Dewing, born 1948.

See the main Smith family genealogy for information about Elisabeth Covington Smith.

NOTES

54. Stephen Bronson Dewing (1920–1996)

Stephen Bronson Dewing was educated at Princeton University (B.A., 1942) and the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University (M.D., 1945). He completed Radiology Board examinations in April 1963 and thereafter specialized in radiology.

His undergraduate senior thesis title was "The Development of the Blood Cells in the Chicken".

His military service and employment was as follows (from American Men and Women of Science[1052] and family data):

1945-1948: Captain, U.S. Army Medical Corps
1948-1951: U.S. Army and New Jersey National Guard
1963-1965: Head, Department of Radiology, Hunterdon Medical Center, Flemington, New Jersey.
1965-1969: Associate Professor of Radiology, College of Medicine, West Virginia University
1969-1982: Head (concurrently) of radiology departments at Stephens Memorial Hospital, Norway, Maine, and Bridgton Hospital, Bridgton, Maine; retiring from these positions

Residences of Stephen Bronson Dewing (from family data):
1965-1969: Morgantown, West Virginia
1969-ca. 1995: Baker Hill, between South Waterford and Norway, Maine
1995-1996: 11 Market Square, South Paris, Maine

Among his publications are:

Stephen B. Dewing, Modern Radiology in Historical Perspective, with a foreword by Maxwell H. Poppel (Thomas, Springfield, Illinois, 1962)

Stephen B. Dewing, Radiotherapy of Benign Disease, with a chapter on Radiotherapy of Benign Skin Diseases by Ralph Wier Grover (Thomas, Springfield, Illinois, 1965)

Stephen Bronson and Millicent (Laubenheimer) Dewing divorced in 1964-1965.

Stephen Bronson Dewing is buried in Elm Vale Cemetery, South Waterford, Maine.

Millicent (Laubenheimer) Dewing
(wife of Stephen Bronson Dewing)

At this time, the only information about her family relates to her parents:

Ernest G. Laubenheimer (ca. 1873–) was born in New York; his parents were born in Germany. At the time of the 1910–1930 U.S. censuses, he was a lithographic engraver.

Residences of Ernest G. Laubenheimer (from U.S. censuses):
1910, 1920: 417 E. 51st St., New York, New York
1930: 763 38th St., North Bergen, Hudson Co., New Jersey

Myrtle (Ford) Laubenheimer (ca. 1880–) was born in Michigan. Her father was born in England or Michigan; her mother was born in Maine.

The 1900 U.S. census for Ward 12, Boston, Massachusetts, lists a Myrtle Ford, born about 1880 in Michigan, and her mother, Christiana Ford (born December 1865 in Maine), residing with Christiana's mother, Nellie Vosburg (head of household, born July 1863 in Maine), at 45 Concord Square.

There is conflicting information about the birthplace of Myrtle Ford's father: in the 1900 census (if the Myrtle Ford cited just above is the correct Myrtle Ford) and the 1920 census, her father is listed as having been born in Michigan, but 1910 and 1930 censuses he is listed as having been born in England.

No other siblings are noted for Myrtle Ford in the censuses examined.

217. Elouise[8] Smith (John Edward[7], John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 03 May 1891 at 520 Greensborough St., Easton, Talbot Co., Maryland, and died 31 August 1979 at 24 Halcyon Dr., New Castle, New Castle Co., Delaware. She married Herbert Frank Montgomery 09 June 1915 at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, son of Herbert Montgomery and Bertha Tesson. He was born 23 June 1883 in Alton, Illinois, and died 30 July 1934 at 4951 Walton Ave., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Children of Elouise Smith and Herbert Montgomery are:
\+ 351 i. William Tesson[9] Montgomery, born 15 May 1916 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; died in New Castle, Delaware.
\+ 352 ii. Helen Montgomery, born 19 August 1918 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
\+ 353 iii. Jane Montgomery, born 24 August 1924 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; died 22 April 2007 in Delaware.

NOTES

217. Elouise (Smith) Montgomery (1891–1979)

The wedding of Elouise Smith and Herbert Frank Montgomery took place in her father's home. The marriage was officiated by her father and Rev. Charles W. Harvey (of the Church of the New Jerusalem, 22nd and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia).

An address book of Elisabeth C. Smith from the late 1940s-1950s lists Mrs. H. F. Montgomery as residing at 4951 Hazel Ave., Philadelphia. Later she resided, until her death, with her daughter, Helen, in New Castle, Delaware.

Elouise (Smith) Montgomery and Herbert Frank Montgomery are buried in lot 715, River Section, West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Bala Cynwyd, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.

Herbert Frank Montgomery (1883–1934)
(husband of Elouise Smith)

In the 1910 Philadelphia city directory, Herbert Frank Montgomery was a salesman residing at 933 S. 50th St.

Residences of Herbert Frank Montgomery (from U.S. census and other sources):

A search of 1830 and 1840 U.S. censuses shows a John Barncastle family residing in the Southwark section of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; he may be Emily Barncastle's father. The 1840 census records a female living there in the age group under five years. The connections to Emily Barncastle are as yet unproven.

3. John Tesson (ca. 1862–)

At the time of the 1880 U.S. census, John Tesson was an apprentice engineer on a steamboat.

4. Frank Barncastle Tesson (1866–1915)
and his wife Alice (Lowe) Tesson (1853–1915)

The 1905 Philadelphia city directory lists a Frank "E." Tesson, buyer, residing at 604 S. 48th St.

The 1900 U.S. census gives Alice Lowe's birth date as 1863, an error.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Barncastle Tesson were lost in the sinking of R.M.S. Lusitania, which was torpedoed by a German submarine in the Irish Sea on 7 May 1915.[1053] Their remains were not recovered; they either went down aboard the ship or were among the many who were unidentified and buried in mass graves in Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. Tesson were Saloon (first-class) passengers aboard the Lusitania, enroute to Paris on a last-minute business trip. Memorial services were held for the Tessons on 17 May 1915 at the Chambers-Wyllie Memorial Presbyterian Church, on South Broad Street in Philadelphia. There is a memorial stone to the Tessons in the Alton Cemetery, Alton, Madison Co., Illinois.

Frank B. Tesson worked for the John Wanamaker department stores (based in Philadelphia) for his last 15 years, the last seven of which he was head of the shoe department in its New York City store. He was also vice president of the Wanamaker Board of Trade.

News of the Tessons' deaths came to Philadelphia where John Wanamaker[1054] himself took up the search for three of his employees as well as other Philadelphians lost aboard the ship. He sent a cablegram to the [1053] The Lusitania was built by John Brown & Co., Ltd., in Glasgow; she was launched on 7 Jun 1906. She was a four-funneled, 31,550-ton ship, 762.2 ft long, 87.8 ft in the beam; quadruple screws with a service speed of 25 knots; accommodating 563 1st Class passengers, 464 2nd Class passengers, and 1,138 3rd Class passengers. On her final voyage, she departed on 1 May 1915 from Pier 54 on the Hudson River in New York City. Six days later, German U-boat U-20 sighted the ship and fired a single torpedo, striking the forward cargo hold of the Lusitania while she sailed 14 miles off the Old Head of Kinsale, Southern Ireland. After a huge secondary explosion, likely the result of a consignment of artillery shells stored there, the Lusitania turned toward land, rolling to her starboard side, and having traveled another two miles sank by the bow in just 18 minutes, settling in 310 feet of water. Of the 1,201 men, women, and children who died; fewer than 400 were recovered, not all of them identified.

[1054] John Wanamaker (1838-1922) was a Philadelphia retail merchant of world renown. He revolutionized the retail business, creating the first department store in 1876, and was a champion of numerous charities and human services. After having first been in business with a partner, he created the John Wanamaker store in Philadelphia. After strong successes, he built a mammoth 14-story, square-block department store that was the seat of his mercantile empire, housing (what still is) the largest pipe organ in the world and a branch post office, the only such branch on private property in America. The post office was as the result of his being the Postmaster General, 1889-1893, during which time he began the Rural Free Delivery system and pioneered sorting mail at sea. In his massive retail business, he established sweeping employee-benefit programs, such as health care, vacation time, and pensions. He opened his New York City store in 1896. The John Wanamaker store eventually closed and passed through ownership of several other major American department store chains. In 2007, the store, now owned by Macy's, had been reduced to occupy just a few floors; the remainder of the mammoth building has been refitted as an department store's London office, where worked his grandson, John Wanamaker, Jr., and George Kent, instructing them "to leave at once for the Irish coast and to search through hospitals, private houses, coast cottages and other places where refugees from the wreck might find shelter or recovered bodies be taken."[1055] Wanamaker likewise cabled American ambassador Page:

> "We are very anxious about Philadelphia and New York passengers. Will you take steps to ascertain what you can and give us all the information possible regarding them? We will greatly appreciate any effort you may make.
> "We place at your disposal our offices in Pall Mall to render New York and Philadelphia refugees any assistance they may require, either in the way of funds or personal necessities, such as clothing and the like."

Cables arrived in Philadelphia the next day, reporting that John Wanamaker, Jr., and George Kent "had reached the Irish coast and begun their search". Another cable from the American ambassador reported that "he had so far been unable to hear anything" of those whom Wanamaker was concerned.[1056]

That the Tessons were aboard the Lusitania came as a surprise to the family. As reported in The Philadelphia Inquirer:[1057]

> "Decided on Trip Suddenly
> "Mr. and Mrs. Frank B. Tesson, formerly of 646 South Forty-eighth street, but for the last six years living at 593 Riverside avenue, New York, are missing. Mr. Tesson was connected with the Wanamaker store in New York. He has a sister, Mrs. Bertha A. Montgomery, 4913 Warrington avenue, this city. She has gone to New York to take charge of the Tessons' apartment.
> "At Mrs Montgomery's home, H. F. Montgomery[1058], a nephew of Mr. Tesson, said that it was not known by the family that the Tessons were on the Lusitania until they got a letter last Monday morning. The letter, posted just before the Lusitania sailed, told of their hurried preparations to catch the boat. In the letter they discussed the possibility of a submarine attack, but did it lightly and seemingly without fear."

The memorial service for the Tessons, held in a South Broad Street church, brought hundreds and an outpouring of sympathy and faith, as quoted in the following box:[1059]

John Wanamaker Pays Tribute to Character of Dead Man and His Wife

Paying tribute to the memory of Frank B. Tesson and his wife, both of whom lost their lives when the Lusitania went down, nearly one thousand persons yesterday assembled in Chambers-Wylie Memorial Presbyterian Church, Broad street below Spruce, where memorial services were held.

Most of those present knew Mr. Tesson and his wife for many years, having been associated with the former in business. Since 1900 until his death Mr. Tesson had been connected with the John Wanamaker store as an executive, and it was while on duty that he met his death.

Although the Tessons had not lived in this city since 1908, both had many intimate friends here. From New York yesterday came nearly two score of men and women, heads of the various departments in the Wanamaker store there to attend the services.

R.M.S. Lusitania

(Library of Congress, George Grantham Bain collection)

(Left) Mercantile magnate JOHN WANAMAKER (1838–1922), delivered a eulogy of Frank and Emily Tesson at the memorial service held on 17 May 1915 in the Chambers-Wylie Memorial Presbyterian Church, a few blocks from Wanamaker's flagship store in Philadelphia. (Wanamaker photo taken 22 July 1915)

Frank Tesson was a department head in the Wanamaker Department Store in New York. He and his wife, Emily, were enroute to Europe on store business when they perished in the sinking of the R.M.S. Lusitania.

The services started shortly after 4.30 P. M. The chancel was covered with palms and ferns. Photographs of Mr. and Mrs. Tesson were in view. A chorus of eight voices opened the services by singing "Abide With Me," and then Rev. Asa A. Ferry delivered a prayer.

Touches on Tragedy

In the supplication Mr. Ferry touched briefly on the tragedy, asking God to safely guide all ships across the ocean and to prevent a repetition of the Lusitania disaster. He prayed that God would guide the President in the present troublesome times, so that the blood of this Nation might not flow.

Those present then sang "Lead, Kindly Light," and the Rev. John T. Faris delivered the memorial sermon. Mr. Faris took as his subject "Service." He declared that Mr. Tesson knew he risked death when he took passage on the unfortunate giant steamship, but duty called him and he obeyed. He paid a glowing tribute to the dead man's life and character. In conclusion Mr. Faris said that civilization had been struck some mighty blows during the past year, but that it would be restored.

Mr. Wanamaker was then called upon to speak, and his words brought tears to the eyes of many of those who had known the Tessons intimately in life. He said that the sinking of the Lusitania had brought a sorrow to this country unequaled since the assassination of Abraham Lincoln[.] The whole world, he added, had given its sympathy to America. The merchant then said,

> "Humanity the world over has sobbed out its sympathy. Somebody has to answer for this tragedy. One can be a potentate, but there is above all the sovereign God in whom we all look today."

Praises Tesson

He then told of Mr. Tesson's life work, lauded him and his wife and expressed the belief that the couple had met death bravely and without fear. In conclusion he said that in their life and death was a lesson for everyone. Mr. Tesson and his wife, Mr. Wanamaker said, were inseparable always and were prepared when death claimed them.

Among those present at the services were Mrs. B. A. Montgomery, her son and daughter. Mrs. Montgomery was a sister to Mr Tesson.

Mr. Tesson was born in Lacrosse, Wis., on January 14, 1866. His early business life was passed in St. Louis, with brief service in Pittsburgh. On August 1, 100, he joined the organization of the John Wanamaker store, Philadelphia, and was made assistant to the chief of the shoe store in Philadelphia, Andrew C. McGowin.

On May 22, 1908, Mr. Tesson was made chief of the Wanamaker shoe store in New York, where he continued until his death. Mr. Tesson was well and favorably known in the shoe trade and in the retail business in general, and was a thoroughly experienced and efficient expert in his calling.

Mr. Tesson's wife met her death with him, but there survives Mr. Tesson's mother and sister, living in Alton, Ill., Mrs. Montgomery and a brother in St. Louis.

In the outcome of litigation that came of the sinking of the Lusitania, the Mixed Claims Commission made awards to Tesson family members in February 1924: the estate of Alice E. Tesson, deceased, $2,325, and Emily Duncan Tesson, $3,000.[1060]

2. Bertha Angeline[2] Tesson (Frank[1]) was born about 1859 in Illinois. She married Herbert R. C. Montgomery. He was born about 1858 , of Lancashire, England.

Children of Bertha Tesson and Herbert Montgomery are:

\+ 6 i. Herbert Frank[3] Montgomery, born 23 June 1883 in Alton, Illinois; died 30 July 1934 at 4951 Walton Ave., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

7 ii. Eva Angeline Montgomery, died 08 April 1952 in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. She married Rev. Gaston.

[1060] As noticed in the Dallas Morning News Historical Archive online, 22 Feb 1924.

NOTES

The middle name of Bertha Tesson (ca. 1859–) [No. 2] has also been given as "Angelic".

Generation No. 3

6. Herbert Frank[3] Montgomery (Bertha Angeline[2] Tesson, Frank[1]) was born 23 June 1883 in Alton, Illinois, and died 30 July 1934 at 4951 Walton Ave., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. He married Elouise Smith 09 June 1915 at 820 South St. Bernard Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, daughter of John Smith and Ella Seville. She was born 03 May 1891 in 520 Greensborough St., Easton, Talbot Co., Maryland, and died 31 August 1979 in 24 Halcyon Dr., New Castle, New Castle Co., Delaware.

See the main Smith genealogy for notes about Herbert and Elouise (Smith) Montgomery and their descendants.

Generation No. 4

8. William Tesson[4] Montgomery (Herbert Frank[3], Bertha Angeline[2] Tesson, Frank[1]) was born 15 May 1916 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and died in New Castle, Delaware. He married Jane Myers. She was born 13 January 1924.

Children of William Montgomery and Jane Myers are:

12 ii. Linda Jane Montgomery, born 11 March 1952; died 12 July 1970 in Delaware.

NOTES

8. William Tesson Montgomery (1916–)

The "Smith Genealogy" notes about William Tesson Montgomery: [1061]

> "[He] attended Philadelphia public school and graduated from Williamson Trade School. While working as a carpenter in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, he was called in the first draw of the draft for World War II and served three and a half years overseas, first in England as a Quartermaster Corps carpenter and then volunteered for infantry duty in General Patton's Army in Germany. He has a service-connected back injury and is now [before 1963] construction foreman in building private homes in New Castle County, Delaware, where he and his family have their home. * * * When William T. Montgomery was in England in the service he and his cousin Edward Lawrence Spamer, also in the Army, were together when opportunity offered."

Despite the statement about the draft in Florida, there is an enlistment for Tesson that indicates he joined the U.S. Army on 17 May 1941 in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Unfortunately, there are no surviving recollections about the cousins' meetings while in the service.

He legally adopted his wife's son by a previous marriage, Robert Burwell.

An address book of Earle C. Smith (predating 1964) lists William T. Montgomery residing in the Llangollen Estates, at 206 Werden Drive, New Castle, Delaware.

His remains were cremated.

12. Linda Jane Montgomery (1952–1970)

She was buried 14 July 1970 at Valley Forge Memorial Gardens, Valley Forge, Pennsylvania.

219. William Fosbenner[8] Watson (Joseph William Wesley[7], Katherine W.[6] Smith, James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 20 April 1851 in Maryland, and died 19 September 1924. He married (1) Rebecca Glenville. She died 1889. He married (2) Annie R. O'Bryan. She was born 14 October 1862, and died 20 March 1913. Also see Additions & Corrections

Children of William Watson and Rebecca Glenvilleare:

	354	i.	Joseph G.[9] Watson, born 13 September 1876; died 13 July 1877.
	355	ii.	Frances May Watson, born May 1877 in Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland; died after 1920. She married Deever.
+	356	iii.	Susannah Watson, born May 1883 in Maryland; died after 1929.
	357	iv.	Watson, born 12 March 1886; died 12 March 1886.
	358	v.	William Wesley Watson, born 05 February 1887; died 17 July 1887.
	359	vi.	Samuel G. Watson, born 20 July 1888; died 21 July 1888.

NOTES

There had been some confusion in family records regarding the two wives of William Fosbenner Watson (1851–1924) [No. 219]. According to some records, he married Rebecca Glenville ("Dolly"), who is indicated to have died in 1889, and with whom he was the father to Susannah Watson (dates then unknown; 1883–after 1929) and Frances May Watson (1877-1920); and his second wife was Annie R. O'Bryan (1862-1913), with whom the remainder of the children were attributed. Cemetery markers are present on the graves of several children of W. F. and A. R. Watson, born between 1876 and 1889[1062], which now, in retrospect, may be mistaken by whomever had the markers made. The 1900 U.S. census indicates that he had been married to his then-current wife, Annie, for nine years, or from about 1891, with no young children, thus all of the children were born to Rebecca. Also see Additions & Corrections

The 1870 U.S. census lists J. W. W. Watson and Susannah Watson with a 19-year-old "Wm F. Watson", which would place the young man's birth about 1851. The written source from which a 20 April 1857 birth date for William F. Watson is given in family records might have misread a "tailed" numeral one for a seven. Subsequent censuses corroborate a calculated birth year for William F. Watson at about 1850-1852.

In the 1900 census, an Eliza A. Smith is included in the household. She was aged 80, widowed, born June 1819, is listed as "Antie" [sic]. She has thus far not been identified in this genealogy.

In the 1850 through 1900 U.S. censuses, William Fosbenner Watson is listed as a farmer.

1880, 1900-1920: Centreville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland.

William F. Watson and his wife, Annie O'Bryan, are buried in Bailey's Delight Cemetery, Burrisville Rd., Burrisville, Queen Anne's Co., Maryland (Bailey's Delight patented 1727). Also buried there are their four infant sons, Joseph G. Watson, an unnamed newborn, William Wesley Watson, and Samuel G. Watson. The grave marker for the unnamed son reads, "Baby, second son of W. F. and A. R. Watson, b. and d. Mar. 12, 1886."[1063]

Frances May Watson (1877–after 1920) [No. 355] was known as "Fannie May". The Deever who married her was an uncle of John McKenney, who ca. 1960 owned "Upper Heathworth" in Spaniard Neck, the one-time home of Capt. John Smith. Thus far, however, the genealogy of the McKenneys has not been connected to the Smith Family. Also see Additions & Corrections

280. Edward Sculley[9] Bradley (Stephen Edward[8] Bradley, Sarah Jane[7] Scully, Mary Elizabeth[6] Tarbutton, Rachel[5] Smith, James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 04 January 1897 in Pennsylvania, and 04 December 1987 at the Kendal at Longwood retirement home, Kennett Square, Pennsylvania. He married (1) Marguerite C. She was born about 1898 in Pennsylvania.

Child of Edward Bradley and Margaret is:

417a i. Deborah A.[10] Bradley, born about January 1928 in Pennsylvania.
417b ii. Alison Bradley.

NOTES

280. Edward Sculley Bradley (1897–1987)

Although the family name given to him as a middle name, Scully, is usually spelled as such, Edward Sculley Bradley's name does include the additional letter "e" despite the fact that the Social Security Death Index lists him as "Scully" Bradley. As a Professor of English at the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, he published under the names "Sculley Bradley" and "E. Sculley Bradley", and these of course are inferentially correct as being his own use. To family and friends he was known just as "Sculley".

Occupations of Edward Sculley Bradley (from U.S. censuses):
1920: College instructor
1930: College teacher

Residences of Edward Sculley Bradley (from U.S. censuses):
1920: 619 Conestoga St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (with parents)
1930: 730 Vernon Rd., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
1987: Kennett Square, Chester Co., Pennsylvania

E. Sculley Bradley was a scholar of American literary criticism and was an authority on the writings of poet Walt Whitman. A sample of his publications:

"Walt Whitman on Timber Creek", American Literature, Vol. 5, no. 3 (Nov 1933), pp. 235-246 [which was a supplementary article his essay, "Mr. Walter Whitman", The Bookman (Mar 1933)].

Sculley Bradley here posed the question, "Every reader of Whitman knows that [Leaves of Grass and Specimen Days] were written along Timber Creek, New Jersey, for the poet tells us so himself. * * * If Thoreau's Walden Pond should be visited, why not Whitman's creek and pond?"

The American Tradition in Literature (W. W. Norton, New York, 1961).

The Collected Writings of Walt Whitman, Vols. 1 and 2, Gay Wilson Allen and Sculley Bradley, general editors (New York University Press, New York, 1961).

Review of: Arthur Golden, Walt Whitman's Blue Book: The 1860-61 Leaves of Grass Containing His Manuscript Additions and Revisions, 2 vols. (New York Public Library, New York, 1968).

His obituary in The Philadelphia Inquirer noted that he was "a scholar, educator, administrator and media pioneer".[1065] In 1946 at least, he was Chairman of American Civilization in the University of Pennsylvania. At his death he was Professor Emeritus of English in the University of Pennsylvania. He also served in the university as Vice Provost of Undergraduate Education, 1956-1963. He was a Trustee of the Walt Whitman Foundation. In 1950, he received an honorary LL.D. from Baylor University.

He was a member of the Society of Friends (Quakers) and was a founding member of the Chestnut Hill Monthly Meeting. He also served on the boards of the Germantown Friends School and the Friends Hospital.

His wife and two daughters survived him.

NOTES

323. Wilbur Edward Smith (1921–)
"Ed", "Smitty" [1068]

Wilbur Edward Smith has resided in Tacoma, Washington, from 1945 to the present [2007]. Retired now, he worked chiefly as a professional photographer, lately with a power company in Washington State. Starting as a combat photographer during World War II, Ed Smith has kept pace with technology and enjoys working with digital imagery and video.

Ed Smith first contacted me through a genealogical website; he was looking for Smith information relating to our Eastern Shore ancestors. We carried out an interesting correspondence for a couple of years, during which I serendipitously learned of the oil portrait of his great grandfather (and my great-great-grandfather), Capt. John Smith [No. 46]. I had seen a video made by Helen McCarraher during the 1994 Smith Family reunion in Chestertown, Maryland, on which the portrait was shown. Not knowing, at that time, of the location of the portrait or whether I would ever see it myself, first I photographed the image from the television screen and sent it to Ed Smith; and later I copied the tape and sent that to him as well. He did some remarkably deft digital work with it and improved a bit on the image quality and [1068] W. Ed Smith also related that his nickname while in the Navy was also "Snuffy", which was a common nickname for many men named Smith during the war, including a Medal of Honor awardee. The name comes from the stereotypical hillbilly comic strip character, "Snuffy Smith". Created in its current form by Billy DeBeck and Fred Lasswell in 1934, the comic strip by the time of the war was known as Barney Google & Snuffy Smith, syndicated by King Features. rectification; the film unfortunately showed the portrait at an oblique angle. Some time later, I finally was in contact with Nadia (Smith) Synnestvedt, who is the current owner of the portrait, and finally I photographed it at her home. But the images that Ed Smith worked on are an example of his creativity in a technological medium that did not exist when he embarked on his career in photography.

Ed Smith learned the photographer's trade in the Navy during World War II (about which see more below). In civilian life he continued in this work, and was a photographer for a power company in Washington State.

In 2004, W. Ed Smith sent me an autobiographical sketch, written around 1992. Some of the information is repeated in a different context, farther below, where his military service is outlined in more detail. The sketch is as follows:[1069]

> Wilbur Edward Smith is the son of James Robert Lee Smith of Centerville [sic], Maryland and Alice Penfield Arnold of Morristown, New Jersey, who were married in Denver, Colorado, and raised their family in Englewood, Colorado. His father was a carpenter who helped build Fitzsimons U.S. Army Hospital in Aurora, Colorado during World War I, and many homes in Denver and Englewood.
> Ed and Gladys were married in May 1945 at the Alameda, California U.S. Navy Air Station. We returned to Tacoma the same year and have been in residence here for 47 years. Before going in the Navy he had many different jobs: harvesting grain, shoveling horse manure, apprentice with a diamond cutter for three dollars a week and half day Saturday, shipping clerk for $15 a week and then joined the Navy for $27 a month, room and board free? Thought he was on top of the world! It turned out to be in the middle of the Pacific through a porthole.
> Ed served in the U.S. Navy 1941-1945. Bootcamp at San Diego, California, service school at Sandpoint Naval Air Station in Seattle for Aviation Machinist (where he learned to like the Northwest). He served in Scouting-Bombing 6 at Kenohe [Kaneohe] Bay, Hawaii and served aboard the U.S.S. Enterprise, CV6 in the Pacific, and was awarded the enlisted Air Crew Wings with three stars for flying in S.B.D. scout bombers and T.B.F.'s for photo recon. and bombing missions. Later he was transferred to Ships Company, V-3 Division, Photolab. Later he served at the U.S. Navy Air Station, Alameda, Photo Lab Headquarters Squadron (HEDRON 2), U.S. Navy Air Station, Hilo, Hawaii, where he was NCO in charge of the photo lab.
> The Korean Conflict found me recalled and sent to the Naval Amphibious Base (N.A.T.U.) at Coronado, California, where he was the leading NCO in the intelligence school photo lab as Supervisor of Production.
> After his service Ed worked for National Auto Parts, as a machinist, also at the Northern Pacific Railroad as a machinist. Then he started working for the Tacoma Public Utilities as a photographer, retiring after 25 years as Supervisor of Photography, Reproduction and Print Shop.
> Ed's many hobbies include: Minerals and Lapidary, Astronomy and Amateur Radio WA7TVZ.

Regarding Ed Smith's note of working for a diamond cutter, he related in correspondence that his father had known a jeweler, whom Ed thought was a member of the same lodge as in which his father was a member:

[1069] This sketch and the other family biographical sketches that are quoted here were printed in an unidentified document, of which just one page was sent to me in 2004.

> In turn he spoke to a Frank Kalen a diamond cutter [in Denver, Colorado]. I was offered an apprenticeship, at three dollars a week, for five days [a] week and half day Sat. That he said was car fare, lunch, and the other one dollar I could spend as I pleased. I [accepted] but never became a diamond cutter. I am trying to remember Central City the last time I was there they still had board walks for the side walk and I believe you walked out of Central City and into Nevadaville one was on end of the block the other on the other end, so to speak. [They] are about ten thousand five hundred feet up in the mountains, forty miles west of Denver.[1070]

Later pictures of Ed Smith show him with a goatee, which he said he first grew for the Tacoma Centennial in 1968.

Military Service

W. Ed Smith enlisted in the Navy in Denver, Colorado, on 27 August 1941 (Service Number 618 01 11). As for why he joined the Navy, his own words explain it best:

> Why did a Colorado boy join the Navy? I saw [magazine] pictures, as a young person, of G.I.s slogging through the mud and going over the top in terrible weather; it was not a good Uncle Sam picture. So my Grandfather's genes took over—lots of water no mud and three meals a day was the answer.[1071]

A timeline for Ed Smith's World War II service is as follows, incorporating a timeline for the operations of the U.S.S. Enterprise during that time:[1072]

1941 August 27	W. Ed Smith enlists in U.S. Navy in Denver, Colorado

[1072] Assembled from information received from W. Ed Smith between 2004 and 2007, and here incorporating pertinent historical data from U.S. Navy Dictionary of American Naval Fighting Ships (website http://www.history.navy.mil/danfs/e4/enterprise-vii.htm, accessed 31 May 2007) and other historical sources including Edward P. Stafford, The Big E: The Story of the USS Enterprise (Bluejacket Books, Naval Institute Press, Annapolis, Maryland, 1962).

U.S.S. Enterprise (CV-6), laid down 16 Jul 1934, launched 3 Oct 1936, commissioned 12 May 1938, decommissioned 17 Feb 1947, stricken from Navy register 2 Oct 1956, sold for scrap 1 Jul 1958. The only surviving relic of the hull of the Enterprise is her stern plate with the name, ENTERPRISE, now in the Veterans' Memorial Park, River Vale, New Jersey (dedicated 9 Dec 2000). An anchor is in the Washington, D.C., Navy Yard, and the ship's bell is in the U.S. Naval Academy. Statistics for Enterprise: displacement as commissioned 19,800 tons standard, 25,500 tons full load; after 1943 refit in Puget Sound Navy Yard, 21,000 tons standard, 32,060 tons full load; 827 ft long, beam 95 ft 5 in; propulsion four Parsons single reduction geared steam turbines, powered by nine Babcock & Wilcox 400 psi boilers; maximum speed 32.5 knots; 96 maximum aircraft capacity; peak wartime crew complement, 2919. She was the first U.S. Navy vessel to strike offensively against the Japanese, when aircraft sank submarine I-170 on 10 Dec 1941.

[1073] Naval Air Station Sand Point was established during World War I on Lake Washington to provide protection for Navy facilities distributed through Puget Sound, Washington. In 1924, Sand Point was no more than a field that served as a runway, but still it was chosen as the beginning and end points of the first aerial circumnavigation of the world, 7 Apr-28 Sep. During World War II Sand Point grew to 8,000 civilian and military personnel who worked at repairing and modifying fleet aircraft. Today the naval air station is a part of the Sand Point-Magnuson Park. Building 9, now a part of the University of Washington's Community Campus, still stands as a multiple-use building; it had been an enlisted barrack when the naval air station was in operation. [1074] W. Ed Smith to Earle Spamer, 31 May 2007.

[1075] The S.S. Lurline was a cruise ship of the Matson Line, built in 1932 at Bethlehem Shipyard, Quincy, Massachusetts; she was the third ship of that name. She was consigned to the U.S. Navy during World War II, when she served as a troop transport and hospital ship operating principally in the Pacific. Returned to civilian service in May 1946, she was refitted in 1948, and later, in 1963, refitted again and renamed S.S. Ellinis under the Chandris Line. Her last voyage was in 1980 and laid up in Piraeus, Greece; scrapped in 1987. (>>Maritime Matters website, http://www.maritimematters.com/lurlline32. html, accessed 31 May 2007; and various U.S. Navy historical websites.)

[1076] The Kaneohe Bay facility, on the island of Oahu, Hawaii, began as the Kuwaaohe Military Reservation during World War I. It closed after the war but was reactivated in 1939 and passed through several name changes. In 1939 it was a strategic seaplane base under the U.S. Navy, which on 7 Dec 1941 was attacked by Japanese aircraft just prior to the main attack on Pearl Harbor. During the war it was a principal Navy training base. It was decommissioned by the Navy in 1952 and recommissioned by the U.S. Marine Corps as the Marine Corps Air Station Kaneohe Bay. It is still in use today as Marine Corps Base Hawaii. (>> "Kaneohe Bay", website http://www.globalsecurity.org/military/facility/kaneohe-bay.htm, accessed 16 Feb 2007.)

[1077] When W. Ed Smith reported aboard the Enterprise, the ship had just returned from the secret mission during which the "Doolittle Raid" was launched against Tokyo. Gen Jimmy Doolittle commanded 16 carrier-based(!) U.S. Army B-25 bombers that first the first time during the war attacked mainland Japan, largely a symbolic, psychological triumph for the U.S. When the Enterprise again went to sea, she did not reach the Coral Sea in time to participate in action there. Smith saw his first major combat in the pivotal naval engagement of the Pacific war, the Battle of Midway, 4-7 June 1942.

Air Groups were the aircraft squadrons assigned to aircraft carriers; their naming conventions changed throughout the war along with changes in Navy command structure and security. Naval Air Groups could be assigned either to carrier- or land-based operations.

[1078] Midway needs almost no introduction; it was the "strategic high water mark of Japan's Pacific Ocean War", pitting air and sea forces of America and Japan against each other in a decisive blow to the Japanese Navy.

Amongst the losses were one U.S. aircraft carrier (Yorktown) and four Japanese carriers. The Japanese Army invasion force, following behind, aborted their mission. Midway has been the subject of hundreds of articles, books, and films. See, as one example, the U.S. Navy's Naval Historical Center website, http://www.history.navy.mil/photos/events/wwii-pac/midway/midway.htm and accompanying links (accessed 16 May 2004). Although the conflict continued for four days, the battle was decided in its first hours.

It is issued in the name of the President of the United States as public evidence of deserved honor and distinction to any organization, detachment, installation, ship, aircraft, or other unit for outstanding performance in action." The awarded unit is entitled to display a riband of yellow bordered by a blue stripe above and red stripe below. The Enterprise was also awarded the Navy Unit Commendation–"Established by order of the Secretary of the Navy, 18 December 1944, it is awarded by the Secretary to any ship, aircraft, detachment, or other unit of the naval service of the United States Navy which has, subsequent to 6 December 1941, distinguished itself by outstanding heroism in action against the enemy, but not sufficient to justify award of the Presidential Unit Citation." The awarded unit is entitled to display a riband of green bordered by thin stripes of red, yellow, and blue. [1087] Naval Air Station Alameda was expanded from a U.S. Army Air Corps facility and operated from the late 1930s to 1997; its principal functions were the repair and maintenance of Navy aircraft. It was situated on Alameda Point on San Francisco Bay, just south of the Oakland Bay Bridge. Today the property is used for a variety of civilian purposes. (>> "Alameda Point", website http://www.globalsecurity.org/military/facility/ alameda.htm, accessed 16 Feb 2007.)

[1088] W. Ed Smith to Earle Spamer, 18 May 2004.

[1089] "V" indicates "aviation".

> figure out that there was a better job in the Navy for me, you see I was only a seaman 2/c that is the bottom of the pile, and pushing planes. That was five miles a day double time every day — Because of openings in the [ship's photo] Lab I applied and was accepted and reassigned [from] VB-6 (aviation bombing 6) [to] V-3 Div.[1090]

He advanced in grade from Seaman 2/c to Seaman 1/c during the time he worked on the flight deck as part of Air Group Six. "I can remember the exam—an oral one by the deck officer—passed first time." As one who has not experienced flight deck operations during combat, one can only imagine some of the dangers. Ed recalls "two near misses": a bomb from a Japanese dive bomber, and an incident where a landing aircraft missed the catch wire, crashing within three feet of Ed. "A miss is as good as a mile", recalls.[1091]

One may observe that W. Ed Smith reports that he went aboard the U.S.S. Enterprise in late April 1942, with the Scout-Bombing Squadron of Air Group Six, but the muster roll of the Enterprise indicates that he was "first received aboard" on 30 September 1942. This is not a discrepancy, but reflects the fact that Air Groups were independently assigned. Although they were part of the ship's complement they were not a part of the ship's own company. When Ed Smith transferred to the Photo Lab of the Enterprise, he then was first registered for the first time on the ship's muster roll.

Air Groups maintained their own muster rolls, but at the start of the war, records were ephemeral at best. As succinctly described by ARM 1/c Jim Greyton, who served aboard the Enterprise from December 1941 to August 1944, pilots and crewmen frequently were interchanged between carriers and between sea- and land-based stations, either through direct command assignment or through the loss of a ship. "There just were no paper records kept. There was no time for it. Flights and crewmembers were in chalk on the Ready Room boards and no printed record was ever made."[1092] Prior to the war, Air Groups were named for the ships to which they were assigned; with the outbreak of war, they were named after ship hull numbers (in this case, Six for the Enterprise's CV-6) or an arbitrary number for land-based units. Still later, security demanded that numbers be assigned randomly so as to foil enemy intelligence; thus Air Group Six was relieved on the Enterprise by Air Group Ten, and in turn by Air Group Twenty and Night Air Group Ninety.

During two of the Enterprise's returns to Pearl Harbor, Ed Smith went to Gunnery School at Naval Air Station Barbers Point. These were one-week training sessions.[1093]

[1090] The Douglas SBD Dauntless was the mainstay of the carrier-based aviation fleet during WWII. Manufacturing began in 1939, and although it was obsolete by the time war broke out in December 1941, the advance of the war brought about several modifications to its design. The SBD sustained an exemplary performance record throughout the war, and by July 1944, when the last one was rolled off the assembly line in Los Angeles, California, 5,396 SBDs had been made. The SBD "was a thoroughly honest aircraft", one which "could take a frightful beating and stagger home on wings that sometimes looked like nutmeg graters." Naval Air Station Barbers Point–"Crossroads of the Pacific"–began as a 3,000 square-foot piece of rented land "carved out of brush and coral on the leeward side of Oahu", which was to serve as a mooring location for U.S. Navy dirigibles, none of which ever sailed to Hawaii. Shortly afterward more property was acquired and the site became the Marine Corps Air Station Ewa. After the outbreak of war in

While aboard the Enterprise in the photography unit, Ed Smith's watch stations during General Quarters were in the ship's Air Plot, which is in the ship's island just aft of the Captain's bridge, and in Battle Forward. (Air Plot provided the ship's Ready Room and airborne flights with up-to-the-minute navigational and meteorological information.) He also carried out occasional photographic assignments during reconnaissance and striking flights from the Enterprise.

On 26 July 1944, Ed Smith transferred from the U.S.S. Enterprise and was sent to Headquarters Squadron at Navy Air Station Alameda, on San Francisco Bay in Alameda, California. This was a Martin Flying Boat squadron, but "I never saw anybody in it [Headquarters Squadron] as I was assigned to the station photo lab; but I could look out the window and see the Flying Boats". He was in charge of photographic production in a lab of 65 photographers. And it was here that he met and on 25 May 1945 married Gladys Levorson, a WAVE Yeoman 3/c who was secretary to the Photo Officer. "We were married on base," Ed says, and not surprisingly the wedding "was well covered photowise".[1094]

Later, Ed Smith was reassigned from Air Station Alameda to the Philippines, where he was to establish a photo lab at an air station there. But instead when he landed in Hilo, Hawaii, he was assigned to the lab there, having had left Alameda with a recommendation for advancement to Chief Petty Officer.

Duties and Accolades

Aboard the Enterprise, Ed Smith's photography unit documented all aircraft operations, which included all takeoffs and landings, activities during General Quarters, and combat action; they also provided aerial reconnaissance, and combat effectiveness documentation, and other onboard activities as required for naval operations including public relations.

Occasionally, Ed Smith flew in the rear seat of dive bombers to take intelligence photos prior to combat engagements, or to document damage to enemy forces that had occurred during combat operations. He experienced significant combat action aboard the Enterprise—"12 major battles and many little ones in between", he wrote—but he was transferred stateside before the first Kamikaze attacks against the ship in April 1945.

One photograph I received from Ed Smith shows him with fellow photographers and a briefing officer during a preflight briefing the day before a flight to secure photographs over Truk Atoll in February 1944.[1095] Ed wrote, succinctly, "I was jumped by a Zero that trip." His flight attacked a Japanese light cruiser at Truk, "after which I was awarded my combat air crew wings with three stars".[1096]

December 1941, the Ewa air station was rapidly expanded and, among other duties, became a training center in aerial gunnery. NAS Barbers Point continued in operation until 1993, when operations began to be consolidated at Marine Corps Air Facility Kaneohe Bay. Since then, the facility has hosted the U.S. Coast Guard (as Coast Guard Air Station Barbers Point) and general aviation. Truk was analogously referred to as the "Japanese Pearl Harbor", for its strategic position and strength, providing an anchorage for numerous large warships. In 1969, oceanographer

On 27 May 1943, Admiral Chester Nimitz in Pearl Harbor awarded the U.S.S. Enterprise with the first Presidential Unit Citation awarded to the crew of an aircraft carrier. Captain Samuel P. One of the photographs (right) was distributed by the Navy news service and published in newspapers and magazines across the country. (Spamer 2670)

Photographer's Mate W. Edward Smith filming aboard the U.S.S. Enterprise, ca. 1943. He indicated that a photographer manned this camera for all takeoffs and landings, as well as during General Quarters and combat.

Typical of the kinds of reconnaissance photography that the photographic unit of the Enterprise carried out was one on 6 June 1942. The Chief Photographer's Mate from the Enterprise flew aboard a VSB (scout bomber) for a photographic flight over damaged enemy ships, launching from the Enterprise at 1753 and recovered at 2107. The flight photographed the burning heavy cruiser, Mikuma, which photographs provided information that this class of "heavy cruiser" was in fact a "battle cruiser" of some 20,000 tons.[1097] The photos also were the first close-up views of a sinking Japanese warship, which further provided morale-boosting propaganda for the home front. Ed Smith sent me a copy of the photograph.

One of the most famous photographs from the Pacific theater of the war was part of a motion picture film taken aboard the Enterprise during the Battle of the Eastern Solomons, 24 August 1942. The third Japanese bomb to strike the Enterprise during this battle was photographed at the moment of explosion; and months later a series of still photos from the damaged film was published in Life magazine. For years the film had been attributed to PhoM 2/c Robert Frederic Read, who was killed in a bomb explosion on the Enterprise. However, more recent investigations into the origin of the film and the still photos printed from it, determined that it was shot by PhoM 2/c Marion Riley, who was stationed at the aft end of the ship's island, looking down on the flight deck. Read, when he was killed by what was the second bomb to strike the Enterprise, had been stationed at the aft starboard 5-inch gun gallery, level with the flight deck. The Riley film does show the destroyed gun platform (in the distance) where Read had been killed moments earlier. Ed Smith, who was stationed in Air Plot at the time, helped corroborate the duty stations for these men, and that it was Riley's film that captured the famous photo of a bomb in mid-explosion.[1098]

Other activities of the photography unit aboard the Enterprise included photographic work in preparation for combat action. In one case W. Ed Smith related that > before the invasion of Saipan I helped an int[elligence]. off[icer] make a 3-D relief map of the island . . . it was the first time anything like this had been done aboard our ship. If there was a tree we tried to put it in. The pilots raved about it, because they could see the island in relief before take off.[1099]

The Battle of Santa Cruz Island set the stage for the naval battles off Guadalcanal a month later, usually referred to as the Naval Battle of Guadalcanal to distinguish it from the earlier operation of amphibious landings on the island. The Enterprise joined the U.S.S. Hornet, forming an attack group composed also of the battleship South Dakota, six cruisers, and 14 destroyers, which steamed to intercept a larger Japanese fleet sent to Guadalcanal. Aircraft from the American carriers located and attacked the Japanese fleet, while Japanese planes attacked the American fleet. The Enterprise was hit twice by bombs, resulting in 44 killed and 75 wounded during the operation.

Jacques Cousteau investigated the numerous Japanese wrecks still in the lagoon at Truk, which he produced as a 1971 television documentary film. In the early 2000s, Cousteau's son, Jean-Michel, returned to Truk to make another film. Today, the locale is a popular scuba-diving destination.

The Navigator's Log from the Enterprise on 26 October 1942 recorded seven hours from Ed Smith's life just a month after he joined the Enterprise's photography unit. The log (abbreviated here) follows the ever-changing dance of danger and duty—and all the while, cameras rolled: [1100]

> At 1115 the ENTERPRISE was attacked by approximately 25 enemy dive bombers. Changed course turning left in a circle to avoid bombs. Ship hit just aft of No 2 elevator with A[rmor] P[enetrating] bomb. Several near misses to starboard. Fires reported on second deck forward and also on forecastle. * * * At 1127 periscope was reported starboard bow, changed course to the right. * * * At 1133 enemy dive bombers reported on port quarter. At 1142 all fires reported out on forecastle. At 1148 ENTERPRISE attacked by group of approximately 20 torpedo planes. Ship changing course rapidly both to left & right to avoid torpedoes. Several torpedo wakes observed passing astern and down starboard side. Periscope reported of submarine also sighted in starboard bow. At least seven enemy torpedo planes seen to crash into sea. * * * At 1222 ENTERPRISE under attack from about 15 dive bombers. Changing course radically to avoid bombs. At 1224 near miss amidships on starboard side shook the ship. Several more near misses & no hits observed. At 1230 attacks over and ship changed course into the wind preparing to recover aircraft. Approximate course 115° T. Approximate speed 27 knots. At 1239 first plane landed. At 1322 last plane landed. At 1335 changed course to 123° T speed 27 knots. At 1339 plane crashed into sea astern. At 1346 commenced steaming into wind preparing to launch aircraft. Approximate course 130° T. Approximate speed 27 knots. At 1351 first plane launched. At 1405 last plane launched. At 1418 first plane landed. At 1419 TBF crashed into sea, port quarter. At 1424 last plane landed. Changed course to left & course 123° T, 27 knots. 247 RPM's. At 1530 last plane launched. At 1534 changed speed to 23 knots, 208 RPM's. At 1542 commenced zig-zagging in accordance with plan #8. * * * At 1601 changed course right into the wind preparing to land aircraft.

An aerial view from Ed is a scenic one showing a scout-bombing flight over Makin Atoll[1101], 18 November 1943, the day before American operations against the Japanese-held island. Regarding the flight, Ed recalled,

> On Makin we dove on a dock with a seaplane tied to it. We hit the dock and sunk the plane. Someone aboard received a newspaper with a picture taken by a Marine when they landed and gave it to me . . . Many pictures I never got to see because I would drop them on a command ship in the unexposed roll of film[1102]

[1100] From facsimile of leaves from Navigator's Log taken from an unidentified U.S. Navy source; from the files of W. Ed Smith.

[1101] Makin Atoll, in the Gilbert Islands, is today known as Butaritari Atoll, Kiribati.

[1102] W. Ed Smith to Earle Spamer, 18 May 2004. Ed similarly commented (8 May 2004), "there were times that I shot recon. pix and dropped them on the deck of the command ship for the General in command of the landing".

Processed photographs were also delivered to ships. The Enterprise's "Operations Report" from the Gilbert Islands operation describes the Makin Atoll overflight and the delivery of photographs prior to the amphibious invasion:[1103]

> The photographic missions included taking completed sets of pictures of BUTATARI ISLAND and the sea conditions on the beaches there; the processing and printing of these pictures aboard ship; and the delivery of the completed prints to C.T.G. [Commander, Task Group] 52, on the U.S.S. PENNSYLVANIA,[1104] with as much preliminary photo interpretation work completed as could be accomplished. The photographs were taken at low altitude due to cloud interference, but served to verify previous photographic reconnaissance of this island. Delivery aboard the U.S.S. PENNSYLVANIA and the two cruisers was accomplished by the TBF's letting out three hundred yards of line, weighted at each end, with a strip of fire hose containing the pictures attached to the center of the line. The hose was securely stopped to prevent damage of pictures from water.

Ed Smith shared with me a few other remarkable photographs from his time aboard the Enterprise. One shows two Japanese torpedo bombers flying past the Enterprise from astern, having already released their torpedoes, while in the distance, entering the picture, is a battleship under full steam. The photos look down on the passing aircraft. The next photo shows a smoke plume issuing from the sea surface, where one of the planes was shot down. Some such photographs appeared in the home press during the war, as a means to bolster morale as the campaigns wore on.

In addition to combat photos that W. Ed Smith sent to me was a photograph from ceremonies that took place aboard the U.S.S. Enterprise in Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, on 27 May 1943, when Adm. Chester Nimitz presented the ship's crew with a Presidential Unit Citation, long delayed because the Enterprise was so often at sea. It was the first Presidential Unit Citation awarded to the crew of an aircraft carrier. In the photo, taken from the ship's island, part of the ship's complement is assembled in dress white uniforms on the flight deck as Capt. Samuel P. Ginder accepts the citation on behalf of the crew from Adm. Nimitz. Four photographers stand at the front of the assembled crew; Ed Smith is the closest to Nimitz and Ginder. One of Ed Smith's photographs was distributed by naval public relations and was widely used in newspapers, which shows the officers shaking hands, as Nimitz glances to the citation. By comparing the postures of Nimitz and Ginder in this photo, one can see that it was taken at the same moment as which the photo was taken from the ship's island.

The Presidential Unit Citation was presented

> For consistently outstanding performance and distinguished achievement during repeated action against enemy Japanese forces in the Pacific war area, Dec. 7, 1941, to November 15, 1942.

[1103] Commanding Officer, U.S.S. Enterprise, to Commander in Chief, U.S. Pacific Fleet, "Operations as a Unit of Task Group 50.2 from 10 November to 27 November 1943-Report of" (CV6/A16-3/11-ts), 15 Dec 1943 (as read on CV6.org website http://www.cv6.org/ship/logs/action194311.htm, accessed 4 Jun 2007).

[1104] During the Gilbert Islands operation, the battleship U.S.S. Pennsylvania (BB-38) was the flagship of R/Adm Richmond K. Turner. Gen. Ralph Smith, USMC, was in command of the troop landings. On 7 Dec 1941, the Pennsylvania was in drydock and survived, relatively lightly damaged, the attack on Pearl Harbor. On 12 Aug 1945, off of Okinawa, she was torpedoed and severely damaged. After receiving rudimentary repairs, she was used as a target vessel during atomic bomb testing in July 1946 at Bikini Atoll, after which she was moored at Kwajalein Atoll and monitored for radiological damage. The Pennsylvania was scuttled at sea on 19 Feb 1948. (>>"USS Pennsylvania (BB-38, originally Battleship # 38), 1916-1948", U.S. Navy, Navy Historical Center website http://www.history.navy.mil/photos/sh-usn/usnsh-p/bb38.htm, accessed 6 Jun 2007.)

> Participating in nearly every major carrier engagement in the first year of the war, the Enterprise and her air group, exclusive of far-flung destruction of hostile shore installations throughout the battle area, did sink or damage on her own a total of 35 Japanese vessels and shoot down a total of 185 Japanese aircraft. Her aggressive spirit and superb combat efficiency are fitting tribute to the officers and men who so gallantly established her as an ahead bulwark in defense of the American nation.

One might easily overlook the value of the photographic work in combat. Certainly there are hundreds of shining examples from the cameras of combat photographers, civilian and military alike, throughout the theaters of every conflict since the Civil War. The actions that W. Ed Smith had witnessed (see above) each can be retold from the annals of historians and the stories of participants alike; and in fact, the reader should turn to them. But personal records can tell lesser stories that have greater personal meaning, such as one that Ed Smith proudly shared from his records, when a commendation was received by the photographic crew of the Enterprise.

Late in 1942, the U.S. Navy's Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics had commended Navy photographers of five ships, including the Enterprise, as the result of their work during the Battle of Santa Cruz Island, 26 October 1942, the last of the carrier battles around Guadalcanal. It came as the result of a telegram sent from New York on 24 December to Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, from A. J. Richard, who was Editor of the newsreel studio, Paramount News, whose films were seen by millions. His telegram was included as an attachment to the commendation:

> VENTURE TO CALL YOUR ATTENTION SPLENDID WORK NAVY CAMERAMEN FILMING NAVY VICTORY PACIFIC AREA OVER SKYFUL ATTACKING JAP BOMBERS. THIS NEWS PICTURE WE CONSIDER GREATEST NATIONAL MORALE BOOST SCREEN HAS YET BEEN ABLE OFFER AND AN EXAMPLE REALLY GREAT SERVICE TO COUNTRY CAMERAS CAN ACHIEVE IN HANDS INTREPID MEN SUCH AS YOUR OFFICIAL PHOTOGRAPHERS WHO BRAVED REDHOT ENEMY FIRE TO DO THEIR DUTY WE RESPECTFULLY ASK OUR CONGRATULATIONS BE FORWARDED MEN WHO MADE THESE PICTURES AND OFFICERS DIRECTING THEM FOR SERVICE THEY HAVE RENDERED OUR COUNTRYS HOME FRONT.

The commendation text is as follows:

> From: The Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics
> To: The Commander in Chief, U.S. Pacific Fleet.
> Subject: Motion and Still Picture Photography, Excellent Results of.
> 1. During the past six months this bureau has received a very remarkable pictorial record, both n motion pictures and still photographs, of Naval activities in the Pacific area. The difficulty under which many of these pictures were taken is fully appreciated. That the subject matter and pictorial quality of these films have risen to a high standard is most gratifying. The recent accomplishment of Navy photographic personnel has received wide praise an example of which is Enclosure (A) [the telegram quoted above].
> 2. A great number of these pictures have been of appreciable value to the war effort both from the intelligence standpoint and by their outstanding contribution in keeping the American people visually abreast of the gallant service the Navy is rendering the nation. In addition to their current wide use these photographs are providing the Navy with an historically invaluable pictorial record of the war.

3. This bureau wishes to express its appreciation to the Commander in Chief, U.S. Pacific Fleet, for his assistance and cooperation, and to the officer and enlisted photographic personnel under his command, for the outstanding photographic work performed in the Pacific area.

The photographic work of Navy photographers served the home front in other ways, too. A memorandum from 18 December 1942 outlines another important duty performed by the photographers of the Enterprise:[1105]

From: The Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics.
To: The Commanding Officer, USS ENTERPRISE.

Subject: Photographs, request for.

1. The Bureau of Aeronautics has been requested by the Office of Public Relations to obtain photographs to acquaint the public with the use of V-Mail[1106] in the Navy.

2. It is requested that, if a convenient opportunity arises, a series of still photographs and motion pictures be made of the receipt and distribution of V-Mail in the South Pacific. Because these photographs are desired for general news release, it is suggested that the views emphasize the reactions of naval personnel and the fact that it is V-Mail rather than letters received by regular post. It is suggested that both general and close-up scenes be included.

3. It is requested that when completed the negatives and two (2) 8 x 10 prints, fully captioned, of the still photographs be forwarded to the Bureau of Aeronautics. The motion picture film, accompanied by the complete data sheet, should be forwarded for processing.

4. It is desired to express the satisfaction of this bureau with the initiative displayed by the photographic personnel of the USS ENTERPRISE and the high quality of the photographs that have been forwarded.

W. Ed Smith's personal decorations include the Combat Air Crew Wings with three stars (air-to-air, air-to-ship, and air-to-ground combat), awarded by the Captain of the Enterprise after the operation against Truk.[1107]

[1106] V-Mail, or Victory Mail, was a scheme to photographically reduce letters to microfilm, which was sent to facilities at their destinations and printed out (at smaller than original size) on lightweight photo paper. This ostensibly freed up cargo space that would have been taken up by bulky bags of conventional mail. Letters had to be written within certain boundaries on a form (usually deemed to be too small), and were used both by military personnel writing home and by family and friends on the home front writing to soldiers and sailors overseas. Despite the patriotic and practical intentions, V-Mail was not popular. Navy personnel, in 1944, received 38 million pieces of V-Mail service-wide, but 272 million pieces of First Class mail received reveal overall sentiments about the V-mail medium. Korean Conflict

As a member of the U.S. Naval Reserve, Ed Smith was called to serve again during the Korean Conflict. He reported to duty in Seattle, Washington, and within ten days shipped out to Naval Amphibious Base Coronado, on San Diego Bay in Coronado, California.[1108] He was Supervisor of Production as the lead Non-Commissioned Officer in the intelligence school photo lab. He served at this station for 15 months.

Gladys (Levorson) Smith (1920–2002)
(wife of Wilbur Edward Smith)

W. Ed Smith also had sent me a biographical sketch he had compiled about his wife, Gladys:

> Gladys Myrtle Levorson, born Battrum, Saskatchewan, Canada in 1920, moved to Tacoma with her family in 1937. She graduated from Stadium High School in 1941. She worked for Rhodes Department Store until starting work at Todd Shipyards at the start of World War II.

[1108] Naval Amphibious Base Coronado was established in 1943 on landfill dredged from San Diego Bay, the only naval amphibious base on the west coast. It had been originally named the Amphibious Training Base and was formally commissioned in January 1944, and was renamed in 1946. It was established to provide training for landing craft crews. Today, Naval Amphibious Base Coronado is a center for maritime special operations forces (Navy SEALs and Special Warfare Combatant Craft Crewmen) (>> "Naval Base Coronado", website http://www.nbc.navy.mil/index.asp, accessed 29 May 2007).

[1109] The WAVE (Women Accepted for Volunteer Emergency Service) service was the naval equivalent of the Women's Auxiliary Army Corps). It had originally been established during World War I, but after a 23-year hiatus the service was reinstituted in early August 1942. During World War II, the WAVE women serviced in "traditionally female secretarial and clerical jobs" as had their WWI counterparts, but they also "performed previously atypical duties" across a wide spectrum of military duties. The Naval Training School at Cedar Falls, Iowa, was the first such center to be established as a WAVE boot camp, which quickly filled to capacity with 6,000 women. On 8 February 1943, Hunter College, in Bronx, New York, was commissioned as a second Naval Training School despite its lack of dormitory facilities. Hunter College had originally been a commuter college for women, and its other buildings were sufficient to accommodate 1,600 new recruits every two weeks. Nearby apartment buildings were commandeered by the Navy for housing. Boot camp training usually was completed in six to eight weeks. Today, the four original Hunter College buildings are used at Lehman College, and the apartment buildings still stand. (>>"World War II era WAVES – Overview and Special Image Section", Department of the Navy, Naval Historical Center website, http://www.history.navy.mil/photos/prs-tpic/females/wave-ww2.htm, accessed 29 May 2007; Ellen Diming, "A Brief History of Hunter College", White Caps (Newsletter for WAVES National), Dec 2003, p. 11; D'Ann Campbell, "Women in Uniform: The World War II Experiment", Military Affairs, vol. 53, no. 3 (July 1987), pp. 137-139.)

Similarly, the first WAVE boot camp occupied the Iowa State Teachers College, in Cedar Falls. It, too, lacked adequate dormitory facilities for the number of recruits who passed through the training courses there, and area apartment buildings were commandeered during the war. Training embraced courses in naval history, ships, and aircraft, with specialized training in a wide variety of military needs, including but not limited to airplane mechanics,

She then worked for United Pacific Insurance in accounting and the Pierce County Treasurers and Assessors office, retiring from there in 1983.

Gladys and Ed have been active in the First Presbyterian Church for years where Ed served as an Elder.

See the Levorson Family collateral genealogy (farther below) for more information.

To the biographical sketch of his wife, W. Ed Smith also added information about their children; those brief remarks appear in the present genealogy with the separate genealogical sketches about each of their children.

Smith Family genealogy continues after the following collateral genealogy

Levorson Family
Collateral Genealogy
(4 descendants)

W. Ed Smith sent a biographical sketch that he had compiled around 1992, regarding the family of his wife's parents:

"Knut Levorson, born 1880 Tunhovd, Numedal, Norway, immigrated to America in 1901, to take the place of a friend who did not want to come. Knut homesteaded near Dunseith, North Dakota in the Turtle Mountains. He married Amanda Dorothea Fredrickson, who was born at Minot, Dakota Territories in 1888 of Norwegian parents. Knut and Amanda had three children: Leif (died as infant), Alvin Kenneth and Laura Dorothy Irene.

"In 1910 Knut's brothers, Levor and Torstein (Uncle Tom) migrated from Norway to Canada, homesteading near Batrum, Saskatchewan. Knut and his family followed in 1917 and bought land and farmed. Gladys Myrtle Levorson was born near Battrum in 1920.

"Knut was a carpenter, also worked in the harvest; and made violins for his family as well as to sell. In 1937 he decided to move his family back to the United States (they were citizens), to the Pacific Northwest. Amanda Levorson had a sister, Matilda Garness in Gig Harbor and brother, Martin Fredrickson in Tacoma. Knut did carpentry, and also started a poultry business located at 84th and Tacoma Avenue (Fernhill area) of Tacoma. During World War II he worked for the Boeing Aircraft parts plant in Tacoma. Knut died in 1958. Amanda was a homemaker all her life and died in 1978.

"Alvin Levorson, a sign painter all his life, married Lillian Lindburg, who came to Tacoma from Bottineau, North Dakota. He worked at Todd Shipyards during World War II heading up the sign painting crews. After the War he worked at Madigan Army Hospital until retirement. Now his loves are fishing for salmon and playing golf. Their children are Lois Marian, born April 1942, died February 1962; and Annette Marie, born April 1946. She graduated from Pacific Lutheran University (as a school teacher), married Daniel Macumber III, (a school custodian) March 1976 and they have two boys.

"Laura Levorson worked for Boeing Aircraft parts plant during World War II. She married Ivar Kronquist, a tailor from Finland. They lived in Walla Walla for a time before returning to Tacoma where Ivar died. They have two sons, Dr. Ray Kronquist of California (who has two sons); and Larry Kronquist who lives and works in Olympia for the State of Washington."

The genealogy of the Levorson family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Hollingbakken Kristian Levorsen

Generation No. 1

1. Hollingbakken Kristian[1] Levorsen was born 1818 in Norway, and died 1871 in Norway. He married Guri Olesdotter Hytta 1845. She was born 1827 in Norway, and died 1895 in Norway.

Child of Hollingbakken Levorsen and Guri Hytta is:
\+ 2 i. Levor Kristiansen[2] Levorsen, born 26 August 1846 in Nesbyan, Norway; died 24 October 1929 in Nesbyan, Norway.

Generation No. 2

2. Levor Kristiansen[2] Leversen (Hollingbakken Kristian[1]) was born 26 August 1846 in Nesbyan, Norway, and died 24 October 1929 in Nesbyan, Norway. He married Ingrid Knutsdotter Skarpaas 1874, daughter of Knut Mykoa and Bergit Skarpos. She was born 27 January 1851, and died 1902.

Child of Levor Levorsen and Ingrid Skarpaas is:
\+ 3 i. Knut[3] Levorsen, born 23 November 1880 in Hytta Farm, Tunhovd, Numedahl, Norway; died 31 October 1958 in Tacoma, Washington.

Generation No. 3

3. Knut[3] Levorsen (Levor Kristiansen[2], Hollingbakken Kristian[1]) was born 23 November 1880 in Hytta Farm, Tunhovd, Numedahl, Norway, and died 31 October 1958 in Tacoma, Washington. He married Amanda Dorothea Frederickson 1912 in North Dakota, daughter of Ole Frederickson and Dorthea Larson. She was born 26 October 1888 in Minot, North Dakota, and died July 1979 in Tacoma, Washington.

Child of Knut Levorsen and Amanda Frederickson is:
\+ 4 i. Gladys Myrtle[4] Levorson, born 06 December 1920 in Battrum, Saskatchewan, Canada; died 01 February 2002 in Tacoma, Washington.

Generation No. 4

4. Gladys Myrtle[4] Levorson (Knut[3] Levorsen, Levor Kristiansen[2], Hollingbakken Kristian[1]) was born 06 December 1920 in Battrum, Saskatchewan, Canada, and died 01 February 2002 in Tacoma, Washington. She married Wilbur Edward Smith 26 May 1945 in Alameda, California, son of James Smith and Alice Arnold. He was born 06 November 1921 in Englewood, Arapahoe Co., Colorado.

[1111] At the time of the 1930 census, numerous nearby residents also were occupied in "electric shop", as was Emerson Roberts. His notes regarding the Bryan family, dated 30 Apr 1930, indicate that in this year his residence was 174 Woodside Rd., Wilkinsburg, Pennsylvania.

Edward S. Smith took note in the "Smith Genealogy":

> They lived in or near Pittsburgh where he was in business and later became a Professor at Carnegie Institute of Technology. When he retired, he and wife bought a farm in Broad Neck of Kent County, Maryland, the Price Farm, not far from Chestertown, where they raised cattle. This location is about two miles from Quaker Neck Wharf, from which they could look across the Chester River to "Capt." John Smith's place.[1112]

In 1910, Emerson Roberts was attending St. John's College. [1113] Also see Additions & Corrections

Emerson Bryan Roberts also was a published genealogist. Although he provided important research results to Edward S. Smith while Smith was working on the genealogy of the family, Roberts never published about the Smith family. Some of Roberts' other work includes: Also see Additions & Corrections

335. Elizabeth (Mack) Hitchcock Munger (1906–1990)

Elizabeth Mack Munger was the family historian after the death of Edward Seville Smith. Also see Additions & Corrections
She was baptized on 11 February 1907. She was educated at the Chicago Normal School and after beginning with summer classes at the University of Chicago was graduated in 1928 from the University of Illinois, 1928. She was a teacher in the Chicago public schools and at the Georgetown, Illinois, High School. In the Michigan City, Indiana, High School she taught English and Debating.[1114] In Michigan City she resided at 500 Marquette Trail.

In addition to these notes, Edward Seville Smith added in the "Smith Genealogy" in 1962:[1115]

> After her husband died, Elizabeth and her sons returned to Michigan City where she went back to teaching, until she married Robert Cushway Munger of Hart, Michigan, on August 7, 1949. His father had extensive cherry orchards of young and older cherry trees and was interested in processing the fruit for the market, and he assisted his father, Dr. Munger. Robert Munger died November 12, 1960, and Elizabeth has returned to teaching and also has been very busy settling the Munger affairs at Hart, which are extensive and varied. This summer (1962) she took a trip to England and Scotland which she enjoyed thoroughly. She stopped with us for a few days on her return but had to hurry back to Hart because of business. She plans returning to teaching in Michigan City.

An address book of Earle C. Smith (predating 1964) lists an address for Elizabeth Munger at 1129½ Cedar St., Michigan City, Illinois.

The Social Security Death Index record for Elizabeth Mack Munger lists her birth date as 28 July 1906, and date of death as 25 March 1990. At the time of her death she resided in Tusuque, Santa Fe Co., New Mexico.

462. John Lathrop Hitchcock (1936–)

John Lathrop Hitchcock served in the U.S. Navy. An address book of Earle C. Smith (predating 1964) lists Lt. (jg) John L. Hitchcock, 10 Muir Way, Berkeley, California.

He earned a B.S. in physics from the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, an M.A. in astronomy from the University of California at Berkeley, and a Ph.D. in the phenomenology of science and religion from the Graduate Theological Union, Berkeley, California. He later earned another M.A., in clinical mental health counseling, from Lesley College, Graduate School of Arts and Social Sciences, Cambridge, Massachusetts. He has written several books on the combined subject of science and spirituality, combining the perspectives of Swedenborgian and Jungian philosophies. In 2006, he resided at 1825 Sumner St., Longmont, Colorado. He is cited in Who's Who in Religion, 4th ed. (1992-1993).

Edward Seville Smith's notes about John Lathrop Hitchcock, from before 1963, are included in the "Smith Genealogy":

> He has a talent in music and as a young man was interested in the Boy Scouts. He and [his brother] Gilbert attended the big Jamboree in Philadelphia.[1116] My sister Mabel visited them in camp at the time. John taught nuclear physics in the Service in California in a department under Vice-Admiral Rickover. He married Elizabeth May Magretta of Dearborn, Michigan, on August 20, 1960. After his period of service he plans to return to college for an advanced degree.[1117]

Examples of the lectures of John Lathrop Hitchcock are "Descent and Return: A Cosmic Vision" at the Annual Residential Conference of the Guild of Pastoral Psychology, St. Hilda's College, Oxford (2005?), "The Transformative Journey in Mayan Mythology" in the Boulder (Colorado) Friends of Jung lecture series (Spring 2006), and "The Hidden Center in Science and Spirituality" at the Unity Church (March 2006).

A sample of his publications includes:

Smith Family genealogy continues after the following collateral genealogy

Hitchcock Family
Collateral Genealogy
(17 descendants[1118])

The genealogy of the Hitchcock family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of John Hitchcock

Generation No. 1

1. John[1] Hitchcock was born 01 July 1586, and died 12 June 1629. He married Mary Franklin. She was born about 1590.

Child of John Hitchcock and Mary Franklin is:
\+ 2 i. Matthias[2] Hitchcock, born about 1610; died 16 November 1669.

Generation No. 2

2. Matthias[2] Hitchcock (John[1]) was born about 1610, and died 16 November 1669. He married Elizabeth. She was born about 1620, and died 1676.

Child of Matthias Hitchcock and Elizabeth is:
\+ 3 i. John[3] Hitchcock.

Generation No. 3

3. John[3] Hitchcock (Matthias[2], John[1])

Child of John Hitchcock is:
\+ 4 i. Matthias[4] Hitchcock, born 26 May 1688; died about 1763.

Generation No. 4

4. Matthias[4] Hitchcock (John[3], Matthias[2], John[1]) was born 26 May 1688, and died about 1763. He married (1) Thankful Andrews. He married (2) Deborah Barnes.

[1118] This collateral genealogy also contains the following collateral lineages, as indicated: Hubbard (6 individuals), Bachelor (10). The sum given above does not include these individuals.

Child of Matthias Hitchcock and Thankful Andrews is:
+ 5 i. Ebenezer[5] Hitchcock, born 14 September 1728; died February 1811.

Generation No. 5

5. Ebenezer[5] Hitchcock (Matthias[4], John[3], Matthias[2], John[1]) was born 14 September 1728, and died February 1811. He married Lettice Parker. She was born 18 September 1736, and died 1810.

Child of Ebenezer Hitchcock and Lettice Parker is:
+ 6 i. Jedediah[6] Hitchcock, born 30 December 1771; died 14 December 1845.

NOTES

The 1790 census for "German Flatts", Montgomery Co., New York, lists an Ebenezer Hitchcock as a single-person household. The 1800 census for Granville, Washington Co., New York, lists an Ebenezer Hitchcock heading a household where the eldest male and female are both older than 44, with the next-eldest male in the age range 16-25; also on this page is listed a Benjamin Hitchcock. The 1810 census for Granville lists an Ebenezer Hitchcock heading a household where the eldest male and female are both older than 44, with the next-eldest male in the age range 16-25; also on this page and the adjacent page are listed households headed by a Philip Hitchcock and Chaleb Hitchcock.

Generation No. 6

6. Jedediah[6] Hitchcock (Ebenezer[5], Matthias[4], John[3], Matthias[2], John[1]) was born 30 December 1771, and died 14 December 1845. He married Levirah Bushnell. She was born 12 December 1772, and died 25 December 1848.

Children of Jedediah Hitchcock and Levirah Bushnell are:
+ 7 i. Ira[7] Hitchcock, born 25 September 1797; died 24 May 1850.
8 ii. Jedediah J. Hitchcock.

NOTES

The 1800 census for Windham, Greene Co., New York, lists a Jedediah Hitchcock heading a household where the eldest male and female are both in the 16-26 age range, with three children under 10. The 1810 census for Windham lists a Jedediah Hitchcock heading a household where the eldest male and female are both in the 26-44 age range, with five children under 10 and one child between 10-15. The 1840 census for Benton Precinct, Ogle Co., Illinois, lists: Jedediah Hitchcock (living in a two-person household, male and female each in the age range 60-70), with adjacent Jedediah J. Hitchcock household (possibly a son) and Ira Hitchcock household (son). Adjacent to the Hitchcocks are listed two Bushnell households (Jedediah Hitchcock married a Bushnell), whose exact relationship is undetermined: Anson Bushnell (eldest male and female 40-50) and Horace Bushnell (eldest male and female 20-30).

At the time of the 1840 U.S. census, Jedediah Hitchcock (1771–1845) [No. 6] resided in Benton Precinct, Ogle Co., Illinois.

Generation No. 7

7. Ira[7] Hitchcock (Jedediah[6], Ebenezer[5], Matthias[4], John[3], Matthias[2], John[1]) was born 25 September 1797, and died 24 May 1850. He married Olive Goodsell. She was born 14 June 1800 in New York, and died 21 July 1886.

Children of Ira Hitchcock and Olive Goodsell are:
9 i. Daniel[8] Hitchcock, born about 1826 in New York.
10 ii. Abigail Hitchcock, born about 1828 in Ohio.

\+ 11 iii. Henry Hitchcock, born 28 July 1836 in Michigan; died 03 February 1927.

NOTES

Residences of Ira Hitchcock (1797–1850) [No. 7] (from U.S. censuses):
1830: Johnson Co., Illinois
1840: Benton Precinct, Ogle Co., Illinois

At the time of the 1850 census, Olive (Goodsell) Hitchcock (1800–1886), recently widowed wife of Ira Hitchcock, resided in a household where her son, David, is listed as head. At the times of the 1860 and 1870 censuses, she resided with her son, Henry, and his family.

Generation No. 8

11. Henry[8] Hitchcock (Ira[7], Jedediah[6], Ebenezer[5], Matthias[4], John[3], Matthias[2], John[1]) was born 28 July 1836 in Michigan, and died 03 February 1927. He married Jerusha Bachelor, daughter of John Bachelor and Clarissa. She was born 16 May 1841 in Ohio, and died 06 January 1912.

Children of Henry Hitchcock and Jerusha Bachelor are:
\+ 12 i. Daniel Norman[9] Hitchcock, born 22 August 1860 in Illinois; died 14 May 1930.
13 ii. Olive Hitchcock, born about 1863 in Illinois.
14 iii. Abigail Hitchcock, born about 1868 in Illinois.
15 iv. Henry D. Hitchcock, born September 1870 in Illinois.

NOTES

11. Henry Hitchcock (1836–1927)

At the times of the 1860, 1870, and 1900 U.S. censuses, the occupation of Henry Hitchcock was listed as farmer.

Residences of Henry Hitchcock (from U.S. censuses):
1860, 1870: Akron, Peoria Co., Illinois
1900: Oswego, Labette Co., Kansas

Jerusha (Bachelor) Hitchcock (1841–1912)
(wife of Henry Hitchcock)

In the 1900 census, her birth date is listed as April 1841.

The only information had at this time regarding Jerusha Bachelor's family are her parents as siblings, as follows:

John[1] Bachelor was born about 1800 in Virginia. He married Clarissa. She was born about 1812 in New York.

Children of John Bachelor and Clarissa are:
i. David[2] Bachelor, born about 1832 in Ohio.
ii. William Bachelor, born about 1834 in Ohio.
iii. Lydia Bachelor, born about 1837 in Ohio.
iv. Delila Bachelor, born about 1839 in Ohio.
v. Jerusha Bachelor, born 16 May 1841 in Ohio; died 06 January 1912.
vi. Basil? P. Bachelor, born about 1843 in Ohio.
vii. Leonidas H. Bachelor, born about 1846 in Ohio.
viii. Lucretia Bachelor, born about 1848 in Ohio.
ix. Mary A. Bachelor, born about 1850 in Illinois.
x. Freeman H. Bachelor, born about 1855 in Illinois.

Notes

At the time of the 1850 U.S. census, William Bachelor was a farmer and was the eldest male in his mother's household.

At the time of the 1860 U.S. census, Leonidas Bachelor resided with his brother-in-law and sister, Henry and Jerusah Hitchcock.

At the time of the 1870 U.S. census, Freeman H. Bachelor aged 17, was a laborer on the farm of Patrick McDermot, in Akron, Peoria Co., Illinois.

15. Henry D. Hitchcock (1870–)

At the time of the 1900 census, he worked as a farmer, residing with his parents.

Generation No. 9

12. Daniel Norman[9] Hitchcock (Henry[8], Ira[7], Jedediah[6], Ebenezer[5], Matthias[4], John[3], Matthias[2], John[1]) was born 22 August 1860 in Illinois, and died 14 May 1930. He married Bona Vera Ridgway, daughter of Benjamin Ridgway and Vestella Poindexter. She was born 11 May 1863 in Topeka, Kansas, and died 19 June 1939.

Children of Daniel Hitchcock and Bona Ridgway are:

16 i. Norman Ridgway[10] Hitchcock, born 15 July 1896; died 1978.

\+ 17 ii. Bonver Ridgway Hitchcock, born 28 November 1897 in Chicago, Illinois; died 28 December 1940 in Chicago, Illinois.

Bona Vera (Ridgway) Hitchcock was a member of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, I.D. No. 105504, descendant of Ebenezer Hubbard, Minute Man in the Connecticut militia at Concord, Massachusetts. That lineage, through marriages, is as follows:

Descendants of Ebenezer Hubbard

Generation No. 1

1. Ebenezer[1] Hubbard was born 1726 in Concord, Massachusetts, and died 1807 in Concord, Massachusetts. He married Hannah Estabrook.

Child of Ebenezer Hubbard and Hannah Estabrook is:

\+ 2 i. Millicent[2] Hubbard, born 1760; died 1835.

Notes

"Ebenezer Hubbard served as a minute man in the Connecticut militia from Concord, Mass., where he was born and died."[1119]

Generation No. 2

2. Millicent[2] Hubbard (Ebenezer[1]) was born 1760, and died 1835. She married Nathaniel Davis 1780. He was born 1759, and died 1835.

Child of Millicent Hubbard and Nathaniel Davis is:

\+ 3 i. John[3] Davis, born 1794.

[1119] Lineage Books of the Charter Members of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution (National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, Washington, D.C.), Vol. 106, p. 162.

Generation No. 3

3. John[3] Davis (Millicent[2] Hubbard, Ebenezer[1]) was born 1794. He married Sarah Bassett.

Child of John Davis and Sarah Bassett is:
\+ 4 i. Sarah Vestella[4] Davis.

Generation No. 4

4. Sarah Vestella[4] Davis (John[3], Millicent[2] Hubbard, Ebenezer[1]) She married Albert Van R. Poindexter.

Child of Sarah Davis and Albert Poindexter is:
\+ 5 i. Vestella C.[5] Poindexter, born 1841; died 1877.

Generation No. 5

5. Vestella C.[5] Poindexter (Sarah Vestella[4] Davis, John[3], Millicent[2] Hubbard, Ebenezer[1]) was born 1841, and died 1877. She married Benjamin F. Ridgway.

Child of Vestella Poindexter and Benjamin Ridgway is:
6 i. Bona Vera[6] Ridgway, born 11 May 1863 in Topeka, Kansas; died 19 June 1939.

End of Hubbard descendency to Bona Vera Ridgway

Hitchcock Family collateral genealogy continues:

Generation No. 10

17. Bonver Ridgway[10] Hitchcock (Daniel Norman[9], Henry[8], Ira[7], Jedediah[6], Ebenezer[5], Matthias[4], John[3], Matthias[2], John[1]) was born 28 November 1897 in Chicago, Illinois, and died 28 December 1940 in Chicago, Illinois. He married Elizabeth Mack 23 April 1932 in Michigan City, Indiana, daughter of Joseph Mack and Roberta Smith. She was born 28 January 1906 in Nazareth, Northampton, Pennsylvania, and died 25 May 1990 in New Mexico.

336. Roberta[9] Mack (Roberta Covington[8] Smith, John Edward[7], John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 17 June 1909 in Independence, Missouri, and died 14 July 1995 in New Mexico. She married Luther Francis McCollum 01 September 1949 in Carlsbad, New Mexico. He was born 20 February 1904, and died July 1979.

Children of Roberta Mack and Luther McCollum are:
463 i. Louella[10] McCollum.
464 ii. Jack McCollum.

NOTES

336. Roberta (Mack) McCollum (1909–1995)
"Bobbie"

Roberta Mack received a B.S. in Home Economics from Perdue University, 1930, where also she was a winner of the Flora Roberts Award.[1120] She was a registered dietician, first as an intern at the Philadelphia General Hospital, then Assistant Dietician at Chester County Hospital, West Chester, Pennsylvania. She was Head Dietician at several institutions: St. Luke's and Children's Hospital, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; State Teachers College, West Chester, Pennsylvania; and the University of Maryland.[1121]

During and shortly after World War II, she served as a dietician in the Women's Army Corps. In 1945 she is noticed in her mother's newspaper obituary as Lt. Roberta Mack, then serving in England. A history of the Army Medical Specialist Corps includes a staged photograph of 1st Lt. Mack, dietetic coordinator, looking into a cook vat in a spotless military kitchen. The text notes:[1122]

> With the war's end and redeployment of dietitians came the problem of staffing the hospitals of the army of occupation. An estimate of 44 dietitians was made. 1st Lt. Roberta Mack became the new dietetic coordinator in the Chief Surgeon's Office, European theater. By mid-July 1946, every general and station hospital in the European theater had at least one dietitian assigned, the larger hospitals had the requisite number according to the table of organization while the smaller ones were assigned only one.

After her marriage to Luther McCollum, she held various positions including home economist with the Gas Company of New Mexico, dietician at the Landsun Home, and teller at the Carlsbad National Bank. After her retirement, she continued actively in church and civic organizations.

She was a Field Distributor for the publications placed by the Swedenborg Foundation, Inc., New York. A business card for the distributorship lists her address as 907 E. Orchard Lane, #22, which in turn is corrected to 1303 E. Orchard Lane, #12.[1123]

[1120] The Flora Roberts Award of Perdue University "is given to a senior woman student for outstanding scholarship, leadership, character and service to the university community. The award was established by the will of Flora Roberts, a member of the Purdue Class of 1887." The award consists of a medal, certificate, and honorarium. Mack appears as fig. 55 (p. 218); quotation from p. 217.

The first U.S. dieticians to go to Europe during World War II were attached to the 5th General Hospital. These civilian workers arrived in Northern Ireland in May 1942. Their services were in hospitals and general messes throughout England and, after D-Day, on the continent; often in minimally supplied field hospitals, and even in general hospitals the cooking facilities might be Spartan, which required "enterprising efforts" to turn out thousands of safe and nutritious meals. Military dieticians (such as Lt. Mack) supervised civilian personnel and even German prisoners of war.

[1123] I located this business card serendipitously. It was taped inside of a book published by the Swedenborg Foundation, which I had purchased from a used-book dealer Ruidoso, New Mexico, in 2007: Thomas A. King, Allegories of Genesis (Swedenborg Foundation, Inc., New York, 1982). The book, incidentally, was authored by Rev.

In Edward S. Smith's "Smith Genealogy", all he indicated about Luther McCollum was that "He is a security officer in a large plant"[1124]; this was about 1960. An undated newspaper clipping received from Helen (Montgomery) McCarraher shows a photograph of Luther McCollum supervising security officers at the gate to a large plant. The caption reads:

> Security Tight — there are no free tours at the Gnome site and it's just as hard getting out as in. Security guard Ray Adkins, left and William Foley, drivers side, check passes. Security chief Luther McCollum looks on.

The name, "Gnome" reveals the nature of the facility. This was Project GNOME, the first underground nuclear detonation of Project Plowshare, which investigated peaceful uses for nuclear explosives. "Shot GNOME" was detonated on 10 December 1961 near Carlsbad, New Mexico; the device had a yield of 3.1 kilotons and was exploded 1,184 feet underground in a natural formation of bedded rock salt. The test was expected to provide data on the retention and transfer of heat that could be utilized in the development of steam- or hot-gas turbine electrical generation. Other expectations of the test were insights into the utility of recovering radioisotopes from the melted materials in the shot-containment cavity. The shot was supposed to self-seal the shaft, but it vented radioactive steam to the atmosphere for about a day.[1125]

A monument at the site has a plaque reading,

> United States Atomic Energy Commission
> Dr. Glenn T. Seaborg, Chairman
> PROJECT GNOME
> December 10, 1961
> The first nuclear detonation in the Plowshare Program to develop peaceful uses for nuclear explosives was conducted below this spot at a depth of 1216 feet in a stratum of rock salt. The explosive equivalent to 3,100 tons of TNT was detonated at the end of a horizontal passage heading from a vertical shaft located 1,116 feet southwest of this point. Among the many objectives was the production and recovery of useful radioactive isotopes. The study of heat

340. Gerardin Faulkner[9] Smith (Gilbert Haven[8], John Edward[7], John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 27 November 1908 in Bryn Athyn, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania. He married Hilda Synnestvedt [Jean Synnestvedt] 06 August 1930, daughter of John Synnestvedt and Emily Hopf. She was born 25 December 1902 in Illinois, and died March 1981.

Child of Gerardin Smith and Hilda Synnestvedt is:

465 i. Sally Jean[10] Smith, born 06 August 1932.

NOTES

340. Gerardin Faulkner Smith (1908–)
"Gerry"

Gerardin Faulkner Smith wandered at times and is said to have ridden the rails. His marriage was not a settled one. At the time of the 1930 U.S. census he worked as a messenger. He had worked in a bank in Chicago, Illinois, and one day about 1936 he was reported absent by his employer; there may have been some impropriety with the bank's cash accounts. He was never heard from again. His mother never gave up hope that he might be found.

Gerardin Smith and Jean Synnestvedt were married by a Justice of the Peace. Although family information records their marriage on 6 August 1930, the social page of the Cook County Herald for 18 November 1930 notes under "Glenview" that "Miss Jean Synnestvedt and her fiancee [sic], Mr. Jerry Smith, and Miss Alice Smith, were guests at the Henry Jasmer home in Chicago Sunday evening."[1126]

NOTES

342. Virginia (Smith) Tyler (1912–)
"Ginny"

Virginia Smith was baptized by Bishop W. F. Pendleton. She studied nursing. An address book of Earle C. Smith (predating 1964) lists the Tylers' address as 2941 Cherry Lane, Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania.

Theodore Tyler
(husband of Virginia Smith)
"Ted"

He had been married previously to his marriage to Virginia Smith, and he had children by that marriage, as follows:

Theodore Tyler married Gertrude Price, daughter of Enoch S. Price and Lily Waelchli. She was born 24 August 1907.

Children of Theodore Tyler and Gertrude Price are:

i. Nicholas[2] Tyler [died young].
ii. Martha Louise Tyler, born 18 April 1933.
iii. George Price Tyler, born 11 May 1937.
iv. Michael Price Tyler, born 20 November 1940.

Notes

In 2006, George Price Tyler resided in Laconia, New Hampshire.

Enoch S. Price (1856–1934) and Lily Waelchli married 1868. They had eleven children. She was the daughter of John Waelchli and Mary Anna Schaffroth, both of whom were from Switzerland. Mary Schaffroth's mother was Elisaveth Stettler, born 1816.

472. Nicholas Lang Tyler (1947–)
"Nick"

In 2006, Nicholas Lang Tyler resided in the Virgin Islands and was an aerial acrobatics pilot.

473. Carson Smith Tyler (1955–)

In 2006, Carson Smith Tyler resided in California.

Harold Covert Cranch (1911–2004)
(husband of Jean Smith)

Rev. Harold Covert Cranch graduated in 1941 from the Academy of the New Church Theological School, Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania.

The Cranch ancestors include several notable Americans. One of these ancestors, Richard Cranch, married a Mary Smith (no relation to our Smith family) whose sister, Abigail, married John Adams, who became second President of the United States. Another ancestor was William Cranch, son of Richard, who was appointed to a federal judgeship by his uncle, John Adams, which position he held with distinction for 50 years. (See the Cranch Family and Adams Family collateral genealogies, below.)

An address book from Earle C. Smith, predating 1964, lists the Cranches' residence at 346 Riverdale Drive, Glendale, California. At the ends of their lives, the Cranches lived at 501 Porter St., Glendale, California.

Harold Cranch's obituary notice in the California New Church newsletter took note:[1132] Also see Additions & Corrections

> Harold was a pioneer in establishing the New Church in the West, starting with train trips in the early 40's, then moving the whole family to California as the first General Church minister west of the Mississippi in 1952, once the many fledgling church centers were established sufficiently to justify such a commitment. All over the west people still say that Harold Cranch was their first pastor.

Born in Somerton, Pennsylvania, on October 11, 1911, Harold became self-sufficient at a very young age, sometimes skipping school to paint and sculpt, and making a living as an artist, selling his work to Wanamakers [sic][1133] stores in the Philadelphia area. He became a musician and played with the Binky Heath Orchestra during the prohibition era. He met his future wife, Jean Seville Smith, while playing for a school prom. They were married in 1936, and Harold developed a sign-painting business to provide for his young wife and their growing family.

Unable to resist discussions with his customers and patrons about Religion, Harold made the decision to enter theological school as a father of 3, and was ordained into the priesthood in 1941.[1134] He was sent to Chicago where he served the Sharon Church as a resident minister, and began his long trips throughout the west to build the Church in new territory. By 1951 there was sufficient interest to transfer the family (now grown to 7 children) to the Los Angeles area. A large home in Sierra Madre served as the first center, but in 1953 they moved to Glendale where a new church building could be constructed. The first Western District Assembly was held in 1954, with an attendance of over 100 members and families. The Cranches baptized their eighth (and final!) child that same year. During this period, with the help of many talented volunteer teachers whom he trained, Harold developed a comprehensive Sunday School curriculum, and several years after completion of the Church, the congregation built a multi-purpose building to house the growing children's programs.

In Los Angeles there was an inevitable connection to the entertainment industry, and Harold partnered with new member Ken Hultgren, then working at the Disney Studios, to bring the teachings of the New Church to the medium of film. Several 16 mm films were produced, including Animals of the Bible, The Water of Life, and the ambitious Our Faith. Harold also developed his life-long love of Biblical archaeology, offering many public lectures on the topic.

From Glendale, the Cranches answered the call to Toronto in 1966, where Rev. Cranch was Pastor to the third largest General Church congregation, as well as Headmaster of the Olivet Day School. In the ten years in Canada, Harold continued writing, teaching, preaching, public speaking and dabbling in the fledgling new medium, videotape—as well as learning a smattering of the French language (though he would tell you he smattered the language rather badly).

In 1976, empty-nesters Harold and Jean moved to Glenview, Illinois, where Harold contented himself with radio as a means of reaching out to a larger audience. He worked extensively on a program to replicate evangelical success, and the Epsilon Society had a tremendous effort of sending out Swedenborg's books and Rev. Cranch's printed sermons to interested locals.

[1133] Wanamaker's was a large department store in Philadelphia founded by John Wanamaker. Its flagship location occupied a city block opposite the southeast corner of City Hall, and it survived into the late 20th century before being bought by a succession of other department store chains. In 2007 it is a Macy's store, with most of the upper floors converted to office spaces. Wanamaker's was the premier shopping destination of several large department stores that existed on Market St. east of City Hall, none of which now survive.

[1134] Bishop Peter Buss took note that "Harold believed in outreach, and he worked on it. They told him he was too old to go [to] the Theological School, but he was bringing so many people into the church in the Chicago area they felt they had to get him into the Theological School. And they did." (>> Peter Buss, "Historical Experiences of Growth" [keynote address at the Evangelisation Seminar, Boulder, Colorado, Oct 2003], The New Church Newsletter (Hurstville [Australia] Society), Mar 2004; seen on website http://newchurch.org/au/hurstville/Mar_2004_newsletter.html (accessed 9 Nov 2005).

> The Boston Society of the Convention Church in 1980 asked the General Church for a minister to temporarily serve that group. Harold agreed to go until a Convention minister could be trained for that post.[1135]
> But the West a[l]ways beckoned, and in 1982, Harold and Jean "retired" to Glendale, where he continued to preach, teach, write, publish, and dabble in public speaking, art, archeology, film, video, radio, and travel . . . but left off in the destruction of the French language.

In an "Evangelization Time Line" for the General Church, Rev. Cranch is noted twice: "1953 Rev. Harold C. Cranch gives address at Open Clergy Meetings, 'The Third Use of the Church,' which is missionary—evangelizing the world. This is well received, with insistence that it not displace other uses."; and "1977 Missionary program developed in Glenview, Illinois by the Rev. Harold C. Cranch."[1136]

A very small sampling of Rev. Cranch's published sermons include some that purposely view contradictory positions to reaffirm the tenets of the faith:

> "The Uses of Men and Women", New Church Life, vol. 94 (1974), pp. 294-301
> "A Challenge to the Authority of the Writings", New Church Life, vol. 99 (1979), pp. 430-439
> "Swedenborg's Claims—Can We Accept Them?", New Church Life, vol. 102 (1982), pp. 244-250

Harold Cranch was cited in Who's Who in Religion (4th ed., 1992-1993), and Who's Who in the West (27th ed., 2000-2001).

An unexpected, publicly exposed sidelight in the life of Harold and Jean Cranch, living in sunny California, seems to expose a fondness for avocados. The names of Rev. and Mrs. Harold Cranch show up in a 1995 list of government applications to import fresh Hass Avocado fruit from Michoacan, Mexico.[1137] [1135] That position was filled by Rev. Ellis, the sixth pastor of the Boston Church since its founding in 1818. (>> "Reverend Harold Cranch (1911-2004)", Church on the Hill (Boston Society of the New Jerusalem), vol. 2, no. 4 (Apr 2005), p. 6.

Smith Family genealogy continues after the following collateral genealogy

Cranch Family
Collateral Genealogy
(92 descendants[1138])

The genealogy of the Cranch family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Descendants of Richard Cranch

Generation No. 1

1. Richard[1] Cranch was born 1726 in England, and died 16 October 1811 in Massachusetts. He married Mary Smith, daughter of William Smith and Elizabeth Quincy. She was born 09 December 1741 in Charlestown, Massachusetts, and died 17 October 1811 in Massachusetts.

Children of Richard Cranch and Mary Smith are:

	2	i.	Elizabeth[2] Cranch, born 1763; died 1811. She married Rev. Jacob Norton.
	3	ii.	Lucy Cranch, born 1767; died 1846. She married John Greenleaf; born 1763; died 1848.
+	4	iii.	William Cranch, born 17 July 1769 in Weymouth, Norfolk, Massachusetts; died 01 September 1855 in Washington, D.C.

NOTES

Richard Cranch (1726–1811) [No. 1] was a watchmaker and attended Harvard College (receiving an honorary degree in 1780). He was the Justice of the Suffolk County Court of Common Pleas, 1779-1793, representative to the Massachusetts General Court, 1778-1782; member of the Massachusetts Senate, 1787; representative from Braintree in the Constitution Convention, 1788; and Postmaster at Quincy, 1794.[1139]

During the early days of the Republic, the individual states produced legal tender bills of credit, used as currency. In Massachusetts, a series of such bills was issued on 5 May 1780, which were payable in Spanish milled dollars with 5% interest accrued to 31 December 1786. Some of these bills were signed by "R[ichard]. Cranch".[1140]

Richard Cranch was buried 19 October 1811 in Quincy, Massachusetts.

Mary Smith (1741–1811), wife of Richard Cranch and not a relation to the Smiths of the Eastern Shore, carried on a respectable correspondence with her sister, Abigail Adams, wife of John Adams, second President of the United States.[1141] (Also see Adams family collateral genealogy, below.)

She was buried 19 October 1811 in Quincy, Massachusetts.

[1138] This collateral genealogy also contains the following colalteral lineages, as indicated: Greeleaf (4 individuals), Webster (7). The sum given above does not include these individuals.

Generation No. 2

4. William[2] Cranch (Richard[1]) was born 17 July 1769 in Weymouth, Norfolk Co., Massachusetts, and died 01 September 1855 in Washington, D.C. He married Nancy Greenleaf 06 April 1795, daughter of William Greenleaf and Mary Brown. She was born 03 June 1772 in Boston, Suffolk Co., Massachusetts, and died 16 September 1843 in Washington, D.C.

Children of William Cranch and Anna Greenleaf are:

	5	i.	William Greenleaf[3] Cranch, born 11 January 1796; died February 1872.
	6	ii.	Richard Cranch, born 26 June 1797; died August 1824.
	7	iii.	Anne Allen Cranch, born 28 April 1799; died April 1822.
	8	iv.	Mary Cranch, born 26 September 1801; died June 1822. She married Richard Cranch Norton 1820.
	9	v.	John Quincy Cranch, born 05 December 1803; died 14 January 1804.
	10	vi.	Elizabeth Eliot Cranch, born 08 February 1805; died May 1860. She married Rufus Dawes 18 May 1829; born 27 January 1803; died 29 November 1859.
+	11	vii.	John Cranch, born 02 February 1807; died 1891.
	12	viii.	Edward Pope Cranch, born 29 May 1809; died 07 December 1892. He married Bertha Wood 15 April 1842.
	13	ix.	Christopher Pearse Cranch, born 15 May 1811; died 21 July 1811.
+	14	x.	Christopher Pearse Cranch, born 08 March 1813 in Alexandria, Fairfax Co., Virginia; died 20 January 1892 in Ellery St., Cambridge, Massachusetts.
	15	xi.	Virginia Cranch, born January 1815; died 30 January 1815.
+	16	xii.	Abigail Adams Cranch, born 20 February 1817; died 1908.
+	17	xiii.	Margaret Dawes Cranch, born 15 April 1819; died 30 January 1895.

NOTES

4. William Cranch (1769–1855) [1142]

William Cranch graduated from Harvard College in 1787 and later received an LL.D. degree from that institution. His graduating class also included John Quincy Adams, his cousin and future U.S. President. Cranch studied law for three years in Boston and was admitted to the bar in July 1790, and thereafter for three years practiced law in Braintree (today Quincy) and Haverill, Massachusetts.

He removed to Washington, D.C., in October 1794, while the national government still was seated in Philadelphia, and there he became involved as a legal agent in a land-speculation syndicate under his brother-in-law, James Greenleaf, which collapsed in bankruptcy.[1143] At about the same time, in 1800, he was appointed to a voluntary position as Reporter of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, which had recently removed from Philadelphia when the national capital transferred from that city to the new Washington City. He was the second Reporter of decisions for the Supreme Court of the United States[1144], William Cranch, L.L.D.: Late Chief Justice of the District of Columbia, Delivered in the Unitarian Church, Washington City, on Sunday, October 7, 1855* (Buell and Blanchard, Washington, D.C., 1855). [1143] Much of the speculation was taking place on what now is known as Greenleaf Point. One history of Washington recounts the development in more enthusiastic terms (Allen C. Clark, Greenleaf and Law in the Federal City, Press of W. F. Roberts, Washington, D.C., 1901).

[1144] In this capacity Cranch had succeeded Alexander James Dallas, the first Reporter of the Supreme Court, who appears in the collateral genealogies of this present work, in Appendix 2. The need for the Reports was not so much publishing nine volumes of Reports of Cases for that body, 1801-1815. In this capacity we might be afforded an example of his precocious and devotional character to the law. As pointed out by Craig Joyce, how Cranch came to be Reporter in the first place is unrecorded:[1145]

> "The older histories occasionally refer to him as the first 'regularly appointed' Reporter of the Court's decisions. But no such entry appears in the minutes of the Court, nor had Congress or the Court provided for such an appointment by statute or rule. Without doubt, the reports published by Cranch, like the volumes of his predecessor [Alexander James Dallas], remained at all times a private venture. Thus, it seems most likely that Cranch, like Dallas, appointed himself to report the Court's decisions."

When the Supreme Court left Philadelphia, Dallas had not followed, and in fact he was embittered by the "miserable encouragement for my Reports".[1146] Cranch may have acted opportunistically, having been left in precarious financial straits by the land-speculation collapse in Washington. But rescue for William Cranch came from another (and well documented) source, too. On 8 January 1801 he was appointed by President John Adams (his uncle) a Commissioner of the City of Washington. And on 3 March 1801 Adams appointed Cranch to the position of Assistant Judge in the Circuit Court of the District of Columbia—one of the so-called "Midnight Judges" who were appointed by Adams, exercising the Judiciary Act of 1800, during the last hours of the Adams administration.[1147] In March 1806 Cranch was appointed Chief Justice of that court by President Thomas Jefferson[1148], which position he then held for fifty years, until his death.

as recitation of Court opinions, but that they documented precisely, within the bounds of the American legal system, the points of law that underlay the opinions and rulings of the Court. As William Cranch himself noted in 1804 (Preface, 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) iii 1804, as reproduced in "The Founders' Constitution" website, http://pres-pubs.uchicago.edu/founders/documents/a3_1s28.html, accessed 15 Nov 2005):

> "Much of that uncertainty of the law, which is so frequent, and perhaps so justly, the subject of complaint in this country, may be attributed to the want of American reports.
> "Many of the causes, which are the subject of litigation in our courts, arise upon circumstances peculiar to our situation and laws, and little information can be derived for English authorities to lead to a correct decision.
> "Uniformity, in such cases, can not be expected where the judicial authority is shared among such a vast number of independent tribunals, unless the decisions of the various courts are made known to each other. Even in the same court, analogy of judgment can not be maintained if its adjudications are suffered to be forgotten. It is therefore much to be regretted that so few of the gentlemen of the bar have been willing to undertake the task of reporting.

> "[T]he least possible range ought to be left for the discretion of the judge. Whatever tends to render the laws certain, equally tends to limit the discretion; and perhaps noting conduces more to that object than the publication of reports. Every case decided is a check upon the judge . . . . The avenues to corruption are thus obstructed, and the sources of litigation closed."

or Christopher Pearse Cranch (1813–1892) [No. 14]

In fact, William Cranch was Chief Justice of the Circuit Court as well as the Judge of the District Court of the District of Columbia; we would recognize the distinctions today as federal and municipal, but in Judge Cranch's day the whole was federal in jurisdiction. In many recountings of his career and some of the individual events, the distinction between the two courts has been muddled.

In his capacity as a jurist William Cranch published six volumes of reports of the Circuit Court, 1801-1841, and prepared a code of laws for the District of Columbia. In fact, it was his decision that probably has led to the unsettled feelings today relating to the disassociation of the residents of the District of Columbia, from many of the privileges usually expected or accorded to citizens, although some of these issues have been resolved by the District of Columbia Reform and Criminal Procedure Act of 1970. In 1833, though, Judge Cranch decided on the jurisdiction of federal versus municipal oversight:[1149]

> "Here it is all federal power and federal jurisdiction . . . . Here is no government but that of the United States; no executive but that of the United States; no legislature but that of the United States; and no judiciary but that of the United States . . . . This District is wholly federal."

He was the first professor of law in Columbian College in the District of Columbia (today George Washington University), although briefly in 1825-1826, as the law school closed the next year due to financial difficulty and did not begin again until 1865.[1150]

He prepared a biographical sketch of his uncle, John Adams, which was read in the U.S. Capitol.[1151]

Cranch was a charter member of the Washington National Monument Society, 1833-1849.[1152]

Cranch administered the oath of office to President John Tyler (6 April 1841) and to President Millard Fillmore (10 July 1850), each of whom was a Vice President succeeding to the office upon the death of the President (William Henry Harrison and Zachary Taylor, respectively). Tyler was sworn in his town residence in Brown's Hotel, 6th St. and Pennsylvania Ave., N.W.; Fillmore in the House of Representatives Chamber of the U.S. Capitol. Ever the legal precisionist, Judge Cranch issued an affidavit asserting the rightful succession of the Vice President to the office of President, probably as the result of the potential for legal irregularity to be claimed, a sitting President having not before died in office. As reported in the Daily National Intelligencer on 7 April 1841:

> "The President then took and subscribed the following oath of office:—
> "I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States. JOHN TYLER.

A half plate, gold-toned daguerreotype photograph of William Cranch, ca. 1850, produced by the Mathew Brady studio, is held in the collections of the Library of Congress.[1153]

One of Cranch's residences, still standing (2006), is known today as the Duncanson-Cranch House; it is at 468-470 N Street, S.W., Washington, D.C. A 1937 photograph of this house is in the Library of Congress.[1154] Built ca. 1794, the house was a part of Wheat Row, created by James Greenleaf (Cranch's brother-in-law) as part of real estate developments in the new Washington City. "Duncanson" was William Mayne Duncanson, a wealthy trader who, like Cranch, also was bankrupted in the Greenleaf land speculations. In the 1937 views of the house, it is one of a row of dissimilar houses on the south side of N St., noticeable for its double width, third story, and protruding entranceway at its easternmost end. When the neighborhood was entirely razed in an urban renewal project in the early 1960s, the Duncanson-Cranch house was saved, standing strangely alone amidst the excavation pit that would later be Harbour Square.[1155] The house is listed on the National Register of Historic Places. Today [2006], it is a private residence in a pleasant neighborhood, with its west side now open to the driveway of an adjacent condominium building.

William Cranch was involved in the temperance movement, and at least one of his addresses on the subject was published, in 1831.[1156]

The Act of March 3, 1837, made the circuit court a court of appeal from decisions of the Commissioner of Patents, and for which Judge Cranch received a payment of $100 per year. In 1851, citing great age, he applied to retire from his Patent Office duties, but he never did retire. (His son, William, served as a copywriter in the Patent Office in 1826 and later was made a Patent Examiner.)[1157] Acting with his experience as a jurist, William Cranch decided on one of the mainstays of the patent process (as summarized in 1875):[1158]

> "A quarter of a century ago, Judge Cranch had decided that an invention was completed and reduced to practice when, by means of models, drawings, and other descriptions, it was set forth in such terms that a person skilled in that particular art could reproduce the invention so described. When this was done, therefore, in an application for patent, the invention was known in this country, and no other person could afterwards be the original and first inventor thereof."

The Duncanson–Cranch house, 468-470 N Street, S.W., Washington, D.C.
Home of Hon. William Cranch

Built ca. 1794, the house was a part of Wheat Row, created by James Greenleaf (William Cranch's brother-in-law) as part of real estate developments in the new Washington City. "Duncanson" was William Mayne Duncanson, a wealthy trader who, like Cranch, also was bankrupted in the Greenleaf land speculations. In 1937 views of the house (such as the view above) it is one of a row of dissimilar structures on the south side of N St., noticeable for its double width, third story, and protruding entranceway at its easternmost end. When the neighborhood was entirely razed in an urban renewal project in the early 1960s, the Duncanson-Cranch house was saved, standing strangely alone on a pinacle in the excavation pit that would later be Harbour Square.

(Right) Today, as seen in this view taken in 2006, the Duncanson–Cranch house has its entrance on the exposed west side of the building, alongside a driveway that leads to a modern condominium building. (Compare to the overexposed portion of the right side of the view above.)

William Cranch's definitive reputation as a jurist notwithstanding, he was not always abounding in foresight. Craig Joyce commented:[1159]

> "So high were Cranch's standards on the bench that he once agreed to admit to the bar a young lawyer of marginal attainments only after the latter promised not to practice in Washington but rather to remove to the 'western country.' Ironically, years later and suitably seasoned, Salmon P. Chase would become the Supreme Court's sixth Chief Justice.[1160]

In one of the more ironic circumstances of William Cranch's career as a jurist, he presided over the court that sentenced Anne Royall, arguably a most energetic, prolific, and, in peculiar measure, successful woman of the Third Estate. She was a widely traveled and self-possessed conscience of the public interest and private agendas alike. In 1829, when she then resided in Washington, D.C., she ran afoul of Presbyterian congregants who staged a vigil at her residence, baiting her (successfully) to unleash a torrent of oaths. She was charged as a public nuisance and a "common scold" and tried in the U.S. District Court for Washington, over which presided Judge Cranch. She was found guilty and sentenced to the traditional, but obsolete, punishment for "common scolds", the ducking chair, for which the U.S. Marines at the Washington Navy Yard had built such a contraption. However, the means of punishment was indeed deemed obsolete, and she instead was fined $10, which was paid by two reporters from the Washington newspaper, The National Intelligencer; and Royall left the city to travel again. She returned to Washington two years later to ferret out political and religious fraud, as well as anyone who met her displeasure, through her self-published newspapers, Paul Pry and The Huntress. When she finally died, in 1854, aged 85 years, she was buried in Congressional Cemetery (Row 26, Section 194). [1161]

Ironically, the last judge to sentence a woman to the ducking chair, William Cranch, was buried a year later in Congressional Cemetery at Row 45, Sect. 208, not far from Anne Royall.

The National Intelligencer, of Washington, D.C., noticed the death of William Cranch:[1162]

"Death of Judge Cranch

> "Our readers will learn, form the notices to be found in another part of our paper, that this eminent citizen died at his residence, in this city, on Saturday evening. He was one of the oldest residents of the Federal city, having removed here with his family from Massachusetts in 1796 or 1797, three or four years before the Government was transferred fro Philadelphia. It will be seen that a meeting of the Bar of Washington has been called for this morning, at which, no doubt, some one of its members will make a suitable address, in which occasion will be taken to speak of the prominent incidents of his life. We shall, therefore, only add here that, as a private citizen, friend, and neighbor, there never lived a more upright, honest man than Judge Cranch."

[1160] William Cranch did not live to witness this. Salmon P. Chase (1808-1873) arrived on the Supreme Court in 1864, nominated by Abraham Lincoln to fill the position of Chief Justice, which Chase held until his death. He presided at the impeachment trial of President Andrew Johnson, in 1868. Chase is figured on the U.S. $10,000 bill, no longer in circulation.

The address at the Bar of Washington was published as follows:[1163]

"Richard S. Coxe, Esq. rose and stated that the meeting had assembled in consequences of an event which, tough long anticipated had struck them with surprise. They had met to commemorate the life, virtues, and character of their deceased brother, the Honorable William Cranch, Chief Judge of the Circuit Court and Judge of the District Court of the District of Columbia, who died at his residence in this city on Saturday last.

"Judge Cranch died (said Mr. C.) at about the age of eighty-six years, after having lived thus long as an individual, and having presided on the bench a longer period of time than he had ever heard of in a judicial officer. He was appointed a Judge of the Circuit Court in March, 1801, fifty-four years since. He has now left us, and the place made vacant by his death is to be supplied; but he might say that along time would elapse before that place could be supplied with so acceptable a gentleman and one possessing so much ability.

"Judge Cranch was a native of Massachusetts, and came to this city, he believed, in the year 1795 or 1796. He at once engaged in a great deal of active business, and obtained high respect for his talents. Having been appointed, in 1801, the junior Judge of the Circuit Court, he was subsequently elevated to the position of Chief Justice of that court, and was likewise the Judge of the District Court. All who knew him in the course of their practice in the Courts knew how well and admirably he fulfilled all of the duties with which he was entrusted. Few Judges ever excelled him; few ever equaled him in all the essentials which go to constitute the character of a great Judge. He was eminent for learning in all the departments of law—admiralty, chancery, criminal, and common—and was thoroughly imbued with the learning of the profession from the earliest days.

"With regard to his personal character no imputation ever rested upon it, for his integrity was never impugned. His faithfulness, his impartiality; his urbanity of manner toward those who practiced in the courts over which he presided; his uncommon industry in preparing and pronouncing judgment after argument had been closed—in all these he stood pre-eminent; and, although they had known judges possessing a larger extent of inquiry, he possessed that necessary degree of inquiry which qualified him most admirably for the duties which devolved upon him.

"We have met (said Mr. C.) with a great loss; but, thank God! he has left a bright example. We trust that every young man, while he reverences, will follow him—will imitate Judge Cranch in industry, and endeavor to equal him in learning; be pure of heart as he was pure, honorable as he was honorable; so as to leave as pure and eminent a character for the admiration of his countrymen."

The Evening Star, of Washington, D.C., reported on the funeral of William Cranch:[1164]

"The Funeral of Judge Cranch took place yesterday afternoon, form his late residence on Capitol Hill. A large number of citizen were in attendance on the exercises including the bench and the bar of the several courts, the President of the United States [Franklin Pierce], Hon. Caleb Cushing, the Attorney General, and the Hon. Erastus Brooks, a son-in-law of the deceased. The address of the Rev. William Furnace [sic, Furness[1165]] of the Unitarian church, Philadelphia, was appropriate, eloquent, and impressive.

"The following named gentlemen acted as pall-bearers: Messrs. James Adams, R. C. Wightman, R. S. Coxe, James M. Carlisle, William Redin, and John Marbury.

"On the conclusion of the funeral services, many of the persons present approached to take a parting look at the remains of the pure and upright judge; and we were thus privileged among the number. As in life the countenance of the deceased was serene, irradiated with intelligence and benevolence, so in death he lay as if in peaceful slumber—no distortion of the nerves; no repulsiveness such as frequently induces the spectator to hurry from the scene. Conscious of an honorable, virtuous life, the grave had, doubtless, no terror for him; and hence with calmness he sunk into the eternal rest.

"Mr. Anthony Buchly, the undertaker, superintended the funeral, in his usually polite but prompt manner; having made careful preparations for that duty. The coffin, it may be observed, is mahogany, covered with fine black cloth, the studs and handles, of silver. The breastplate, of the same material, bore the inscription: 'William Cranch; born July 17 1769; died September 1, 1855.' The interior of the coffin was neatly lined with folds of white satin.

"The funeral cortege was large, and the remains were conveyed to the Congressional Cemetery, where they were deposited in the family vault."

Nancy (Greenleaf) Cranch (1772–1843)
(wife of William Cranch)

Her given name has also been listed as Anna. Her name is given on her grave marker as Nancy; she is buried at Row 45, Sect. 208, Congressional Cemetery, Washington, D.C.

The National Intelligencer of Washington, D.C., noted the death of Nancy Cranch:[1166]

"The death of Mrs. Cranch, announced in the Intelligencer of Wednesday, appears to call for some more extended notice than the simple statement of name and age. For upwards of forty years had Mrs. Cranch been known to the inhabitants of this District as filling with exemplary attention, and with unassuming dignity, the most important relations of social life. Her character was marked by calmness and strong good sense; her deportment by kindness and readiness to please. Her politeness seemed to be without effort, yet won upon those she addressed more than studied exertion would have done. In the education of her children, her own singular equanimity and wisdom, with the high qualities of her husband, enabled them to avoid those difficulties which so often embarrass the parental relation. Her government was in the spirit of that 'perfect love which casteth out fear,' and she found a rich reward in the devoted affection of her offspring.

"Her piety was deep, consistent, and practical. It controlled her life, and enabled her to bear the pain of sickness and the approach of death with composure. Shortly before her decease, she partook for the last time in the Lord's Supper—thus renewing her testimony to the value of the religion she had cherished throughout life. Happy to a degree which few have attained in her family, she was still more happy in resigning her spirit to God, in the faith of a glorious resurrection.

"Mrs. Cranch was a daughter of William Greenleaf, Esq., formerly Sheriff of Suffolk county, Massachusetts. She was one of a numerous family of brothers and sisters, among whom the widow of the late venerable Dr. [Noah] Webster and others survive her. One, James Greenleaf, Esq., well known as among the earliest settlers of this city, outlived his beloved sister but a few hours."

"'Have ye not met ere now? So let those trust,
"Who meet for moments but to part for years;
"That weep, watch, pray, to keep back dust from dust;
"That love, where love is but a fount of tears.' "

Regarding the Greenleaf family, only the parents and some siblings of Nancy Greenleaf are thus far known in this genealogy, are given as follows:

[1166] The National Intelligencer, 22 Sep 1843.

Descendants of William Greenleaf

Generation No. 1

1. William[1] Greenleaf was born 10 January 1724/25, and died 21 July 1803. He married Mary Brown 03 June, daughter of Judge Robert Brown.

Children of William Greenleaf and Mary Brown are:

	2	i.	James[2] Greenleaf, born 1765 in Boston, Suffolk Co., Massachusetts; died 1843.
+	3	ii.	Rebecca Greenleaf, born 1766 in Boston, Suffolk Co., Massachusetts; died 25 June 1847 in New Haven, Connecticut.
+	4	iii.	Nancy Greenleaf, born 03 June 1772 in Boston, Suffolk Co., Massachusetts; died 16 September 1843 in Washington, D.C.

Notes

William and Mary Greenleaf had fifteen children.

James Greenleaf (1765–1843) [No. 2] was a land speculator in Washington, D.C., where he was active in early land development in the Federal city; but these activities failed, which bankrupted his nearly $2 million fortune and the investments of others who included members of the family. The failure occurred because his contract with the new Federal City required him to build more housing than the market could bear. He built the historic "Six Buildings" and owned much of Greenleaf Point, later the site of the Arsenal which is now occupied by Fort McNair.[1167] Many of the records are in the North American Land Company Papers, in the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia.

In his personal life, James Greenleaf abandoned a wife and child in Holland and remarried in the U.S., on the same day as on which his sister, Nancy, married William Cranch. He spent his later years living with his sister, Nancy, and her husband Judge William Cranch. James Greenleaf also had been the U.S. Consul in Amsterdam.

Generation No. 2

3. Rebecca[2] Greenleaf (William[1]) was born 1766 in Boston, Suffolk Co., Massachusetts, and died 25 June 1847 in New Haven, Connecticut. She married Noah Webster in 1789, son of Noah Webster and Mercy Steele. He was born 16 October 1758 in West Hartford, Hartford, Connecticut, and died 28 May 1843 in New Haven, Connecticut.

Notes

Noah Webster (1758–1843) was the famous lexographer. See the Webster lineage, just below.

Notes

Noah Webster (1758–1843) [No. 6] was the American lexographer and teacher who objected to the varied elements of the American English language and set out to standardize the form by publishing the primer, The American Spelling Book, in 1783. Together with companion volumes on grammar and reading, published during the following two years, the series formed Webster's Grammatical Institute of the English Language.

Webster was a graduate of Yale College in 1781, after which he studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1781. During 1782-1783 he taught at a classic school in Goshen, New York, during which time he was convinced of the need for a standardized American England. He entered law practice in New Haven, Connecticut, after marrying Rebecca Greenleaf in 1789. He went into newspaper production in New York City by founding the American Minerva and The Herald. He moved to New Haven, Connecticut, and became involved in local politics. In 1803 he sold his New York newspapers. Except for the period 1812-1822, during which the Webster family resided in Amherst, Massachusetts, Webster remained in New Haven for the rest of his life.

In 1806, he published the first of the "Webster's" dictionaries, the Compendious Dictionary of the English Language, which eventually was expanded into two volumes in 1828 as the now-established American Dictionary of the English Language. The publishers, George and Charles Merriam, under whose name the dictionary is still published, purchased the rights to the American Dictionary from the estate of Noah Webster.

Cranch Family collateral genealogy continues:

5. William Greenleaf Cranch (1796–1872)

In 1826, William Greenleaf Cranch began work as a copy clerk in the U.S. Patent Office, later becoming a Patent Examiner.

In the 1853 directory for Washington, D.C., he was a Patent Office clerk residing on the East side of Delaware Ave. between B and C Sts. north (which was his father's home). His obituary[1168] notices that he died at his residence, "corner of 4th and East Capitol streets". He is buried at Row 44, Sect. 206, Congressional Cemetery, Washington, D.C.

10. Elizabeth (Cranch) Dawes (1805–1860)
and her husband Rufus Dawes (1803–1859)

They are buried at Row 44, Sect. 207, Congressional Cemetery, Washington, D.C.

12. Edward Pope Cranch (1809–1892)

He was a graduate of Columbian College in the District of Columbia (today George Washington University), 1826.

Generation No. 3

11. John[3] Cranch (William[2], Richard[1]) was born 02 February 1807, and died 1891. He married Charlotte Dawes Appleton 15 April 1845.

Children of John Cranch and Charlotte Appleton are:

NOTES

11. John Cranch (1807–1891)

He was a graduate of Columbian College in the District of Columbia (today George Washington University), 1826. He was a portrait painter in Washington, D.C., although he also did some landscapes. He was an associate member of the National Academy. The portrait of his father, Judge William Cranch, painted in oil in 1845, hung at one time in the courtroom of Chief Judge Matthew F. McGuire, U.S. District Court, Washington, D.C.; it still is owned by the U.S. District Court of Washington, D.C. Several weeks after the death of William Cranch, the following notice was made in The Evening Star of Washington, D.C.:

> "Circuit Court—The time was occupied to day by the calling over of the docket and arranging the cases for trial. The room has been shrouded in the emblems of mourning, as a mark of respect to the memory of the late Chief Justice Cranch. A portrait of the deceased, painted by his son, has been placed on the wall. It is a good likeness, and much admired for its truthfulness. There could be not be a more appropriate ornament to that tribunal."[1169]

Some of the artistic works of John Cranch include:[1170]

"John Cranch" (self-portrait), oil on canvas; in the National Academy of Design, New York
"William Greenleaf Eliot (First Chancellor of Washington University), oil; in St. Louis Art Museum, St. Louis, Missouri
"Daniel Webster", oil; in Parke-Bernet Galleries, New York
"Portrait of John Adams", oil on canvas; in Washington University Gallery of Art, St. Louis, Missouri
"John Quincy Adams", oil; in Parke-Bernet Galleries, New York
"Portrait of John Marshall", oil on canvas; in Washington University Gallery of Art, St. Louis, Missouri

A glass-negative photographic portrait, identified as "Artist Cranch" and attributed to the period 1855–1865, is in the Library of Congress.[1171] This may be either John Cranch or his brother Christopher Pearse Cranch.

Appleton's Encyclopedia of the day records his death in 1883.

NOTES

14. Christopher Pearse Cranch (1813–1892) [1172]
"Pearse"

He was a graduate of the divinity school of Harvard College, 1835, and was a Unitarian minister, but retired in 1842 to become an artist.

When as a starting artist he married Elizabeth De Windt, a cousin, they first resided on Lexington Ave. in New York City. In 1846, they accompanied their friend, George William Curtis (1824-1892), an American writer and public speaker of some renown, on a tour of Italy. There Cranch studied the artistry of the country for three years. Curtis mentioned Cranch frequently in correspondence with John S. Dwight, which are continued in a modern edition.[1173] In 1853, he took his family to live in Paris for ten years. Upon their return to America, his son, George, enlisted in the Union army. The Cranches lived for awhile on Staten Island, but removed to Cambridge, Massachusetts, where they stayed. In 1880, Cranch made a third trip to Europe

As an artist he studied in Italy, 1846-1848, and lived and painted in Paris and Italy thereafter until 1863. He returned to New York in 1864 and was elected a member of the National Academy. He also wrote prose and poetry, including children's works, and illustrated books on these subjects. Notable illustrations are "October Afternoon" (1867), "Venice" (1870), "Venetian Fishing-boats" (1871). He became a prominent Transcendentalist, probably for which he is most well known today.

A sampling of other subjects that Christopher Pearse Cranch painted are: [1174]

"Niagara Falls", 1853, oil; in Santa Barbara Museum of Art, Santa Barbara, California

"Castle Gondolfo, Lake Albano", 1852, oil; in Corcoran Gallery of Art, Washington, D.C.

"Mt. Blanc from St Moritz", oil on canvas; in National Academy of Design, New York

As a poet he was less well known and even received criticism from Edgar Allan Poe. In 1853, he write "Farewell to America" for the great singer, Jenny Lind.

Some of his publications include:

A Poem Delivered in the First congregational Church in the Town of Quincy, May 25, 1840 (J. Munroe and Co., Boston, 1840)

Poems (Carey and Hart, Philadelphia, 1844)

The Last of the Huggermugger's; a Giant Story (Mayhew and Baker, Boston, 1860) [juvenile]

Satan: a Libretto (Roberts Brothers, Boston, 1874) [The preface states, "I call this poem a libretto, because . . . the verses may suggest or accompany . . . music."

CHRISTOPHER PEARSE CRANCH –
Pencil sketch by William Wetmore Story

Painting of the U.S. Capitol as it appeared in 1841, by Christopher Pearce Cranch.

Photograph of the U.S. Capitol as it appeared ca. 1846, as William Cranch would have known it. (Library of Congress).

In addition, he made a translation into English of Virgil's Æneid.

As a historical perspective of his time, in his poem, "Seven Wonders of the World", he wrote of the printing press, ocean steamer, locomotive, telegraph and telephone, photograph, spectroscope, and microphone.

A glass-negative photographic portrait identified as "Artist Cranch" and attributed to the period 1855–1865, is in the Library of Congress.[1175] This may be either Christopher Pearse Cranch or his brother John Cranch.

20. George William Cranch (1847–1867)

After he returned from Europe with his family in 1863, he enlisted in the Union army on 10 February 1865 at age 18, serving as a 2nd Lieutenant; promoted to full 2nd Lt. on the same date; commissioned on 13 May 1865; promoted to full 1st Lt. on 19 June 1865. He served in Co. BG, 54th Massachusetts Infantry Regiment, a "colored" unit. He mustered out on 20 August 1865 at Mount Pleasant, South Carolina. His early death has been attributed to his war service, but the details are not now forthcoming.

22. Caroline Amelia Cranch (1853–1931)
"Carrie"

She studied art in the Cooper Institute, New York, and further trained under the artist William Hunt. She was a painter of figure pieces. Some of her pieces are:[1176]

"William Henry Huntington", ca. early 1880s, oil on canvas; in Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York

"John Sullivan Dwight", oil; in Harvard Musical Association, Boston, Massachusetts

"Frederic Henry Hedge", oil; in Harvard University Portrait Collection, Cambridge, Massachusetts

"John Knowles Paine", bust; in Harvard University Portrait Collection, Cambridge, Massachusetts

In 1886, George William Curtis wrote to John S. Dwight, noting:[1177]

> "I have the photograph of Carrie Cranch's remarkable portrait of you, which is a precious possession; and when I see [Christopher Pearce?] Cranch I hear of you and when I don't see him I think of you, and always with the old affection."

NOTES

17. John Quincy Adams (1767–1848)
and his wife Louisa (Johnson) Adams (1775–1852)

It seems superfluous to recount the life of one of the more well known of the early presidents of the United States, so much has been written of him.[1184] The Biographical Directory of the United States Congress summarizes the career of John Quincy Adams:[1185]

> ". . . a Senator and a Representative from Massachusetts and 6th President of the United States; born in Braintree, Mass., July 11, 1767; acquired his early education in Europe at the University of Leyden; was graduated from Harvard University in 1787; studied law; was admitted to the bar and commenced practice in Boston, Mass.; appointed Minister to Netherlands 1794, Minister to Portugal 1796, Minister to Prussia 1797, and served until 1801; commissioned to make a commercial treaty with Sweden in 1798; elected to the Massachusetts State senate in 1802; unsuccessful candidate for election to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1802; elected as a Federalist to the United States Senate and served from March 4, 1803, until June 8, 1808, when he resigned, a successor having been elected six months early after Adams broke with the Federalist party; Minister to Russia 1809-1814; member of the commission which negotiated the Treaty of Ghent in 1814; Minister to England 1815-1817, assisted in concluding the convention of commerce with Great Britain; Secretary of State in the Cabinet of President James Monroe 1817-1825; decision in the 1824 election of the President of the United States fell, according to the Constitution of the United States, upon the House of Representatives, as none of the candidates had secured a majority of the electors chosen by the states, and Adams, who stood second to Andrew Jackson in the electoral vote, was chosen and served from March 4, 1825, to March 3, 1829; elected as a Republican to the U.S. House of Representatives for the Twenty-second and to the eight succeeding Congresses, becoming a Whig in 1834; served from March 4, 1831, until his death; chairman, Committee on Manufactures (Twenty-second through Twenty-sixth, and Twenty-eighth and Twenty-ninth Congresses), Committee on Indian Affairs (Twenty-seventh Congress), Committee on Foreign Affairs (Twenty-seventh Congress); unsuccessful candidate for Governor of Massachusetts in 1834; died in the U.S. Capitol Building, Washington, D.C., February 23, 1848 . . . ."

NOTES

344. Arnold Mather Smith (1916–1987)
"Arnie"

Arnold Mather Smith enlisted in the U.S. Army Air Corps on 9 April 1942 in Chicago, Illinois (serial no. 16077774). He had had one year of college education at the time, and his civil occupation was listed as millwright. He advanced to the rank of Captain, and served as a fighter pilot from 1 November 1942 to October 1944 in Europe, Italy, and North Africa. He also flew in the Caribbean. He piloted a P-51 Mustang.[1186] A family photograph, probably a Government production, shows his aircraft, Josephine II (tail number W 41-3496), in flight over Italy in 1944.[1187]

Arnold Smith's military decorations include the D.F.C. Air Medal, European and American Theatre Ribbons with 16 clusters. His unit also received a Presidential Unit Citation. He was discharged on 5 October 1945.

After the war Arnold Mather Smith was a carpenter, residing in Glenview, Cook Co., Illinois.[1188]

Jocelyn (Olds) Smith (1921–1990)
(wife of Arnold Mather Smith)
"Josie"

Jocelyn Olds was born to Charles Olds' second wife, Irene. In the 1930 census, the data for parents' birthplaces for Jocelyn mistakenly repeat the data provide for her half-siblings, Robert and Dorothy, suggesting that both her parents were born in Massachusetts.

See the Olds Family collateral genealogy, below.

[1186] The P-51 Mustang, designed in 1940, was first used in combat flights over Europe in December 1943, then powered by the much improved British Rolls-Royce "Merlin" liquid-cooled engine of 1,520 hp. In the European theater they were highly effective high-altitude interceptors that accompanied bombing missions conducted by B-17s and B-24s. The aircraft also was used as a bomber, fitted with dive brakes. The P-51 had a 37-foot wingspan, cruising speed 275 mph, maximum speed 437 mph, service ceiling 41,900 ft, and a range of 1,000 miles. They carried an armament of six .50-cal machine guns and either ten 5-inch rockets or 2,000 lbs. of bombs. [1187] A copy of this photo is in the Spamer Family Historical Photos collection in my possession, Group 70X, no. 2873. An avocational list of U.S. military aircraft serial numbers, although accompanied by exhaustive lists of the fate or disposition of aircraft, does have gaps; it does not include the Arnold Smith aircraft ("USAAS-USAAC-USAAF-USAF Aircraft Serial Numbers–1908 to Present", website http://home.att.net/~jbaugher/usafserials.html; accessed 14 Nov 2005).

[1188] Some of this information is from the "Smith Genealogy", p. 96.

Children of Arnold and Jocelyn (Olds) Smith

Linda Rae Smith (1946–1952) [No. 482] suffered from advanced cerebral palsy.

The given name of Carol Smith's [No. 483] husband, Alandette was not recalled by those who provided the information for this genealogy. The informant indicated that the family did not get along with him. Carol Smith died in an automobile accident.

The genealogy of the Olds family, as it relates to our Smith lineage and as currently understood, is as follows:

Charles Louis[1] Olds was born March 1869 in New York State. He married (1) Mary Johnson. She was born March 1862 in New York State; died about 1918. He married (2) (Mrs.) Irene A. Mansfield 1920. She was born about 1885 in Boston, Massachusetts.

Children of Charles Olds and Mary are:

i. Orida[2] Olds, born September 1897 in Pennsylvania.
ii. Saloma Olds, born 12 February 1899 in Renovo, Clinton Co., Pennsylvania; died 15 December 1995 in Illinois.
iii. Rosalie Olds, born about 1901 in Pennsylvania.

Children of Charles Olds and Irene are:

i. Jocelyn[2] Olds, born 22 May 1921 in Pennsylvania; died 1990. She married Arnold Mather Smith 11 January 1945; born 17 November 1916 in Glenview, Cook Co., Illinois; died 20 December 1987.
ii. Jonathan H. Olds, born about July 1923 in Pennsylvania.

Irene was previously married, with two children by that marriage, as follows:

Mansfield[1] was born in Massachusetts; died about 1915 in California. He married Irene A. She was born about 1885 in Boston, Massachusetts.

Children of Mansfield and Irene are:

i. Robert M.[2] Mansfield, born about 1911 in Oregon.
ii. Dorothy Mansfield, born about 1913 in California.

NOTES

None of the Olds have been located in the 1910 U.S. census, despite exhaustive searches. In the 1920 census, just the three Olds sisters who run the Florida farm have been located. Only in the 1930 census do the Olds family members appear again, all in Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania, in the area in and around Huntingdon Valley. At this time, all of the children, even those from Irene's first marriage, are listed with the surname Olds.

Charles Louis Olds (1869–)

He was a homeopathic physician, graduated in 1893 from the Homœopathic Medical College of Pennsylvania and the Hahnemann Medical College of Philadelphia.[1189] In 1894, he received the H.M. degree (Master of Homœopathics) from the Post-Graduate School of Homœopathics in Dunham Medical College of Chicago.[1190]

The Olds family moved to Marco Island, Florida, in 1901 or 1902, where Charles Olds continued his homeopathic practice amongst a scattered population that focused on the small Marco settlement two miles from his home. (See more about Marco Island, below.) Mary Olds ended her practice to take care of the family, whom she home-schooled. He supplemented the family's income by growing fruits:

> "He owned a shell mound called Eubanks Landing about two and a half miles from his two-story home next to the mainland. He grew a variety of fruit trees around his home and on the shell mound. He crated and shipped oranges, grapefruit, lemons, limes, kumquats and a few sideliners for market."[1191]

Thus far he has not been located in the 1910 or 1920 censuses, although (as noted below) his three young daughters run the family farm in Florida at the time of the 1920 census (taken 6 February at their location). In June 1920, Charles Olds applied for a marriage license in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to Marry Irene A. Mansfield of Philadelphia[1192]; the application indicated that he then resided in Huntingdon Valley, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania. On 12 September 1937, he was the physician attending Ellen Potts when she died (Ellen was the aunt through marriage of Charles Olds' daughter, Jocelyn Olds Smith); on the death certificate he gave his address just as Huntingdon Valley.

As noted below in the discussion of the Olds family in Florida in the early 1900s, he seems to have produced a garden book, Flora's Clock. Although this title has not been found in searches of library databases, one title by a Charles Louis Olds appears in the Library of Congress' catalogue that resembles the content of Dr. Olds' garden book. This is Wood-Pile Recollections, published in 1901. It is not clear whether this is the same Charles Louis Olds as the present subject.[1193]

At the outbreak of World War I for America, Dr. Charles Olds enlisted for service and went to France. Just when he returned is uncertain. As noted above, he remarried in 1920 (probably June) in Pennsylvania. A recent historical item in a Florida newspaper stated, "When Doctor Olds returned from the service he remarried [to] a lady with two children and brought his three girls back to Philadelphia where they, 'all lived as one big, happy family.'"[1194]

The contents list from the Library of Congress catalogue record do not provide any clues to the identity of Olds or to the locations where his recollections take place, although there are references to ice, snow, and tramps, none of which were likely at least in remote Marco Island, Florida.

He was a member of the International Hahnemannian Association and published articles in their transactions.[1195]

In the 1900 and 1930 U.S. censuses, Charles Olds' occupation was listed as a physician in general practice.

Residences of Charles Olds (from U.S. censuses and other sources):

1900 census: Renovo, Clinton Co., Pennsylvania
ca. 1901–ca.1917: Olds' Farm, Marco Channel, Marco, Lee Co. [now Collier Co.], Florida
1920 (marriage license): Huntingdon Valley, Lower Moreland Twp., Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania
1930 census: Murray Ave., Huntingdon Valley, Lower Moreland Twp., Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania
1941 (Directory of the American Institute of Homeopathy): : Huntingdon Valley, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania

Mary Johnson Olds (1862–ca. 1918)
(wife of Charles Olds)

Data regarding the parents of Mary Olds (the first Mrs. Charles Olds), in the 1900 U.S. census, indicate that they both were born in New York State. Other than that she was a homeopathic physician, like her husband, relatively little is known of Mary Olds except this undocumented review in a recent newspaper article:

> "She was a graduate student in biology 1887-1880, L. B. Smith College, 1885 and A.M. 1888, M.D. from Woman's [sic] Medical College of Pennsylvania in 1892, spent a year at the University of Cambridge, England, before becoming a Homo Instructor [sic] in Homeopathic Philosophy, College Settlement, Philadelphia, and the State School of Homeopathic."[1196]

In the relatively wild environs of Marco Island, Mary Olds home-schooled her children.

> "She taught them Latin, German, French, Spanish, Hebrew, Greek, grammar, arithmetic, geography, spelling and current events. At the end of the day, they all practiced music one hour for family concerts. She also encouraged her daughters to write."[1197]

She died while her husband was in the service in France, during World War I. Presumably she died in Florida, leaving her three children orphans at the Olds Farm. Just when Charles Olds returned from France has not been determined, but the three daughters were living alone at the Olds farm according to the 1920 census taken on 6 February.

A recent series of newspaper articles about the Olds family and the diaries of two of the Olds daughters (as discussed more below) takes note that a amongst copies of papers given to the Marco Island Historical Society there was "a letter from one of the daughters to the [Smith College] Class of '84 describing their mother's death".[1198]

Irene A. Mansfield Olds (ca. 1885–)
(wife of Charles Olds)

Her maiden name has thus far not been ascertained. Data regarding her parents, as given in the 1930 U.S. census, indicate that her father and mother, respectively, had been born in Kansas and in English-speaking Canada. The data for the children who were born in her first marriage, Robert and Dorothy, indicate that their father had been born in Massachusetts; and the children had been born in Oregon and California, respectively. Nothing more has been established regarding her ancestry or about her first husband, Mansfield.

At the time of her marriage to Charles L. Olds, she resided at 1800 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Orida Olds (1897–)

Occupations of Orida Olds (from U.S. censuses):
1920: Farmer
1930: Student nurse

Residences of Orida Olds (from U.S. censuses):
1920: Olds' Farm, Marco Channel, Marco, Lee Co., Florida (with sisters, Saloma and Rosalie)
1930: Avon Road, York, DuPage Co., Illinois (in a group home)

In the 1920 census, Orida is indexed as "Ovida" Olds, with a queried alternate registration name as "Pride" Olds.

Saloma Olds (1899–1995)

She never married.

Occupations of Saloma Olds (from U.S. censuses and other sources):
1920 census: Farmer
1930 census: [no occupation]
1937 passenger list: [probably a domestic servant]

Residences of Saloma Olds (from U.S. censuses and directories):
1920: Olds' Farm, Marco Channel, Marco, Lee Co., Florida (with sisters Orida and Rosalie)
1930: Murray Ave., Huntingdon Valley, Lower Moreland Twp., Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania (with father)
1937: Sunset Ave., Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania (in employ as a domestic servant)
At death: 601 Glendale Rd., Glenview, Cook Co., Illinois

Saloma Olds is listed in a ship's passenger manifest, 14 May 1937, entering New York aboard R.M.S. Empress of Britain.[1199] The manifest indicates that the ship had departed New York, 9 January 1937; thus apparently this was an extended cruise. She is listed with the address of Sunset Ave., Chestnut Hill, [1199] For more about this ship, see Gordon Turner, Empress of Britain: Canadian Pacific's Greatest Ship (Stoddart, Toronto, 1992). The second ship of this name, she was launched by Edward, Prince of Wales (later King Edward VIII) and entered service in 1931 between England and Quebec, Canada, rather than on the heavily traveled Southampton-New York route. It is apparent that the luxury wintertime cruises later operated out of the more profitable port of New York. The destinations of the cruise on which the Morrises and Saloma Olds traveled have not been determined, although the ship, while large and luxurious, was also built small enough to utilize both the Panama and Suez Canals. She was 760 feet long, displacing more than 42,000 tons. She was requisitioned by the British government at the outset of World War II and used as a troop transport. On 26 Oct 1940, while along the west coast of Ireland, the Empress of Britain was bombed by a German plane, setting an uncontrollable fire; but she did not sink. The British destroyers HMS Echo and HMS Empress rescued the surviving crew and passenger and she was taken under tow. On 28 Oct the German submarine U-32 torpedoed the Empress of Britain; she sank in nine minutes.

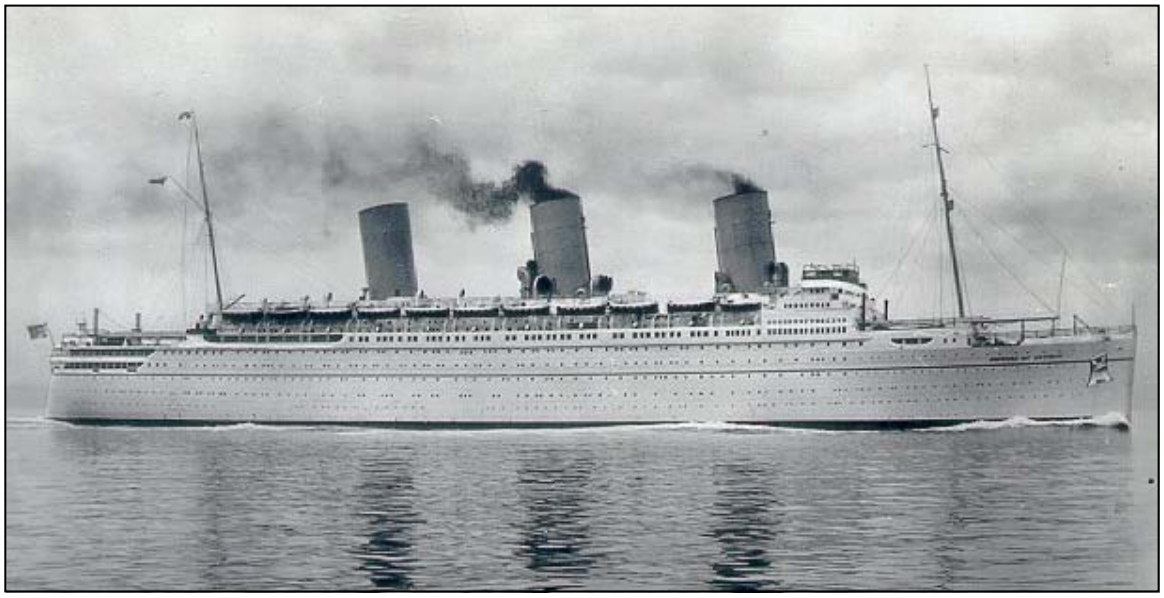
Saloma Olds was aboard the R.M.S. Empress of Britain during January–May 1937, when she seems to have been in the employ of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Wheeler Morris of Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, who were traveling aboard the ship.



Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Given that she is listed alone, at least as an Olds (having never married), one might wonder why she was aboard if she was not a woman of means. Searching the alphabetically arranged manifest for other possible family names and addresses, of note is the listing for Samuel Wheeler Morris (born 16 January 1874, Philadelphia) and Agnes A. Morris (born 1 January 1884, Philadelphia) whose address is given as "Sunset Own, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, Pa." Samuel W. Morris was a successful Philadelphia attorney with a fine home in the exclusive Chestnut Hill area of Philadelphia, whose garden was illustrated in Beautiful Gardens in America.[1200] It seems reasonable to infer that Saloma Olds was in the employ of the Morrises, probably as a domestic servant, and that she was taken on the Morris's trip to tend to their needs.

Rosalie Olds (ca. 1901–)

Occupations of Rosalie Olds (from U.S. censuses):
1920: Farmer
1930: Domestic servant

Residences of Rosalie Olds (from U.S. censuses):
1920: Olds' Farm, Marco Channel, Marco, Lee Co., Florida (with sisters, Orida and Saloma)
1930: Alden Road, Bryn Athyn, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania (resident employee)

At the time of the 1930 census, Rosalie Olds worked as a domestic in the household of Arthur Synnestvedt. (Her half-sister, Jocelyn, would later marry Arnold Smith, brother of Nadia who married Sig Synnestvedt, son of Arthur Synnestvedt.)

The Olds at Marco Island, Florida

One of the more interesting discoveries made during research on the current genealogy is the information that was uncovered that relates to the Olds family when they lived in the still-undeveloped area of Marco Island, Lee Co., Florida.[1201] The information came from a series of articles that appeared in the Marco Island Sun Times, following the serendipitous recovery of the diaries of Orida and Saloma Olds and other Olds family materials, copies of which now are in the Marco Island Historical Society. The diaries were made known to the Society by Martha Olds Adams, great-niece of the Olds girls. In addition to the diaries was a garden book written by Martha Adams' grandfather, Dr. Charles Olds; this was Flora's Clock (said to be published but thus far no bibliographical citation has been located for it).

The series of newspaper articles provide a wealth of information about the life of the Olds family on Marco Island before World War I. All of the articles are by Betsy Perdichizzi, once president of the Marco Island Historical Society:[1202]

[1201] Marco Island is on the west coast of Florida about 157 miles south of Tampa. Although formerly in Lee Co., today the island lies in Collier Co. The first non-Indian settlers were W. T. Collier and his family, who arrived in 1870. In 1896, his son, William "Captain Bill" Collier opened the 20-room Marco Hotel (today the Olde Marco Inn). By 1922, Barron G. Collier (not a relation) speculatively purchased most of the island, but the Depression scuttled its development. Not until 1962, when the population was still just 550, was the island purchased by the Deltona Development Corporation (for just $7 million), when the only access to the island was across a "narrow, wooden, hand-operated swinging bridge". Today, Marco Beach's coastline is a sentinel of tall condominiums, hotels, and marinas, serving a wintertime population of tens of thousands. "Cabbage from Trees and Other Musings" (8 April 2004) [Dr. Charles Louis Olds, excerpt from his garden book]

"Reflections on Royal Trees" (15 April 2004) [Dr. Charles Louis Olds, excerpt from his garden book]

Pieces of information about the Olds are included in the sketches above, taken as credited from the articles by Perdichizzi just listed.

Prior to the recovery of the Olds sisters' diaries and Charles Olds' garden book, very little was known of the Olds. David Graham Copeland, Collier County historian, wrote only, "Dr. Olds settled on what is now known as 'Old Olds Place' about two miles up the channel from Marco. He had two daughters (it was actually three) and after living on the place about 15 years, Dr. Olds and his family moved back north from whence they came originally. He was a practicing medical doctor and practiced on Marco Island during his residence there." [1203]

Orida Olds' diary begins in 1912, in which she takes note of people and world events. Saloma's diary covers just 1914-1915. A later newspaper article in the Perdichizzi series notes specifically that the Saloma Olds diary had been in the possession of a cousin of Martha Olds Adams, "Willard Smith of New Jersey"[1204] who had had three of the diaries "written by his Great Aunt Saloma Olds" and that he had "kept one of the diaries and gave the other two to family members." 345. Renée[9] Smith (Gilbert Haven[8], John Edward[7], John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 27 September 1918 in Bryn Athyn, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania, and died 26 September 1968. She married Robert T. Ross. He was born 29 January 1925, and died 10 June 1987.

Children of Renee Smith and Robert Ross are:

489 i. Douglas Arnold[10] Ross, born 25 June 1954.

\+ 490 ii. Jacqueline Ross, born 05 February 1956.

NOTES

Renée Smith (1918–1968) [No. 345] was a WAVE during World War II and was known for her blueprint work. In October 1945, she lived at 3014 Massachusetts Ave., S.E., Apt. 2, Washington, D.C. She is buried in the Bryn Athyn Cemetery, Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania; her grave marker spells her given name "Reneé".

346. Edmund Gilbert[9] Smith, Sr. (Gilbert Haven[8], John Edward[7], John[6], James[5], James[4], Joseph[3], James[2], James[1]) was born 18 June 1920 in Glenview, Cook Co., Illinois, and died 30 August 1972. He married (1) Virginia Dean Stone. She was born 23 January 1923. He married (2) Mary.

Children of Edmund Smith and Virginia Stone are:

	491	i.	Jacqueline Renee[10] Smith, born 24 November 1942 in Dover, Delaware; died 12 August 1955.
	492	ii.	Edmund Gilbert Smith, Jr., born 09 February 1946 in Evanston, Illinois.
+	493	iii.	David Terrence Smith, born 03 July 1947 in Evanston, Illinois.
+	494	iv.	Elyn Beveré Smith, born 08 January 1949 in Chicago, Illinois.
+	495	v.	Richard Darrell Smith [Peterson], born 31 July 1952 in Chicago, Illinois.
+	496	vi.	Peggy Ann Marker Smith [Peterson], born 06 August 1955 in Chicago, Illinois.
	497	vii.	Robert Arnold Smith [Peterson], born 11 September 1957 in Chicago, Illinois.
+	498	viii.	Virginia Todd Smith [Peterson], born 14 August 1959 in Chicago, Illinois.

Child of Edmund Smith and Mary is:

	499	i.	Michael Smith[10].

NOTES

346. Edmund Gilbert Smith, Sr. (1920–1972)

Edmund Smith's life surely is like that of any other of a young man of his age, focusing his young-adult life first in the calamity of World War II. His story from that time is one of adventure as an airman, and cruelty as a prisoner of war at the hands of the Japanese. His first marriage, to Virginia "Ginger" Stone, ended in divorce after eight children. Ginger subsequently married Peterson, who also adopted Edmund and Ginger's four youngest children.

Edmund Smith enlisted as an Aviation Cadet in the U.S. Army Air Corps on 31 December 1940 in Chicago, Illinois. At the time, he had had two years of college education at Academy of the New Church, in Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania. He was trained as a pilot in Muskogee, Oklahoma (where he met and later married "Ginger"), and at Randolph Army Airfield and Brooks Army Airfield, in Texas. He was commissioned a 2nd Lieutenant on 14 August 1941 and participated in maneuvers in North and South Carolina, then flew B-24s on anti-submarine patrols off the east coast of the U.S. For this work he received the Army Air Medal for Meritorious Achievement, as noted in several Chicago-area newspapers.

In September 1943 he was sent to North Africa and Europe, performing anti-submarine patrols in the Mediterranean. He returned to Dover, Delaware, in November 1943, where he flew B-25s on anti-submarine patrols off the east coast.

During Edmund Smith's time at the air base in Dover, Delaware, he flew unsanctioned detours to Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania, where his family lived, "buzzing" the community. In a presentation to the Bryn Athyn Civil and Social Club, Edmund's niece, Jackie, recollected the family's information about these events:

> On more than one occasion, he would give the crew a close aerial tour of the town. He showed them the cathedral by swooping down out of the sky and "buzzing" the cathedral tower. The mayor of BA, Phil Pendleton, would come out an[d] shake his fist into the air in disapproval. Aunt Nadine [Nadia Smith Synnestvedt] recalls helping the Red Cross Ladies (or as the young girls called them, the Cross Red Ladies) roll bandages in the cathedral undercroft during some of these fly overs. (After my talk, Joy McQueen told me that she was either playing field hockey on an Academy athletic field, or was watching a football game on an athletic field when Edmund was performing some of these stunts. He flew over the field at a VERY low altitude, zigzagging over the field as he went. Kent Hyatt, who lived next to the park in BA and across Quarry Rd. from the cathedral, recalled seeing Edmund fly up (not over) Quarry Rd., and down [with] the plane!) Aunt Nadine[1206] also remembers Edmund flying under the Ben Franklin Bridge[1207], which spans the Delaware River in Phila.[1208]

Later, in 1944, Edmund Smith was selected for pilot training for the new B-29 Superfortress.[1209] He was transferred to the newly established Smoky Hill Army Airbase at Salina, Kansas, in the north-central part

[1207] At the time of World War II, the Benjamin Franklin Bridge was still called by its original name, the "Delaware River Bridge". Locally, this bridge is always called the "Ben Franklin Bridge". When the bridge was opened in 1926 as the Delaware River Bridge, it was the longest suspension span in the world. It connects Philadelphia and Camden, New Jersey. In 1956 it was renamed in honor of Benjamin Franklin. During World War II, the Delaware River Bridge was the first bridge encountered by shipping traffic coming from the sea on the Delaware River. At the time, only two other bridges spanned the river south of Trenton, New Jersey. The small Tacony-Palmyra Bridge, a Bascule span drawbridge north of the Delaware River Bridge, was opened in 1929 to service the northeast section of Philadelphia. The larger but still modest Burlington-Bristol Bridge, still farther north, is a cantilever lift span that was opened in 1931 between Burlington, New Jersey, and Bristol, Pennsylvania. (The name "Delaware River Bridge" is not to be confused with today's Delaware Memorial Bridge, which is a high twin span over the Delaware River connecting New Jersey with New Castle, Delaware. The first span was opened in 1951, the second in 1968. These spans are presently the first bridges to be encountered by shipping traffic coming up the Delaware from Delaware Bay.)

[1208] Jacqueline Ross Kline, presentation to Bryn Athyn Civil and Social Club, 22 Aug 1997 (typescript notes with additional commentary).

[1209] The B-29 was placed in operation toward the end of World War II. In an aircraft-recognition manual published in 1944, the Boeing B-29 Super-Fortress still was classified; all that was said about it, without illustration, was "First of the true heavy bombers to be built in the United States, this still restricted plane is one of the world's largest bombers in production. Superficially, it resembles a greatly enlarged B-17." (L. C. Guthman, ed., Recognition Guide to Operational Warplanes, No. 7 (1944), p. 42). Statistics for the B-29: wingspan 141 ft, 3 in; 99 ft long; 27 ft 9 in high; weight 74,500 pounds empty, 120,000 pounds loaded, which could be overloaded to 135,000 pounds; powered by four Wright R-3350-23 Duplex Cyclone 18-cylinder air-cooled radial engines each containing two General Electric turbosuperchargers, 2,200 hp at takeoff, emergency rating 2,300 hp at 25,000 ft; maximum speed 357 mph at 30,000 ft, cruise speed 342 mph at 30,000 ft; economy cruise speed 220 mph at 25,000 ft; service ceiling 33,600 ft; optimum operational radius 1,600-1,800 miles, maximum range with 5000-lb bomb load 3,250 mi at 25,000 ft; empty ferrying range 5,600 mi or 6,000 mi with additional fuel; armament twelve 50-caliber machine guns in four remotely-controlled gun turrets, including two above and two beneath fuselage, one in tail, each armed with 1,000 rounds; bomb load 5,000 pounds delivered in 1,600-mi radius at high altitude, 12,000 pounds delivered in 1,600-mi radius at medium altitude, or 20,000 pounds on short-range, low-altitude missions. The interior compartments of the B-29 were pressurized and heated, and an oxygen system was available for high-altitude flight. Probably the most-recognized B-29 was the Enola Gay, which dropped an atomic bomb on Hiroshima; it is displayed by the Smithsonian Institution in the National Air and Space Museum Udvar-Hazy Center at Dulles International Airport.

of the state and near the geographical center of the United States. [1210] He formed up with a crew who called their plane the "Rover Boys Express"; included among them was Ray "Hap" Halloran[1211], their navigator who long after the war provided our most intimate understanding of what happened to the crew near the end of the war. Halloran had indicated that the Rover Boys name came from a dog that they had befriended in Salina. The flight patch that they designed and wore on their flight jackets had the aircraft name and a cartoon drawing of a dog riding a roadster. The "Rover Boys" also was a series of young-reader adventure novels published in the early part of the 1900s.[1212]

The only pictures known of the Rover Boys Express are a photo of ground crewmen working on the rudder of the aircraft, and a combat-film still photo taken at high altitude, looking down at the crippled aircraft during its fatal descent over Tokyo. A Japanese photograph has been identified as showing part of the wreckage of the plane. Only one crew photo is known, one taken in Lincoln, Nebraska, before they were sent to Saipan.[1213] If the aircraft had nose art, which was so popular and creative during the war, this information is not recorded.

Hap Halloran also recalled when he and his crewmates were stationed at Smoky Hill: [1214]

[1210] Smoky Hill Army Airfield was opened in September 1943 when the U.S. Army Air Force acquired 2,600 acres southwest of Salina, which was expanded to 7,000 acres. The 20th Bomber Command and the 58th bomber Wing were the first to move to the airfield; the 73rd Bomb Wing, of which Edmund Smith became a part, was added shortly afterward. In 1951, the base, deactivated since 1949, was reopened as the Strategic Air Command Base, stationing B-29 bombers. In 1957, the Smoky Hill Air Force Base was redesignated as Schilling Air Force Base and became a site for intercontinental ballistic missile silos; in 1961 the 550th Strategic Missile Squadron was based here with Atlas F ICBMs. The squadron was deactivated in 1965, and the base was closed in 1967. Today the site is the Smoky Hill Air National Guard Range as part of the Kansas Air National Guard. (City of Salina website, http://www.ci.salina.ks.us; "Smoky Hill Air National Guard (ANG) Range", GlobalSecurity.org website, http://globalsecurity.org/military/facility/smoky-hill.htm; Strategic-Air-Command.com website, http://www.strategic-air-command.com/bases/schilling_afb.htm; all accessed 2 Jun 2006). In 2005, the Salina airbase was the beginning and ending point of the first aerial solo, non-stop, unrefueled circumnavigation of the world by Steve Fossett flying the GlobalFlyer, 28 Feb-3 Mar (Matthew L. Wald, "In Spirit of Lindbergh, a Solo Pilot Circles the World Without Stops", The New York Times (4 Mar 2005), p. A14).

[1211] Raymond Halloran goes by the names Ray and "Hap". He was born 1922 in Cincinnati, Ohio, to Paul and Gertrude Halloran, the second of five boys. In the 1930 U.S. census, Paul Halloran was a railroad switchman. Hap had enlisted in the Army Air Force at Wright-Patterson airbase in Dayton, Ohio, shortly after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. He completed is training as a navigator in Hondo, Texas, and as a bombardier in Roswell, New Mexico. He joined the B-29 training program at the Smoky Hill Air Base in Salina, Kansas.

[1212] The Rover Boys of the adventure series were the brothers, Tom, Sam, and Dick Rover, whose adventures were written by author Arthur M. Winfield between 1900 and 1916, published by Grosset and Dunlap. A second series of "Rover Boys" adventures, featuring the sons of the original Rover Boys, Fred, Jack, and twins Andy and Randy, were published between 1917 and 1926. Although there were numerous boy- and girl-adventurer book series in the early 1900s (such as the Hardy Boys and Nancy Drew, not to mention Tom Swift and a later series about Tom Swift, Jr.), which lasted in reprintings for decades, the Rover Boys also went on to be parodied in 1942 in a Warner Bros. animated cartoon, as the "Dover Boys". All of this would likely have been fresh in the minds of the men of the Rover Boys Express, who probably also had read the books.

[1213] The photos are reproduced in Ray "Hap" Halloran, Hap's War (Hallmark Press, Menlo Park, California, no date): crew photo, p. 23; stricken aircraft over Tokyo, p. 34; wreckage, pp. 92-93. The photo of the wreckage, with Japanese soldiers clambering on it, first appeared in a Japanese newspaper on 28 Jan 1945 (Halloran website, http://www.haphalloran.com/gallery.asp?cat=22, accessed 29 Sep 2004); also on that webpage is a present-day view of the crash site.

[1214] Hap Halloran to Earle Spamer, 4 Nov 2006 [third message].

> While in training at Salina, Ks just before we went overseas we . . . were Crew of the Week—award—a B 17 bomber plane to use from Friday afternoon to midnite Sunday.—We did a Kansas City–Cincinnati–Chicago trip—and reverse. As "they" came back to Cincinnati to pick me up at Lunken Airport "they" overshot the runway and ended up adjacent [to] the Tennis Courts past the end of the runway. We made it back to Salina (Smoky Hill base) by 11:50 PM Sunday nite.

After their operational training in Salina, the crew was sent for a short time to Lincoln, Nebraska, and then to Herington, Kansas, where they received a new B-29 that had been flown there from the production line at the Boeing Aircraft plant in Wichita, Kansas. They received orders to fly to Mather Field, California, then to John Rogers Field in Honolulu, Hawaii, and on to Kwajalein Atoll and finally to Saipan, in the Northern Marianas Islands. They had left the United States on 16 December 1944 and arrived in Saipan on 21 Dec, having flown alone the entire distance.[1215]

In Saipan the "Rover Boys" Express joined the 20th Air Force. After just three successful missions to Japan, on their fourth mission on 27 January 1945 their luck ran out. The aircraft was shot down, and six of the men were killed; the remaining five, including Edmund, were taken prisoner. They were held captive first in a military prison where they were interrogated and tortured for two months, then they were sent to the nearby Omori Headquarters Camp (also called the Okuna Camp), in the outskirts of Tokyo. After the end of the war, the prisoners were repatriated to the States, and Edmund Smith was discharged from the service 25 August 1946. His decorations were the Purple Heart, Overseas Service Bar, Air Medal Distinguished Unit Badge, Atlantic Theater Ribbon with one bronze Battle Star, European Theater Ribbon with one bronze Battle Star, and the Asiatic Theater Ribbon with one bronze Battle Star. His experiences, as recalled chiefly by his navigator, are summarized below.

Subsequently, Peggy and Virginia changed their names back to Smith.

Edmund Smith and the Last Mission of the "Rover Boys Express"

The most compelling story of Edmund Smith's life must be his World War II experiences, when he was captain of the "Rover Boys Express", a B-29 bomber with the tail number V□27 (pronounced V-square-27), serial no. 42-24769.[1216] Stories of B-29 crewmen being shot down, months as prisoners of war in infamous Japanese prison camps, are amply retold in various Internet websites. But for a more detailed, first-person perspective of the last mission of the "Rover Boys Express" and the fate of the crew, one should read Hap's War, a book by Edmund Smith's navigator, Ray "Hap" Halloran.[1217] The book contains details about the airmen's experiences. Notably, Halloran also wrote about several "missions" of reconciliation back to Japan beginning in the 1980s. He revisited many of the sites that were central to the final mission of the Rover Boys Express, his imprisonment, and meeting in friendship many of the men whom he had fought against, including Isamu Kashiide, the pilot credited with shooting down V□27, and a kind prison guard whom the pilots called "Johnny". Other chapters of the book recount visits with other Japanese soldiers and civilians of World War II, and Omori camp survivors In more recent years, Halloran shared with both Jacqueline Ross Kline and Earle Spamer a trove of information about the events and the men's experiences, which are included in the summary below.

When the crew of the Rover Boys Express was sent to Saipan, they joined the 878th Squadron, 499th Bomb Group, 73rd Bomb Wing. The last mission of the Rover Boys Express was just their fourth in the Pacific Theater of Operations, 27 January 1945, a flight to attack Target 357, the elusive Nakajima aircraft manufacturing plant in Musashino, on the western edge of Tokyo. They had last traveled to Japan on 19 January, when the 73rd Bomb Wing destroyed the Kawasaki aircraft engine factory in Akashi, ending Japan's ability to manufacture aircraft engines. After a restless sleep and flight preparations, V□27 took off from Isley Field on Saipan at 7 a.m. of the 27th, with aircraft from four bomb groups. Normally, this would be a fourteen-hour mission. Arriving at Tokyo at 32,000 feet, the bomber groups met heavy anti-aircraft fire followed by about 200 attacks from Japanese fighter aircraft. A solid cloud-undercast at the primary target redirected the bombers to their alternate target in urban Tokyo northeast of the Imperial Palace; radar navigation apparently assisted in the attack.[1218]

[1216] During research on the present genealogical sketch, references to V □27 were found in some sources that seemed not to relate to the "Rover Boys Express". In fact, there was a second V□27, "Mary Ann", which is a subject in Chester Marshall, Sky Giants Over Japan (1984), a diary of another B-29 combat crew during World War II. Hap Halloran informed me that he did not know what was the significance of the square; it probably was created as an identifying character easily visible from a distance and unambiguously heard as on radio transmissions. Other aircraft groups used a triangle, circle, circle arrow, and diamond.

[1217] Chester Marshall, with Ray "Hap" Halloran, Hap's War: The Incredible Survival Story of a WWII Prisoner of War Slated for Execution (Global Press, Collierville, Tennessee, 1998); Ray "Hap" Halloran, with Chester Marshall, Hap's War: The Incredible Survival Story of a WWII Prisoner of War Slated for Execution (Hallmark Press, Menlo Park, California, no date), hereafter referred to as Hap's War. Hap Halloran informed me that there is no difference between the two editions of the book; one is a reprinting. (Chester Marshall was another B-29er who after the war became a newspaperman, publisher, and writer.) Additional remarks about Halloran's captivity and post-war activities also are found in Charles L. Phillips, Jr., Rain of Fire: B-29s Over Japan, 1945 (B-Nijuku Publishing, Moreno Valley, California, [1995]), Chapt. 14. Halloran also maintains a well-illustrated website with a large amount of information regarding his experiences, http://www.haphalloran.com. Included there also are his reports on several visits back to Japan.

Edmund Gilbert Smith (1920–1972) [No. 346]

Our B-29 bomber – V □ 27 – going down over Tokyo on January 27, 1945 – World War II. Our crew, Rover Boys Express, had parachuted into Tokyo earlier. This photo was taken by a B-29 in the squadron following us on the bomb run.

Lt. Edmund Smith (top left) was pilot of V□27, the B-29 named "Rover Boys Express". He is seen here in a studio portrait by Gordon Mathis, Liberty, Tennessee, ca. 1943. The crew flew several missions to Japan from Isley Field in Saipan (top right) before being shot down over Tokyo on 27 January 1945 (center). After months as a POW near Tokyo, Lieutenant (later Captain) Smith was treated aboard the U.S.S. Benevolence (right) in Tokyo Bay.

The 73rd Bombardment Wing's "Consolidated Mission Report" for Mission No. 22 of 27 January 1945 reported on the bombing missions for the day. The missions included the 499th Group of which the Rover Boys Express was a part of the second wave of bombers, following behind the 498th Group. The report noted: [1219]

> . . . The 499th Group personnel believe that the poorer formation of the second squadron resulted in more attacks than the first squadron received.
> The 499th Group approached the Honshu area east of course but turned to the briefed IP. They entered the combat zone 51 minutes behind the 497th. It is assumed that they were engaged by fresh or refueled E/A. Their formation was reported as relatively poor and received approximately 200 attacks.
> Attacks were definitely more aggressive and effective than ever before. It is important to note that naval fighter aircraft were encountered in greater numbers than before and that pilots of these aircraft were more skilled and effective than others previously observed.
> In the early contacts encountered by each group, coordinated attacks were frequent. This frequency fell off as saturation was reached.

V□27 flew in the second wave, flying in the so-called "coffin corner".[1220] They were attacked head-on by a Kawasaki Ki-45 Toryu.[1221] The aircraft was struck by 37-mm cannon shot, which fatally damaged the "greenhouse" nose of the aircraft and the avionics equipment there. V□27 fell back from the formation, slowly descending to the right, with its two outside engines afire and only one engine working. The heavy aircraft, still loaded with bombs, became easy prey for attacking fighters. The escape hatches were damaged or blocked; the only exit from the aircraft was from the crowded bomb bay. At more than 25,000 feet altitude, Halloran bailed out from the aircraft just before Edmund Smith. Fearing attacks by the fighters as he dangled from a parachute, Halloran remained in free fall until just a few thousand feet from the ground. The fear was unfounded; surviving crew members from B-29s were needed for [1220] The "coffin corner" in football is the corner of the sideline and the goal line; so in a formation of aircraft the position at the forward corners is probably what is referred to here. "Coffin corner" is also an aeronautics term. At higher altitude, air density is less, decreasing the amount of lift, which similarly lowers the speed at which an aircraft will aerodynamically stall. Maintaining a proper airspeed with relation to the environmental conditions that will cause an aircraft to stall is an important skill of an airman. The "coffin corner" is that set of aerodynamic conditions of flying altitude and speed that, when plotted as a graph, become close to the aerodynamic parameters that will stall the aircraft. Usually, the term refers to conditions in the critical aerodynamic envelope that is encountered as an aircraft approaches the speed of sound. It is possible that the term, "coffin corner", as used here referred to this set of flying conditions, but less likely so than the football analogy, which would seem to be a more likely usage appropriated by young, athletic men.

[1221] The Kawasaki K-45 Toryu ("Dragon Slayer"), codenamed "Nick" by Allied forces, was a two-seat, twin-engine fighter used by the Japanese Army. By 1944, the Nick had been deployed mostly as a defensive fighter in Japan, especially after the first devastating bombings of the Japanese industrial infrastructure once B-29 bombers had been introduced to combat operations in June 1944. It was largely ineffective against the high-altitude bombing missions, and often they succeeded by ramming Allied aircraft (which was a concern noted by Hap Halloran as he retells the attack on the Rover Boys Express). The heavy forward armament of the "Nick" was somewhat effective against the B-29s, as was the case with the Rover Boys. The "Nick" specifications are: wingspan, 49 ft 4 in; length 36 ft 1 in; height 12 ft 2 in; empty weight 8,820 lb, loaded weight 12,125 lb; powered by two Mitsubishi Ha-102 14-cylinder radial engines rated at 975 hp each; maximum speed 336 mph; range 1,200 mi; service ceiling 32,800 ft; armament two 37-mm cannon, four 20-mm, and five 7.92-mm guns.

interrogation. Edmund Smith jumped last from his stricken aircraft. He fell into the frigid water of Tokyo Bay, about 300 yards offshore, after which he fell unconscious. He was retrieved by the Japanese and sent to the Kempei Tai police and military prison, near the Imperial Palace. In all, nine B-29s were lost on the mission, which caused moderate to heavy damage to the target. Six of the eleven-man crew of the Rover Boys Express died.

In Hap's War, Hap Halloran included his recollection of the last moments aboard the aircraft with his pilot, Edmund Smith, as the last two men to jump from the aircraft: [1222]

> Just two of us were left up front now. Snuffy Smith[1223], aircraft commander and myself. Snuffy had seen much combat at a B-24 pilot in the Mediterranean area before being selected to train for B-29 Pacific theatre action. A super guy, pilot and leader. We were fortunate to have him as our aircraft commander-leader, friend. With a great sense of humor, he exuded confidence and we followed with assurance we would always be OK with Snuffy in the left seat in training or combat.
> Snuffy directed me to bail out. I hesitated. To look down and see the eastern section of Tokyo far below (estimate 27000 ft. at this time) is a deterrent to one's comfort zone. * * *
> I offered Snuffy a final opportunity to bail out ahead of me. He response was patterned after his typical response to varying conditions. He said, "Hap, get out—this baby is going to explode—besides, I'm captain and captains always go last.

According to a report prepared in 2000 by Japanese investigators[1224], the aircraft crashed at approximately 3 p.m. local time at the Igiri-hama beach in Ikisu Village on the shore of Tokyo Bay near the mouth of Horiwari River. It was reported by Mr. June Maejima, now aged 70, that he "at his Igiri home [he] heard report of machine guns and looked up in the sky where a black-smoking B-29 flying east and soon it turned left to west and crashed." On the ground, seven persons were killed, four were wounded, and seven houses were burned down. The water temperature that day was 9° C (according to records of the Kashima Nada Fishery Farming Center).[1225]

[1222] Hap's War, pp. 36-37.

[1223] As seems to be the case with numerous men by the name of Smith, Edmund's nickname in the service was "Snuffy", after a popular comic strip character of the day. Another member of the Smith family was likewise called "Snuffy" during the war–W. Edward Smith [No. 323]. The name comes from the stereotypical hillbilly comic strip character, "Snuffy Smith". Created in its current form by Billy DeBeck and Fred Lasswell in 1934, the comic strip by the time of the war was known as Barney Google & Snuffy Smith, syndicated by King Features. Halloran's copy includes his manuscript annotations relating to some remarks in the report. As might be expected more than 50 years after the fact, there are some conflicting data, but the accounts are nonetheless informational and useful.

In addition, a summary of bombing attacks as published in an unidentified Japanese book notes that the attack of 27 Jan 1945, in which V□27 was a part of the second wave, occurred between 2:03 p.m. and 3:10 p.m. local time; 345 bombs were dropped, killing or wounding 1,453 people on the ground and destroying 1,414 buildings (copy of pages received from Ray "Hap" Halloran, 2004).

In 2000, Hap Halloran visited Japan and the crash site. A report of the meeting includes a few additional comments about the crash (informant's name precedes the remarks):[1226]

> Mrs. Yoshi Nakazawa, then 16 at age, sister of Mr. Eiji Ishii. Sat next to Hap in the meeting room of the museum and explained the fall and crash scene of V Square 27 as seen by her together with her brother at Igiri-hama near the entrance of present Kashima Port. She said, "The B-29 hit the big stone (partly concrete) gate to Inari Jinja (Shrine) at Igiri-hama and the plane's gasoline tank exploded. The flaming plane mowed and burned down five houses. Two more houses were burned by spread fire. Five persons including an infant were killed instantly and two more persons were also burned to death." Her house was located about 50 meters south of the crash site behind pine trees.
> Mr. Eiji Ishii, broth of Mrs. Yoshi Nakazawa, who explained the location of the crash site at Igiri-hama. "The crash site was at the point where big chimneys stand near the seaside end of the plant at present. The B-29 came from southwest, falling. It once went out of the coast and came back to the shore at low altitude, breaking pine tress [sic], hitting the stone gate to the shrine."
> Mr. Choichi Miyazawa, Kashima City, former servicing worker at Hokota Army Airfield (north of Ikisu Village), was dispatched to inspect the wreckage and saw dead bodies of four crewmen scattered. "The bodies were mangled but he could count how many were killed."

The Miyazawa report (cited above) specifically notes about Edmund Smith:

> Smith landed near Horiwari River at Igiri-hama. M. Masao Miyagawa, now 70 in Fukashiba, Kamisu Machi, arrived there about 30 minutes after the crash. There was a crowd of people surrounding 2 Americans by a fire and committing outrages on them. A while after, the Americans were blindfolded and taken away by a truck. (KT's [Koji Takaki] Note: Smith himself says that he landed in the water near the mouth of a river and he lost senses after he swam to the shore but he received a first-aid by a soldier. He does not tell about violence, but one of the 2 Americans seems to have been Smith because the place is near the water.)
> [Robert] Grace landed in the seawater near Fukashiba-hama or Okunoya-hama. As seen by Masao Miyagawa, another American was with Smith by a fire. He seems to have been Grace. (KT's Note: Grace bailed out first or earlier, and Smith jumped last. It is somewhat strange that the two were in the same place, though the landing points depended also on the timing of pulling the ripcords as well as the altitudes of bailing out and winds.)

The report of Grace having possibly been with Smith is additionally interesting because Grace's remains were never recovered, and he was presumed to have died in Tokyo Bay.

The U.S. Army's own, now-declassified records of the crash of the B-29 include the following information:[1227]

No. 753, 12 Feb 1948.

> Affidavits have been received from Edmund O. [sic] Smith, who was formerly a member of the crew in question, and have been filed at the Criminal Registry Division in TO-152, which is the Tokyo Kempei Tai File. The following information has been secured from his affidavit:
> On 27 January 1945, I was piloting a B-29 of the 878th Bomb Squadron, 499th Group, 73rd Wing, with a crew consisting of the following: [not quoted in this document] Our target was fifty[1228] miles west of Tokyo. At about 2:30 p.m., approximately five minutes off our target, we were attacked by a Japanese twin-engine plane. Two and one half of our engines were knocked out when we arrived over our target. We were unable to release our bombs due to lack of control. The men in the nose of the ship jumped first, at intervals of probably a minute. I righted the plane momentarily with what control was left and Knoble [sic] crawled back through the ship to the ring gun section to tell the men back there to jump. Knoble stated later that Nicholson had already jumped by the time he (Knoble) got there.[1229] During the time it took Knoble to crawl back to the front of the ship, I had assumed there had been a sufficient interval for the remaining three men in the ring gun section . . . to have jumped. After Knoble had left the ship, I jumped. I have no idea what happened to the tail gunner, as we had no way of reaching him.[1230] I landed in the bay, three or four hundred feet from shore, and near an airport located on the tip of a peninsula. Knoble landed near the airport. As I was chuting down, I could see that the plane had crashed into about six houses along the shore, covering them with burning gas, which started quite a fire. * * * When I hit the water, I passed out from the shock of the cold water, but I was held up by my "Mae West". I must have been unconscious when picked up, but I vaguely remember being treated by medics[1231] at the airport near where I landed. I had been wounded in the neck and arm by flak. I think they must have put some sort of a dressing on my wounds. When I regained consciousness, I looked at my watch—it showed just 7:00 pm.

A "Report of Reinvestigation", exactly two years after the crash of the Rover Boys Express, included information on the remains of the dead crewmen. In addition, under a brief section of "Detailed information", it noted: [1232]

> A flaming plane was flying slowly about 4,000 meters behind a bunch of B-29's that were flying from the southwest (Tokyo direction), keeping an altitude of 5,000 meters. 6 (six) men in parachutes came down one after the other from the plane, rotating to the left, over the sky of the ocean.
> The plane crashed of itself and a big explosion took place. That caused 9 village houses to burn down.

On the home front, the fate of Edmund Smith was conveyed to his family, and thereafter they had no concrete news either of his whereabouts or what had become of him. The Adjutant General of the Army, Maj. Gen. J. A. Ulio, wrote to Edmund's wife, Virginia, on 3 February 1945 (surely a standard-format letter):

[1228] Hap Halloran's manuscript annotation: "15-20 miles".

[1229] Hap Halloran's manuscript annotation: "not correct".

[1230] Hap Halloran's manuscript annotations: "killed in plane" and "radio in plane inoperative".

> This letter is to confirm my recent telegram in which you were regretfully informed that your husband, First Lieutenant Edmund G. Smith, 0424690, has been reported missing in action in Pacific Ocean Area since 27 January 1945.
> I know that added distress is caused by failure to receive more information or details. Therefore, I wish to assure you that at any time additional information is received it will be transmitted to you without delay, and, if in the meantime no additional information is received, I will again communicate with you at the expiration of three months. Also, it is the policy of the Commanding General of the Army Air Forces upon receipt of the "Missing Air Crew Report" to convey to you any details that might be contained in that report.
> The term "missing in action" is used only to indicate that the whereabouts or status of an individual is not immediately known. It is not intended to convey the impression that the case is closed. I wish to emphasize that every effort is exerted continuously to clear up the status of our personnel. Under war conditions this is a difficult task as you must readily realize. Experience has shown that many persons reported missing in action are subsequently reported as prisoners of war, but as this information is furnished by countries with which we are at war, the War Department is helpless to expedite such reports.
> The personal effects of an individual missing overseas are held by his unit for a period of time and are then sent to the Effects Quartermaster, Kansas City, Missouri, for disposition as designated by the solider.
> Permit me to extend to you my heartfelt sympathy during this period of uncertainty.

The letter originally had been accompanied by one enclosure, a "Bulletin of Information". A follow-up letter of 22 February, from the Adjutant General's Office to Virginia Smith, stated simply:

> Reference is made to the previous communications from this office concerning the above named person who became missing in action on 27 January 1945 in the Pacific Ocean Area.
> A corrected report has been received that he became missing in action over Kitaura. No other information was given.
> You may be assured that upon receipt of any information regarding him you will be notified promptly.

The "Missing Air Crew Report" filed by the U.S. Army 28 January 1945 listed all eleven crewmen as Missing in Action. The informants who were known to have had "last knowledge of aircraft" were just three, who must have been airmen aboard other B-29s during the attack over Tokyo: Capt. David I. Liebman and [rank not legible] Charles Hibbard "last sighted" the aircraft, and Sgt. William R. Mullen witnessed the crash.[1233] A separate "Statement" by Sgt. Mullen of the 879th Bomb Squadron specified:

> Sgt. William R. Mullen, tail gunner in V-Square 41, flying No. 2 position in 3rd element last saw V-Squadr [sic] 27, AAF 42-24769 as it reached the ground. It was seen to crash near the lake on which he was attempting to land. Thirteen fighters were making passes from all angles up to the last minute. As it crashed Sgt Mullen saw a big puff of smoke. No flames were seen; no parachutes were observed at any time. This was about 0610Z and the location was near Kita Ura at approximately 35˚50′ N, 140˚30′ E. Observing aircraft was at 26,800 feet.

[1233] 1st Lt. Arthur W. Foughty, Adjutant, "Missing Air Crew Report", 28 Jan 1945 (National Archives and Records Administration, R.G. 331, GHQ/SCAP Records, Box 1795, Folder 57, "Investigation Division Reports (No. 753)", Jan 1945-Jan 1948).

The crew roster of the "Rover Boys Express", and the fates of the men, are as follows:[1234]

1st Lt. [later Capt.] Edmund G. "Snuffy" Smith	first pilot	POW
2nd Lt.[later 1st Lt.] James W. Edwards	second pilot	POW
2nd Lt. William "Willy" Franz	flight engineer	Killed in Action
2nd Lt. Robert Grace	bombardier	Killed in Action
2nd Lt. Ray F. "Hap" Halloran	navigator	POW
S/Sgt. Robert "Bobby" Holladay	right rear gunner	Killed in Action
S/Sgt. Guy H. Knoebel	radioman	POW
S/Sgt. Anthony Lukasiewicz	top gunner	Killed in Action
Sgt. Vito C. Barbieri	left rear gunner	Killed in Action
Sgt. Cecil T. Laird	tail gunner	Killed in Action
Sgt. John P. Nicholson	radarman	POW

Franz bailed out of the aircraft with the others who had survived the air attack, but was killed when his parachute failed; his remains were recovered two miles north of where the B-29 crashed. Grace also parachuted from the aircraft and is presumed to have fallen into Tokyo Bay; his remains were never recovered, although some Japanese recollections noted either a captive or remains washed ashore that might have been him. The remains of Lukasiewicz, Barbieri, and Holladay, were recovered at the crash site. All but the unrecovered remains of Lt. Grace were later reintered in home cemeteries in the United States.[1235]

Today, there is a commemorative plaque to the "Rover Boys Express" at the B-29 memorial in Great Bend, Kansas. It depicts a B-29 with a list of the crewmen.

Prisoner of War

From here on the story of the downed airmen is one of predictable, but unimaginable, retribution at the hands of their captors. B-29 crews were particularly despised; they were euphemistically classified as "Special Prisoners"; their captors revoked the status of prisoners of war and, convicting them of indiscriminate civilian bombing, threatened them continuously with death. The prisoners also remained precariously close to bombing targets and experienced attacks by future B-29 raids on Tokyo; and they were threatened with death for those raids, too. After more than two months in the Kempei Tai prison, Edmund Smith, Hap Halloran, and others joined captured flyers at the Omori POW camp outside Tokyo.[1236] Also there was the legendary Marine, Gregory "Pappy" Boyington, the flying ace who commanded the Black Sheep Squadron and who earlier had been a member of the "Flying Tigers" over [1236] The Omori camp was established by July 1943, built on an oval-shaped man-made island, about 75 × 65 m, just offshore in Tokyo Bay, which had been constructed for the purpose by prisoners of war from Shinagawa Camp. The camp was surrounded by a tall fence made of bamboo, topped with barbed wire. It was separated from the mainland by a narrow 200-m long wooden bridge that was accessed from the Tokyo–Yokohama road. Hundreds of Allied soldiers, sailors, and civilians from throughout the Pacific Theater were imprisoned here, including at least 386 Americans, and men from Great Britain, Canada, the Netherlands, Italy, Norway, Estonia, Australia, and New Zealand. Today, the locale includes a Peace Park and a racing-boat facility.

China. Boyington had been awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor, posthumously because at the time he had been presumed to be dead.

Jackie Kline noted in her 1997 presentation to the Bryn Athyn Civic and Social Club, which provided information obtained largely through Hap Halloran and others on the home front:[1237]

> Unable to bathe, the prisoners were filthy and smelly. They were very skinny, and looked like derelicts with their scraggly hair and long beards. They were almost unrecognizable to their own crewmen. As they were put into the back of a truck for the trip to Omori, several of the Rover Boys were overjoyed to see each other again. One of them asked, "What ever happened to good old Snuffy?" From the person next to [him] came the reply, "I'm Snuffy!". Edmund was dirty and thin, his own crew members did not recognize their pilot.
> Edmund's wife, Ginger, and his family were informed that Edmund was missing in action over Japan. They did not know whether he was alive or dead, and had no idea he was a POW. I have some copies of letters sent to Ginger from the War Dept. informing her of Edmund's MIA status.

> The 31 B-29ers were kept separate from the other prisoners and under 24 hr. guard. They were special prisoners and saved as "tokens". They could associate among themselves, but not with the other captives. * * * As special prisoners, the Japanese did not report their status to the International Red Cross, and no one in the US knew they were prisoners.
> Food was still rationed and became scarce in the camp and throughout Tokyo due to destruction by the bombing raids. They received rice three times a day, less if there had been a recent bombing raid, and the rice was infested with bugs. They were allowed to gather what edible grasses they could find in their area of the camp. They sucked on fish bones that were discarded by the guards, and drew cards to see who would get the fish eyes. They were a prize because they sweetened the rice.
> The POWs marched to and from the mainland for their daily work detail. They had to maintain order while marching; no stopping, dawdling or breaking rank. If caught doing any of these, they were beaten with the guard's rifle butt. One day, Edmund saw a dog with a bone in his mouth approaching [them]. As the dog passed him, Edmund reached down, grabbed the bone, and kept on marching, not a step out of line, and undetected by the guards. He stashed the bone in his pants, and sucked on it later back at the camp, savoring every taste. * * * Edmund also became "Keeper of the Tobacco." The POWs would gather any cigarette butts discarded on the ground by the guards, and give them to Edmund. He would then unroll the butt and dump the tobacco into a can. When there was enough tobacco for a cigarette, Edmund would be in charge of rolling one.
> The POWs all dreamed of what they would eat when they were returned to the US. Edmund planned to have a "Soggy Solitary Sundae", chocolate cake with icing, topped with ice cream, and drizzled with chocolate sauce. Aunt Nadine recalls that he did have this sometime after his liberation. * * *
> Edmund lists his duty in the camp as gardening. This was a very broad interpretation of the job. It included daily marches with other POWs to the area outside the camp to clear away rubble caused by the bombing runs. The POWs often cleaned Japanese houses. Some housewives communicated with them and gave them bits of food. This was very dangerous for both of them, they risked a beating by the guards if they were caught. The POWs also had to gather liquid > human waste from the bombed out toilets. This was carried back to the camp and used to water the seeds that were planted in furrows dug by the POWs. As the war progressed, gardening also included digging caves into the hillsides as a defense against an Allied invasion.

[1237] Jacqueline Ross Kline, presentation to Bryn Athyn Civil and Social Club, 22 Aug 1997 (typescript notes).

> The camp was strafed by US P-51 Mustangs and Navy fighters, and the area around the camp was bombed. The POWs were glad for the raids, yet afraid because the bombs landed so close to them. During these attacks, the prisoners were ordered to stay in their barracks while the guards took protection in bomb shelters and fox holes.
> There were many mean, inhumane guards n the camp, particularly one the prisoners named "Horseface", yet there was also a friendly, kind guard the prisoners called "Johnny". He told the POWs of the massive destruction of Japan by the bombing raids. He shared food and chocolate with them because they looked so thin. He and Hap exchanged names and promised to meet again in better times. * * *
> When the atomic bomb was dropped on Japan, the POWs knew the war would soon be over, yet they feared the guards will kill them now more than ever. The Japs burned the camp administration building to destroy camp records. After the surrender, conditions improved greatly. There was more food, and no more beatings. Some guards brought soup and chocolate to the prisoners, and the POWs received air drops of food, clothing and medicine from B-29s. Sometimes the package separated from the parachute and the package became a missile. The POWs painted words and messages on the roofs of the camp buildings so they could be identified. [In two such photos are] the following messages on various rooftops: "Omori Camp", "Pappy Boyington Here!", and "P.W."

In correspondence with Hap Halloran, which makes a bit more sense also having read Hap's War, Halloran provided a little bit of personal information regarding Edmund Smith: [1238]

> Bob Goldsworthy[1239] was fellow prisoner with Snuffy and 31 other B 29ers at Omori. Goldsworthy and I slept together—each shared our one dirty-smelly blanket to ward off the cold days and nites—we were always cold. Also we could share body heat. Goldworthy and Hap were on special assignment—traversing the segment of critically damaged (by bombings) Omori and cleaning out the toilets. We returned to garden area with our treasured fertilizer.[1240] We stay in regular contact with each other—sharing memories of both good and bad plus a few neutral recollections. He is a great guy. Retired as a Major General. We each had "space" assigned to us in the Omori barracks. Was about 5 feet long–2 feet wide and elevated about 18 inches above aisle. That was our domain. Goldsworthy's space was next to mine; Snuffy was on the other side of Goldsworthy.
> Since we were talking about Snuffy in our messages today I thought would be OK to forward s[o]me to you—a[ff]ords just a little feel of Snuffy.
> [And, from an email message to Hap Halloran from Goldsworthy, 4 November 2004]:
> Yeah, Hap, I remember Snuffy and the bone. And I remember when Snuffy found an old dried piece of fish on the street. I think he fished it out of a horse dropping. And he tried to soften it in his cup of soup and, I think, he ate the darned thing. Or tried to.

Halloran responded to Goldsworthy with the following:

[1238] Hap Halloran to Earle Spamer, 4 Nov 2004.

[1239] Robert Goldsworthy was with the 500th Bomb Group. He remained in the U.S. Air Force, retiring at the rank of Major General.

[1240] The prisoners were not allowed to eat the meager crops from their gardens.

I forgot about Snuffy finding that piece of fish in the road between our Camp (too nice a word to use when referring to our place of confinement) and our elegant (?) Japanese garden area; along the railroad tracks where we B 29ers (Special Prisoners) toiled to raise Daikon and cucumbers. Then we two (you and I) did a Professional job of cleaning out those toilets in our neighborhood. I vividly remember the ugly tape worms and more important I will always remember the Beans that elderly lady gave to us; and the soap and water and rag given to us by the other Lady. Memorable and wonderful acts on their part. They took a risk with those actions.

[A]nd now back to Snuffy and his treasure—that piece of dry fish skin he found and treasured in the road that morning. I am not sure whether he ate [it] or merely pretended to. Snuffy was a great guy under all conditions. His feat of taking that large bone from that dog was a magnificent feat; surpassing that pathetic flat piece of fish he found that day. Oh well, everything is relative. Happy for Snuffy and his bone and fish skin. That was over 59 years ago. We were all fortunate to have survived.

We transported lots of human refuse from the toilets to our garden area which we used as fertilizer to enhance our crops. [T]hen I recall the day our carrying pole broke as we strided magnificently thru the village. We were not loved by the locals related to that accident.[1241]

Eleven months after the crash of the Rover Boys Express, U.S. Army investigators inspected the remains of the aircraft. In addition to the following data, the report noted the disposition of bodily remains. The report was completed by Walter R. Ullrich, 1st Lt Inf, (TD), S-2.[1242]

The Journey Home

Edmund Smith's family received news on 30 August 1945 that he had been liberated. The first stop for him, however, was the U.S.S. Benevolence[1243], a hospital ship sent to Tokyo Bay after the Japanese surrender. Hap Halloran recorded that he (Hap) had been aboard the Benevolence on 1 September, the day before the surrender signings aboard the U.S.S. Missouri; on the 1st he was visited by Adm. William Halsey and his flag aide, Harold Stassen. There is no record whether Edmund Smith was yet aboard the Benevolence or whether he had met the admiral.

According to Edmund Smith's service record, he had been ordered to the United States on 29 August, arriving on 8 October. Photographs of a joyous Virginia Smith and her two children, including 10-month-old Edmund Jr. whom his father had never seen, appeared in a local newspaper.[1244] Probably the most joyous message of all was that received by Edmund Smith's mother, a telegram sent by the Army to her in Shaftsbury, Vermont, on 6 September 1945:[1245] [1243] U.S.S. Benevolence (AH-13) was built as the merchant ship S.S. Marine Lion at Chester, Pennsylvania, but was transferred to the U.S. Navy in July 1944 before she was completed. She was commissioned in May 1945 as a Haven class vessel and first served briefly in the central Pacific before joining the Allied occupation fleet in Japan. One of the nurses aboard the Benevolence was Lt. Estelle McDoniel, who in 1967 became the first woman Rear Admiral in the U.S. Navy (Estelle McDoniel, Registered Nurse to Rear Admiral: A First For Navy Women (Eakin Press, Austin, Texas, 2003). The Benevolence took part in atomic-bomb tests in the South Pacific and operated off of China before she was decommissioned in Sep 1947. She was reactivated at the outset of the Korean War, but on 25 Aug 1950, returning to San Francisco Bay after sea trials, she collided in fog with a cargo vessel, S.S. Mary Luckenbach, and sank about four miles west of the Golden Gate Bridge; 23 people died ("USS Benevolence (AH-13), 1945-1950", U.S. Navy website http://www.history.navy.mil/photos/sh-usn/usnsh-b/ah13.htm, accessed 28 Sep 2004).

Later in September, at last enroute home after his captivity in Japan, Edmund Smith wrote letters to his family from the U.S.A.T. Yarmouth.[1246] One surviving letter, to his sister, Renée, is as follows (spellings are as used by him):[1247]

Pacific Ocean
U.S.A.T. Yarmouth
September 25, 1945

Dear Sis—

Rather stinky of me to be writing a Birthday remembrance at this late a date and from the middle of this sloppy puddle of water, don't you think? Anyhow, I really did remember it way back in Japan and in the "Hip" Islands, too, but you know my writing habits. Fact is, yore lucky to be hearing from me atoll—(joke). And by the way, have you been engaged lately?—must be getting on in years, too—27 isn't it?—Oh, well, they say the longest ten years of a woman[']s life is between 27 and 30, anyway, so don't worry.

Nine days ago I finally heard from Ginger and what do ya think of that BOY!?[1248]—Watta man, watta man!

Altho I know not much, at present, of the family's future plans, or present predicaments—I am truly looking forward to a gala Yuletide this year—with all the "Kids" together again. If you and Gloria need any extra points to get out, I've got plenty of extra ones.—Get to working on Arny, Jimmy, & Gloria, and I'll be thee about the middle of next month to help you. And incidentally, If you are still in Washington at that time I'll probably see you—as I plan a trip thee anyway to clear up records, etc.—Then I'd like to hit Charter Day in B.A. [Bryn Athyn] if its late enough this year.

That's about all for now, Babe, I've sure missed all you kids—Be good

Love,
Snuffy

President Harry Truman personally signed undated memoranda of greeting to prisoners of war who were arriving back in the United States. Edmund Smith's letter was addressed to him at 73 Park Drive, Glenview, Illinois.

TO MEMBERS OF UNITED STATES ARMED FORCES BEING REPTRIATED IN OCTOBER 1945:

It gives me special pleasure to welcome you back to your native shores, and to express, on behalf of the people of the United States, the joy we feel at your deliverance from the hands of the enemy. It is a source of profound satisfaction that our efforts to accomplish your return have been successful.

You have fought valiantly in foreign lands and have suffered greatly. As your Commander in Chief, I take pride in your past achievements and express the thanks of a grateful Nation for your services in combat and your steadfastness while a prisoner of war.

May God grant each of you happiness and an early return to health.

[1246] The U.S. Army Transport ship Yarmouth was an ocean liner requisitioned for the war. After the war, the S.S. Yarmouth appears in advertisements for Eastern Steamship Lines offering cruises between New York and the Bahamas. During the war, the U.S.A.T. Yarmouth also served in the Atlantic.

[1247] The original letter is in the possession of Edmund Smith's niece, Jacqueline (Ross) Kline.

[1248] The birth of his son, Edmund Gilbert Smith, Jr.

Edmund Smith was sent to Vaughan General Hospital in Hines, Illinois, outside Chicago. While there, he was recommended for promotion to the rank of Captain. The "Statement or Report of Interview of Recovered Person", filed by Capt. Harold M. Hegyessy, Jr., stationed at Vaughan General Hospital, took note:

> It is recommended that subject officer be promoted to grade of Captain. It is presumed that had he not been lost to military control he would have been promoted to the grade of Captain because of his wide experience as first pilot in combat aircraft (i.e. B-25, B-24, B-29), his long service (2 overseas tours) and the fact that he was being considered for Flight Leader prior to his loss. Due to his obvious experience, leadership ability, and professional bearing, it is felt that this officer id [sic] deserving of this promotion.

The interview record also noted that Smith had been held in a military police headquarters in Tokyo for 42 days, a military police station for another 24 days, and in the Omori POW Camp for 4 months, 26 days. Under the section on "duties performed while in prisoner of war camp" was written simply, "Gardening".[1249]

By mid-January nothing was forthcoming from the Army regarding Edmund Smith's promotion. This prompted a memorandum 15 January 1946 from the Port Liaison Office at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, to the Commanding General in Louisville, Kentucky, requesting that "the matter of 1st Lt. Edmund G. Smith being promoted to captain be followed through and information furnished to him at his leave address" at 73 Park Drive, Glenview, Illinois.[1250]

According to a military record, in March 1946 Edmund Smith was assumed to have been stationed at the 3502 Base Unit, Chanute Field, Illinois.[1251]

Capt. Edmund Smith's service record indicates that he was relieved from active duty on 25 August 1946 and was on "terminal leave" from the Army from 31 Aug–30 September 1946. It also states that his civilian occupation was "Cabinet Maker".

The military being that it is, there was other paperwork for Smith be done while he was recuperating at Vaughan General Hospital. He had to file a report on the loss of his aircraft and six of his crewmen. In his interview with Capt. Hegyessy (cited above), Smith noted simply:

> On my fourth mission on 27 January 1945 while flying a B-29 over Tokyo, Japan, we were hit by a 21 m.m. shell fired by a twin engine Jap fighter. The shell exploded inside the nose, knocking out the controls, electrical and radio systems, and slightly wounding myself in army [sic] and neck. After crew bailed out, I jumped and landed in Tokyo Bay and lost consciousness after a few [1251] In the matter of a military inquiry regarding other prisoners of war still missing in action, "A letter was sent to First Lieutenant Edmund G. Smith, 0424690, 3502 Base Unit, Chanute Field, Illinois, on 1 March 1946, as he was reported to have seen two missing crew members in Tokyo jail. No reply has been received." minutes in the water. When I regained consciousness, some four to five hours later, I was in the custody of the Jap Army and was taken to M. P. Headquarters in Tokyo, for interrogation. I was liberated 29 August 1945.

In addition, Smith later filed a typewritten summary regarding the loss of crewmen under his command, in which he also specified that he had parachuted into Tokyo Bay "about three hundred yards offshore from the spot the plane crashed". His report began:[1252]

VAUGHAN GENERAL HOSPITAL

14 November 1945

SUBJECT : Casualty Information.

TO : Officer in Charge, Status Review and Determination Section, Casualty Branch, War Department, Washington 25, D. C.

While flying a B-29 type aircraft on a bombing mission over Tokyo, Japan, on 27 January 1945, we were hit in the nose by a 20 mm shell fired from a Jap fighter in a head-on attack. This action knocked out our controls, electric system, radio system, crippled three engines, and also wounding myself, the airplane commander. The plane crashed in a group of approximately five or six houses located on the shoreline of the upper east side of Tokyo bay and burst into flames.

There began the rest of Edmund Smith's life, scored by bureaucratic recollections of the last moments he knew six companions in arms. His own life ended too soon as well. Yet, in a life so profoundly affected by events about which we can only, vaguely, imagine perhaps no better epitaph exists for Edmund Smith than one that was said by Stephen Gladish at a memorial service after Edmund's death. Gladish's comments were suitably deep, reaching into the writings of faith, and with the usual accolades about a loving man, "a friend of mankind". Gladish selected an epitaph from Heaven and Hell[1253], Edmund's favorite book, but in closing he unwittingly turned out a remark with which anyone who reads it can identify: "He was eminently more than just a favorite uncle[,] he was everybody's favorite uncle . . . ."[1254]

Gloria Jane Smith (1923–) [No. 347] served as a WAVE during World War II.

According to an address book of Earle C. Smith (predating 1964), John E. Barry (1924–1990), husband of Gloria Jane Smith, resided at 1028 Gladish Lane, Glenview, Illinois.

The "Smith Genealogy" notes about John Edward Barry and his family: [1255] Also see Additions & Corrections

> John Edward Barry's great-grandfather was a riverboat captain and worked for Robert Pitcairn, the Barrys then were not of the New Church. Gloria had written that her husband's family were descendants of Commodore Barry, the father of the American Navy. There was family speculation that on the maternal side, the Clarks, they are descended from Abraham Clark who signed the Declaration of Independence and of George Rogers Clark. Later she wrote that she had inquired further of Bible records and [sic] an elderly aunt and found there is no reliable record of this Barry family nor as to the Clark line. While it all may be true, she thought as it cannot be substantiated it is better to let it be reported as not proven at this time.

The claim is, in fact, an unlikely one. Commodore Barry[1256] had no children by either of two wives, although with his second wife he raised Michael and Patrick Hayes, the orphaned nephews of his sister, Sarah, who were from his (and their) native Ireland. The Clark connection has not been examined.

348. Nadia (Smith) Synnestvedt (1925–)

She is known as "Nadine".

Siegfried Tafel Synnestvedt (Sig Synnestvedt) (1924–1977)
(husband of Nadia Smith)

Siegfried Tafel Synnestvedt was known as "Sig"; he used this name even in his publications. He received his Ph.D. from University of Pennsylvania, 1959; his dissertation was "Bread, Beauty, and Brotherhood: The Ethical Consciousness of Edwin Markham." [1257] He was a professor of sociology at Michigan State University and, later, at the State University of New York at Brockport. He was Director of the Swedenborg Foundation. At the time of his death he resided in Brockport, Monroe Co., New York.

The Department of History at the State University of New York at Brockport offers an annual Sig Synnestvedt Memorial Lecture, delivered by a visiting speaker on the subjects of civil rights and race relations. Synnestvedt had been chair of the department, and worked to establish the Department of African and African-American Studies at the university. A few of his publications include:

Henry Teune and Sig Synnestvedt, Measuring International Alignments (Foreign Policy Research Institute, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, 1965)

Sig Synnestvedt, The White Response to Black Emancipation: Second-Class Citizenship in the United States Since Reconstruction (Macmillan and Co., New York, 1972)

Sig Synnestvedt (ed.), "The Earth Shook and Quivered", Civil War Times Illustrated, vol. 11 (Dec 1972), pp. 30-37. [Diary of Lt. Joseph J. Scroggs, a commissioned officer in the Union Army in charge of black soldiers.]

[1257] Coincidentally, Edward S. Smith included the following note about Edwin Markham in the "Smith Genealogy", p. 102:

> "One Sunday we had an honored and distinguished guest in our home, 820 S. St. Bernard Street, a quiet and very likeable little Englishman, Sir Edwin Markham, author of "The Man with the Hoe" and other literary works. We enjoyed this charming and genial guest. He had attended some event for the Church and we were delighted when he consented to come to our home for dinner and the evening."

Edwin Markham (1852-1940), born Charles Edwin Anson Markham, was neither a knight nor even English, having been born in Oregon City, Oregon Territory. In 1872 he taught in California, and during the 1880s and 1890s established himself as a widely published and insightful poet. As a champion of the American working class, he was inspired by an 1862 illustration, L'homme à houe, by the French artist Jean-François Millet, which portrays a moving harvest scene of a farmer's fatigue and his broken spirit. Markham's poem, "The Man with the Hoe", was first published 15 Jan 1899 in the San Francisco Examiner. He referred to the man with the hoe as "a brother to the ox". He asked, pointedly, "Whose was the hand that slanted this brow? / Whose breath blew out the light within this brain?" The poem was reprinted and translated in thousands of newspapers, to instant acclaim and criticism. It was taken up in conversational circles as well as in pulpits and classrooms everywhere. Since then, it has become the subject of scholarly criticism, included in anthologies of poetry and American writing, and it has been the foundation for essays and poems inspired by The Man with the Hoe. Markham's first book of poems was published in 1899, The Man with the Hoe and Other Poems (Doubleday and McClure Co., New York), the first of several collections he published during his lifetime.

An address book of Earle C. Smith (predating 1964) lists the address of Sig and Nadine Synnestvedt at 3355 Baldwin Rd., Huntingdon Valley, Pennsylvania.

507. Suzanne Seville Synnestvedt (1953–)

In 2006, she resided in Alexandria, Virginia.

508. Jeannette Synnestvedt (1957–1993)

She graduated from the State University of New York at Brockport with a degree in health science, intending to be a nurse. She entered law school at Temple University, and received her law degree in 1986. After working as a trial assistant on health care law with the Philadelphia firm of Goldman & Marshall, she obtained a position as an Assistant District Attorney with the District Attorney's Office in Philadelphia, where she prosecuted physical and sexual abuse cases. She was particularly concerned for victims who had mental or physical handicaps. She was diagnosed with breast cancer at the age of 29, and continued to work even when illness worsened. District Attorney Lynn Abraham called her a "fighter". Abraham recalled, "No matter how sick she was, if she could get out of bed and walk, she would come to work and try cases."[1258]

\+ 2 i. Otto[2] Synnestvedt, born March 1832 in Norway, and died 1816 in Chicago, Illinois.

A brief biographical note about Peder Synnestvedt [No. 1] is as follows:[1259]

[1258] "J. Synnestvedt, 35, Assistant City D.A.", The Philadelphia Inquirer, 19 Aug 1993.

[1259] "Peder Finne Synnestvedt", from an unidentified source; received from James von W. Price, Nov 2007.

> "Peder Finne was the only son of the first Otto Christian Synnestvedt, and he lived most of his life at the fine estate at LONNINGEN [in Norway] . . . . There is little evidence he ever applied himself to any form of useful work, preferring the life of a 'country gentleman', indicating that manual labor was 'unbecoming'. He may have been encouraged in this attitude by his marriage to Pauline Walter, daughter of the Kriegskommisaer of Bergen. In any event, he sold off parts of the LONNINGEN estate whenever he needed more money, and ultimately a wealthy tea merchant bought it from him and gave it to the city of Bergen for use as a children's home, which purpose it still serves to the present time."

Generation No. 2

2. Otto[2] Synnestvedt (Peder[1])was born March 1832 in Norway, and died 1916 in Chicago, Illinois. He married Julie Sophie Borchsenius. She was born 15 May 1847 in Denmark, daughter of Johannes Borchsenius and Ottine Rasmussen.

Children of Otto Synnestvedt and Julia are:

+	3	i.	Homer[3] Synnestvedt, born 30 January 1867 in Chicago, Illinois.
+	4	ii.	John B. Synnestvedt, born about 1868 in Illinois.
+	5	iii.	Paul Synnestvedt, born March 1870 in Illinois.
	6	iv.	Amy Synnestvedt, born about 1872 in Nebraska. She married Louis Reifstahl; born October 1870.
	7	v.	Julia Synnestvedt, born about 1875 in Nebraska.
	8	vi.	Hilda Synnestvedt, born October 1877 in Nebraska.

NOTES

2. Otto Synnestvedt (1832–1916)

The 1900 U.S. census indicates that Otto Synnestvedt immigrated to the U.S. in 1852 and that at the time of the census he was a naturalized citizen.

A U.S. passport application is on file for an Otto Synnestvedt, signed in Chicago, Illinois, 7 August 1863. The cover letter with the application requested that the passport be delivered to Synnestvedt in care of Holman(?) and Balcher, 72 Beaver St., New York City.[1260]

Occupations of Otto Synnestvedt (from U.S. censuses and other sources):

1870 census: Railroad agent
1880 census: Real estate agent
1895 (newspaper account): Land collector for Great Northern Railway
1900 census: "land agent"

The following interesting, but succinct, item appeared in an 1895 local newspaper:[1261]

> "Otto Synnestvedt, land collector for the Great Northern, was in the city on business yesterday. He states that collections are none too good."

At the time of the 1900 census Otto Synnestevedt was a widower residing with his daughter and son-in-law, Louis and Amy Riefstahl.

Julie Sophie (Borchsenius) Synnestvedt (1847–)
(wife of Otto Synnestvedt)

Regarding her ancestral lineage, an extensive genealogy is recorded on a Norwegian website, which extends that lineage back to Johannes Borchsenius (1732–1781).[1262] Her parents and siblings are noted as follows:

Johannes Adolph Christian[1] Borchsenius was born 13 March 1801 in Vaerum, Denmark, and died 24 August 1854 in Chicago, Illinois. He married Ottine Caroline Kirstine Rasmussen. She was born 04 February 1808 in Denmark, and died 13 February 1855 in Chicago, Illinois.

Children of Johannes Borchsenius and Ottine Rasmussen are:

i. Helene Sophie[2] Borchsenius, born 25 July 1831; died 1885 in Chicago, Illinois.
ii. Johannes Christian Borchsenius, born 02 March 1833 in Slagelse, Denmark; died 24 November 1876 in Kotka, Finland.
iii. Otto Poul Fredrik Borchsenius, born 07 October 1834; died 01 October 1855 in Chicago, Illinois.
iv. Charlow Johannes Borchsenius, born 13 April 1836 in Rudkjøping, Sweden; died 08 February 1890 in Norway, La Salle Co., Illinois.
v. Pauline Fredrikke Borchsenius, born 03 December 1837 in Rudkjøping, Sweden; died 11 June 1912 in Gøteborg, Sweden.
vi. Clausine Christiane Riber Borchsenius, born 24 August 1839 in Rudkjøping, Sweden; died 1924 in U.S.A.
vii. Anna Helene Storm Borchsenius, born 02 September 1842; died November 1854 in Chicago, Illinois.
viii. Johannes Anton Storm Borchsenius, born 25 May 1843; died September 1854 in Chicago, Illinois.
ix. Julie Sophie Borchsenius, born 15 May 1847 in Denmark; died 1899 in Chicago, Illinois. She married Otto Synnestvedt; born March 1832 in Norway; died 1916 in Chicago, Illinois.
x. Caroline Augusta Borchsenius, born 25 April 1851 in Rudkjøping, Sweden; died 27 June 1907 in Chicago, Illinois.

Louis Reifstahl (1870–)
(husband of Amy Synnestvedt [No. 6])

At the time of the 1900 U.S. census he was a bookkeeper. His household included, in addition to his wife, his father-in-law, Otto Synnestvedt, his sister-in-law, Hilda Synnestvedt, and Louis's younger brothers, Siegfried and Harald; the two brothers, however, are miswritten as Synnestvedt rather than Reifstahl.

8. Hilda Synnestvedt (1877–)

At the time of the 1900 U.S. census she resided with her father and was employed as a corset maker.

Generation No. 3

3. Homer[3] Synnestvedt (Otto[2], Peder[1]) was born 30 January 1867 in Chicago, Illinois. He married Theodora about 1891. She was born December 1870 in Canada, and died between January 1920–August 1926.

Children of Homer Synnestvedt and Theodora are:

9 i. Aurora[4] Synnestvedt, born March 1892 in Pennsylvania.
\+ 10 ii. Frederick Synnestvedt, born November 1893 in Pennsylvania.

11 iii. Oliver Doron Synnestvedt, born 15 July 1895 in Huntingdon Valley, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania.
12 iv. Evangeline Synnestvedt, born February 1897 in Pennsylvania.
13 v. Lucille Synnestvedt, born January 1899 in Pennsylvania.
14 vi. Robert E. Synnestvedt, born about 1901 in Pennsylvania.
15 vii. John H. Synnestvedt, born about 1903 in Pennsylvania.
16 viii. Homer Synnestvedt, Jr., born about 1905 in Pennsylvania.
17 ix. Norman Synnestvedt, born about 1907 in Pennsylvania.
18 x. Sylvia Synnestvedt, born about 1909 in Pennsylvania.

NOTES

3. Homer Synnestvedt (1867–)

Occupations of Rev. Homer Synnestvedt (from U.S. censuses):
1900: Preacher
1910: Minister and teacher
1920, 1930: Minister

Residences of Rev. Homer Synnestvedt (from U.S. censuses and other sources):
1900 census: Moreland Twp., Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania
1910 census: Florence Ave., Egg Harbor, Atlantic Co., New Jersey
1920 census: 337 S. Pacific Ave., Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania
1926: 723 Ivy St., Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania
1930 census: Alnwick Rd., Bryn Athyn, Montgomery Co., Pennsylvania (lodging in household of Charles S. Smith)

In the 1910 census, he is indexed as “Hosert Syanestredt” or a suggested variant “Homer Sganestredt”, although on the census sheet his name is spelled correctly.

In 1926, Homer Synnestvedt visited the Synnestvedt homeland in Norway, where he also traveled to Sygnestveit, the mountainside farm on Osa Fjord, near Ulvik, which then was accessible only by water. [1263]

Theodora Synnestvedt (1870–1920/26)
(wife of Homer Synnestvedt, Sr.)

She emigrated to the U.S. in 1888-1889. Her father and mother were born in Germany and Canada, respectively.

11. Oliver Doron Synnestvedt (1895–)

In the 1910 census, he is listed as Doron O. Synnestvedt.

Oliver Doron Synnestvedt’s U.S. passport application, filed 18 January 1918 in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, gave his residence as Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and his occupation as a carpenter, employed in connection with the U.S. Army; the passport application was to travel to France. An affixed letter from Local Board Division Number Six [draft board] indicates that Synnestvedt registered from 5523 Ellsworth Ave.,

[1263] Family scrapbook photo and information; copy received from James von W. Price, Nov 2007. The scrapbook also includes information regarding the origin of the name Synnestvedt and the Sygnestveit farmstead (without citation of source):

> “Old Norsk spelling SYGNESTVEIT, derived from a Fjord named Sygnis, meaning to suck as the tide sucks, in going in and out, in such narrow places. There is a Farmstead called Sygnestveit, which earliest records show to have been deeded in 1312 to two brothers of this name. This place is at the head of Osa Fjord, near the tip of Hardanger Fjord, near town of Ulvik."

Pittsburgh, and states that he was "physically disqualified for Military Service in the Draft Army."[1264] The passport application specified, "Has practically no use of the left eye. Lens removed".

Another passport application, 23 October 1922, filed in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, indicated that his permanent residence was in Bryn Athyn, Pennsylvania; his occupation was as a contractor. He explained that his earlier passport had been surrendered upon his return to the U.S. He stated the need for the new passport for personal business in Belgium and France. He also had indicated that he had resided outside of the U.S. in Vancouver, Canada (3 August 1914–15 June 1916) and "AE&F about 18 mon." (3 August 1916–1 August 1917) [sic]; presumably the latter absence from the U.S. was his Army work in France. On this application also was noted, regarding his disability, "irregular pupil—left eye".[1265]

4. John B.[3] Synnestvedt (Otto[2], Peder[1]) was born about 1868 in Illinois. He married Emily Hopf about 1892, daughter of George Hopf and undetermined wife. She was born about 1866 in Illinois.

Children of John Synnestvedt and Emily Hopf are:

	19	i.	Nellie[4] Synnestvedt, born about 1894 in Illinois.
	20	ii.	Ruth Synnestvedt, born about 1896 in Illinois.
	21	iii.	J. Ralph Synnestvedt, born about 1897 in Illinois.
	22	iv.	Alan Synnestvedt, born about 1899 in Illinois.
+	23	v.	Hilda Synnestvedt [Jean Synnestvedt], born 25 December 1902 in Illinois; died March 1981.
	24	vi.	Donald O. Synnestvedt, born about 1908 in Illinois.

In 1897, Paul Synnestvedt co-founded the Synnestvedt & Lechner law firm in Philadelphia, who were patent attorneys and since then has specialized in intellectual-property law.[1271] The firm's origins is summarized in their website, part of which traces the following significantly successful events:[1272]

> "The firm traces its roots to 1897, the year Paul Synnestvedt, a Norwegian inventor, mechanical engineer, educator, and lawyer, established an intellectual property law practice in Chicago. Shortly thereafter, Mr. Synnestvedt relocated to Pittsburgh to be closer to George Westinghouse, who sought his assistance in protecting fundamental inventions in the field of railway air-braking systems. In addition to securing patent protection on the railroad air-brake, Paul Synnestvedt represented Mr. Westinghouse in proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission, resulting in the universal adoption of the Westinghouse braking system by the railroad industry, and the beginnings of what was to become one of the Westinghouse Companies.
> "Early in the 20th century, Mr. Synnestvedt formed a relationship with Harvey Lechner, an established patent attorney with extensive experience in litigation. The firm opened a headquarters office in Philadelphia around 1915, and maintained branch offices in Chicago, New York City, and Pittsburgh.
